For the Crisis.

WOULD YE CHIDE!

Would ye chide the wave-tossed mariner
Far out on the stormy deep,
Should he turn to his sunny childhood's home
With a yearning heart, and weep?

Would ye chide the exile lone and sad,
Long years from his native land,
Should he pine for the smile of the loved ones there
And the clasp of the greeting hand?

Would ye chide the warrior, wearying
Of the battle's din and strife,
Should he eager grasp for the victor's palm
And strive for the Conqueror's life?

Would ye chide the watcher waiting long
With strained and aching eyes,
Should he hail the first faint eastern flush,
And welcome the morning's rise?

Then may ye bid our hearts forget
Our promised Eden home;
Then may ye chide the christian's prayer—
"Jesus, Messiah, come!"

The Aspect.

A visit among the churches whose chief distinguishing features arise from convictions concerning the coming of Christ, the literal kingdom of God, and immortality only in the Son of God, shows, to an impartial observer, a phase in our existence which has not previously been apparent.

Whether this will in the end promote our strength and secure a still stronger position for the truth, as entertained by us, and from which our distinct identity as a people arises, must depend upon time; (for in the nature of the case the complete result could not follow in a moment) and, to a great extent, upon the judicious action of the brethren, preachers and others who have influence, in gathering to the cause of Christ a harvest of faithful men.

Our doctrines, to begin with, are not theological abstractions; hence, we have not been compelled to desist from a cold theological or philosophical course of theorizing; a freezing logical or metaphysical speculation upon impracticable and unpractised positions, but in living, palpable truths; tangible realities, (not abstract essences,) whose genius attends them with energy to establish given results, in the ages and in the present; a living divinity, a power of God—because they are the gospel. We had no reason to revolutionize the long-sustained position. A new fort was not needed. Our redoubts were thrown up. Our battery was well arranged. We had only to bring the guns to bear upon the enemy, and with the true elevation, with what weight of metal, or what calibre, I will not say, but with the entire ammunition of truth we have reached many hearts; with no change, save a change in the manner of application.—If any have dealt in abstract doctrines, without practical or experimental power, they may have needed a reformation—I suppose they have reformed—the case was different with others. The blessed result in the conversion of persons to God, as well as to an admission of the truths which we hold. And people have been led to make a public confession of Jesus Christ.

Now, will the revival weaken or strengthen the people who hold the doctrines which we fully cherish? Some suppose that where many are converted among us we shall become much stronger. This is not a certain result, for there is in the first place no assurance that they will stay with us. Secondly, no certain evidence that they will receive the doctrines fully which we hold (some may believe them before they are converted).

Again. Others suppose that we have the certain evidence of weakness in the smallness of our numbers, and of additions, in given instances. I do not think so. The material which is added has something to do with strength and success as well as the amount of names. And, above all, believing that we as a people, are found in the world by special recognition of Providence, and prophetic appointment. I should not advise to undue anxiety about numbers, or, improper and over-wrought efforts for the promotion of our outward and worldly interest. The whole action is intended for the good of men, everywhere. As yet, I believe our own identity is necessary to this result, and with others, subject myself to constant loss and important worldly disparagement of various kinds, that I may contribute to this position of the believers in the Advent doctrine, and its healthy condition. Judging from the action of some in this time of general revival, one would think that the time had come to disband; but still charity would dictate that they do not really mean what their efforts would seem to import. They are a little intensified,—their zeal is a little heated up. I see nothing as yet to indicate any radical error in our system of faith. I see much to rejoice in among the churches of the Lord, and among ourselves as a people; and much that is to be regretted, or of no consequence to the world's salvation.

We have not suddenly become wrong in regard to our great Bible truths and expectation; nor have the other classes of religionists suddenly become right on the same points; but all have suddenly gone to work with a direct, telling, personal effort to awaken men, and have succeeded. But some of the religious denominations would have remained in their coldness till the day of their doom, had it not been for men of the world, beginning and actually crowding them into action. Prayer-meetings, independent of the dignitaries of the church, began the move. Now had the work gone on as it began, hundreds would have been looking for the Lord, yea, thousands; and still I find all the machinery of the great nominal church in operation, sooner or later. Well, if men are really christians, I am required to be content.

The recent outpouring already has an effect to increase liberality of views and feelings. So far so good! And all good; good, so far as a work of grace has been done, in our church or any other church,—or out of any church. Have we an organization or even system of discipline which is sufficient to promise any material up-building or enlargement? We want no creed but the gospel! But do we ask converts to subscribe their name to that, with a promise to walk in Christian fellowship, receiving the watch-care of the church?

So far as my observation extends there is very considerable improvement—a real advance and solid acquirement by our people—but I am sure we shall never, with views of the plan of God, so adverse to public sentiment, ride on a wave of popular influence—not even if a revival, as the greatest in half a century, or the greatest ever experienced in America, becomes popular.

I conclude that we are still waiting for the kingdom—"looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." I do not as yet see what else we are to expect. Let as many be converted as may be! Amen. Praise God! Those who do his will shall be saved.

Roxbury, Mass., Apr. 13th.

P. S.—When I returned home from the Tour, I found the same order of things, as a general rule, at New Britain, which exists elsewhere—Union prayer meetings every day. Many converts at the Methodists. Some of our children engaged in the cause there;—and the family still enduring the privations of the gospel. Adventists holding on.

THE CRUCIFIXION.

Sunlight upon Judea's hills!
And on the waves of Galilee—
On Jordan's stream, and on the rills
That feed the dead and sleeping sea!
Most freshly from the green wood springs
The light breeze on its scented wings;
And gaily quiver in the sun
The cedar tops of Lebanon!

A few more hours—a change hath come!
The sky is dark without a cloud!
The shouts of wrath and joy are dumb,
And proud knees unto earth are bowed.
A change is on the hill of Death,
The helmed watchers pant for breath
And turn, with wild and maniac eyes,
From the dark scene of sacrifice!

That Sacrifice!—the death of Him—
The High and ever Holy One!
Well may the conscious Heaven grow dim,
And blacken the beholden sun!
The wonted light hath fled away,
Night settles on the middle day,
And earthquake from his caverned bed
Is waking with a thrill of dread!

The dead are waking underneath!
Their prison door is rent away!
And, ghastly with the seal of death
They wander in the eye of day!
The temple of the Cherubim,
The House of God is cold and dim;
A curse is on its trembling walls,
Its mighty veil asunder falls!

Well may the cavern-depths of earth
Be shaken, and her mountains nod;
Well may the sheeted dead come forth
To gaze upon a suffering God!
Well may the temple-shrine grow dim,
And shadows veil the Cherubim,
When He, the chosen one of Heaven,
A sacrifice for guilt is given!

And shall the sinful heart, alone,
Behold unmoved the atoning hour
When Nature trembles on her throne
And Death resigns his iron power?
Oh, shall the heart—whose sinfulness
Gave keenness to his sore distress,
And added to his tears of blood—
Refuse its trembling gratitude!

For the Crisis.

Is the Antichrist yet to Come?

Some among us suppose that Antichrist is yet to come. This belief is founded on 1 John 2: 18. "Young children, it is the last hour. And as ye have heard that the Antichrist cometh, so now there are many Antichrists; whence we know that it is the last hour." (Macknight.) It is supposed that the Antichrist definitely spoken of by John is yet to appear in the end of the world, and claim to be Christ, and induce many to follow him; that he will be found at Jerusalem when Christ comes, seated in the temple of God, and claiming to be God as described by Paul in 2 Thess., 2d chap.—John has told us to try the spirits; "and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus the Messiah hath come in the flesh, is not of God; but he is of the false Messiah, of whom ye have heard that he cometh, and now he is already in the world." (Syriac.) John says that the Antichrist that should come, had already made his appearance in the world, and that it was a doctrine and not a person claiming to be Christ, to which he referred. It is said that the character of the man of sin, and Antichrist is the same. There is a similarity between the two, and so there is between a thief and a murderer; and this is, the relation they sustain to each other; the one robbed Christ of his glory, the other put to death his saints, so that the distinction is very clearly seen.

Again, the Antichrist was to deny the Father and the Son, which is fully explained in 1 John 2: 22, 23. "Who is false, but he that denieth that Jesus is the Messiah? And that person is a false Messiah. He that denieth the Father, denieth also the Son. And he that denieth the Son, also believeth not the Father. He that confesseth the Son, confesseth also the Father." Again, 1 John 5: 10, "And whoever believeth not God, hath made him a liar, by not believing the testimony which God hath testified concerning his Son." Denying the existence of God or his Son is not the characteristic of the Antichrist; but denying the record or testimony which God hath given of his Son, as shown by the previous quotations.

I now purpose to adduce evidence from History to show that these Antichrists that existed in the apostles' day, did corrupt the church with their doctrines, and fully usurped the authority of the church.—Says Moshiem, "Of all the different systems of philosophy that were received about the time of our Savior, none were so detrimental to the Christian religion as that which was called Gnostic, or science, (falsely so-called) or the way to the true knowledge of the Deity, or the oriental doctrine which for the three first centuries perplexed and afflicted the Christian church. From several passages in Scripture, 1 John 2: 18; 1 Tim. 6: 10; Col. 2: 2, it evidently appears that the general meetings of Christians were deserted and separate assemblies formed by those who were infected with this doctrine. They interpreted or rather corrupted all the doctrines of Christ and his apostles in such a manner as to reconcile them with their own. They believed that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, they rejected his humanity, or that he had a real body, and they pretended to draw their opinions from secret doctrines of Christ." (Gibbon chap. 47, Sec. 2.)

Many among the Gentile proselytes refused to believe that a celestial spirit, an undivided essence had been personally united with a mass of impure and contaminated flesh; and in their zeal for the divinity they piously abjured the humanity of Christ. While his blood was still recent upon Calvary, the Docetæ, a learned sect of Asiatics, invented the fantastic system which was afterwards propogated by the Marcionites, the Manichæns, and the various names of the Gnostic heresy. They denied the truth and authenticity of the Bible so far as they relate to the conception of Mary, the birth of Christ, and the thirty years that preceded the exercise of his ministry. He first appeared on the banks of the Jordan in the form of perfect manhood; but it was a form only; and not a substance; a human figure created by the hand of Omnipotence to imitate the faculties and actions of a man, and to impose a perpetual illusion on the senses of his friends and enemies. Articulate sounds vibrated on the ears of his disciples; but the image which was impressed on their optic nerve, eluded the more stubborn of the touch; and they enjoyed the spiritual, not the corporeal presence of the Son of God. It needs no argument to convince the reader that this doctrine constituted the Antichrist to whom John referred.

These philosophers, in consequence of the numerous sects into which they became divided, (32 by A. D. 200) adopted a new name, (New Platonics,) got up by those Christians that had charge of the Alexandrian schools. These doctrines, (says Moshiem,) were embraced by Origen. From hence it was that the christian doctors began to introduce their subtle and obscure erudition into the religion of Jesus, to involve in darkness of "vain philosophy," some of the principal truths of christianity, which had been revealed with the utmost plainness." "It soon became a matter of controversy whether this philosophy was of utility in the christian church; but the cause of philosophy triumphed. This victory was attributed to Origen, who had been instructed in the Platonic schools. The fame of this philosopher daily increased among christians, and his method of interpreting the Scriptures became almost universal among them, and opened a secure retreat for all sorts of errors." "It brought into the church the nobility, bishops and Archbishops, until their tyranny became intollerable, and from this overbearing spirit some sought reformation. About this time Arius began to publish the Arian doctrine." "These philosophers preferred Plato to other philosophers, and looked upon his opinions of God, the human soul, and things invisible as conformable to the Christian doctrines." "They denied the salvation of the body, and at death their souls went direct to heaven, from whence they will no more return to the body." It is quite evident that the immortality of the soul and going to heaven at death, not taught by the Apostles as it was first introduced into the church by the Platonic philosophers, which was considered a heretical doctrine by all true christians.

We have arrived at a point of time (4th century) when the mystery of iniquity had so corrupted the church with its antichristian doctrines, that Christ and his doctrines were held in less esteem than the doctrines of Plato. The gods of Plato were worshiped with equal adoration with our Lord. The resurrection, the corner stone of the gospel, was rejected; death became the gate to endless joy, Jesus Christ was dissipated into thin air, and not half so tangible.—Arius was a bold reformer. His doctrines were intended to bring christianity back to the primitive standard, but at the Council of Nice, A. D. 325, his doctrines were condemned, and his followers were banished from the empire by Theodosius, A. D. 390. In the fourth century Satan's house became divided on the Incarnation, and as a house divided cannot stand, we will look for a further development of this satanic doctrine. (Gibbon chap. 47.) Says Gibbon in this chapter, "I have already observed that the disputes of the Trinity (with the Arians) were succeeded by those of the Incarnation, alike scandalous to the church, alike pernicious to the state, still more minute in their origin, still more durable in their effects." These parties were denominated by the "one nature" and "two natures." The two natures were those that adopted the creed of Athanasius, who held that Jesus Christ was born of the virgin Mary, the Mother of God, according to humanity; one and the same Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Lord, and only begotten in two natures, without confusion, conversion, divulsion, or separation." (Howell's Hist.) While the "one nature" maintained that Jesus Christ, or "the divinity" passed through Mary like a sunbeam through a plate of glass, and asserted that the seal of the virginity remained unbroken even at the moment she became the mother of Christ. Others taught that he was clothed with an impassible and incorruptible body, which emenated direct from God, and was not born of the virgin Mary. (Gibbon.) The contention between these two sects disturbed the whole Roman empire. A Council was called by Theodosius, A. D. 381, to settle these disputes; but after a tumultuous time of over three months, the emperor dissolved the Council, and exclaimed, God is my witness that I am not the author of this confusion. His Providence will discern and punish the guilty. Return to your provinces, and may your private virtues repair the mischief and scandal of your meeting. (Gibbon.) Another council was called at Chalcedon, A. D. 451. Six hundred and thirty bishops attended, over five hundred were catholics ("two natures"). At that Council, says Gibbon, "the Christ in one person but in two natures was announced to the world; an invisible line was drawn between the houses of Apollonarius and the faith of St. Cyril, and the road to paradise; a bridge, as sharp as a razor, was suspended over the abyss by the masterhand of the artist. At this Council a canon of laws (twenty-nine in number,) was published for the future government of the Catholic church, based upon the epistles of Leo, the Roman pontiff. "At this Council (says Howell) all heretics were condemned, especially those that affirmed that the flesh of Christ came from heaven, not having been truly born of the virgin Mary, with Eutycheus and the Monophysites, who denied the divinity and humanity of Christ."

"A further development of this man of sin, (Popery,) or abomination that was to make desolate, was manifested at this council. "It was declared (says Gibbon) by the conscience or honor of five hundred bishops, that the decrees of the synod of Chalcedon might be lawfully supported even by blood." "Seventy-two years after, (A. D. 523) the emperor Justin (who was a rigid Catholic) put this resolution into effect, by issuing an edict to put all heretics to death without mercy or reserve, wherever they could be discovered and convicted." (Bower.) "Notwithstanding the great majority of Catholics at this council, they did not succeed to the supremacy until the death of Anastasius. That emperor was a rigid Monophysite and did all he could to annoy the Catholics. The Roman Pontiff excommununicated him, but not being disposed to acknowledge the pope's authority, compelled him to rescind his rash act. The Pope persuaded Vitalian, who had declared himself the champion of the Catholic faith, to proceed to Constantinople to chastise the heretical emperor; and he hasted, (says Howell) to Constantinople with a mixed multitude of such nations as were wont to wander about without any fixed habitation." "In this pious rebellion (says Gibbon) he depopulated Thrace, besieged Constantinople, exterminated sixty-five thousand of his fellow-christians, till he obtained the recall of the bishops, the satisfaction of the Pope, and the establishment of the council of Chalcedon, an orthodox treaty reluctantly signed by the dying Anastasius, and more faithfully performed by the uncle of Justinian."

There cannot be a doubt that the Antichrist, spoken of by John, did corrupt and finally usurp the authority of the church condemned at the Council of Chalcedon, which was finally supported by the arms of Vitalian and the emperor Justin.—Whatever views may be entertained with reference to Antichrist, (or the "Daily") one thing is evident, it had to be removed to give place to the man of sin, or the abomination which was to make desolate; whose character is plainly developed on the pages of history. Paul no doubt referred to the same character that Daniel spoke of in chap. 2: 36, "And the king shall do according to his will, and he shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every God, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods." Paul says, "who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God, sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God." There is no power that has ever arisen in the world, or can arise, that could fulfill the prophecy more fully than the Pope.

The Pope suffers himself to be addressed "infinite," "incomprehensible," "omnipotent," and claiming himself "all power in heaven and in earth, having been constituted prince over all nations and kingdoms, with a plenitude of power to root up and to plant, to destroy and to save, to raise up and pull down, at his pleasure." (Bower's Hist. Popes.)

If there can be a more blasphemous power than this has shown itself to be, it will require stronger language than the English to describe it. Again says history, "He (the pope) is seated on the throne of state; the cardinals in succession approach and kiss his hand, retire one step and make three bows or nods, one to him in front, and one on the right hand and another on the left, which are intended for the personification of the Father, and for the Son, and for the Holy Ghost, on either side." (History of Rome in the 18th century.) It is only by his willing and deluded subjects who crouch to this degrading adoration in this our day. His thunders have ceased to roll over the Roman world as in former times. That man of destiny and prophecy, Napoleon, deprived him of the last vestige of power in 1813, when he signed the concordat which divested him of his temporal power, and reduced him to a bishop or prelate. Just 1290 years from the edict of Justin (which was suggested by the pope) to put heretics to death wherever they could be found, [illegible] lest his power to influence potentates to issue edicts, to desolate the church of God. He is not recognized among the powers of the world. The saints' triumph is nigh at hand; soon they will rejoice over her.—Like a mill-stone cast into the sea, she will go down amid the wail of nations, to be found no more at all. Hallelujahs will be heard from a great multitude of voices. The Lord God omnipotent reigneth!

Good News.

Bro. Grant:—I think it my duty to inform you and the flock of God that I am still in the field of labor. In the Providence of God I was led to come to Augusta about the first of January and have spent the most of the time since in this city. Truth is taking hold on the minds of the people; there are numbers of persons in this city who are settled on the word of God. They have erected the old family altar, without polishing any of the stones. So they offer up their sacrifice daily, and I do think the Lord accepts them.

Sinners feel the need of salvation.—Quite a number have presented themselves as seekers after truth.

We hold our meetings in a large school house in the upper story. The last Lord's day the house was full. Quite an interest is felt on this subject in this city.—Pray for us, dear brethren, that we may be wise as serpents and harmless as doves; but never shun to declare the whole counsel of God. Amen.

Yours in hope,

Israel Damman.

Spiritual Problem.

At a meeting of the Seaman's Bethel, in North Square, Father Taylor proposed the above subject to be solved. The meeting commenced with considerable interest and spirituality, and continued to increase in the same by short experiences of new converts, and warm hearted professors, until about half through, when a man got up, a professed preacher of the gospel, and made a long, dry speech, with well chosen words, figures and comparisons, until every one was surfeited. When he sat down it was quite perceptible that the interest of the meeting had gone down many degrees. Says Father Taylor;—"Brethren, here is a problem for you to solve. Why did it go down?"

There are too often occasions to ask the same question. The problem is easy enough solved. You may take a vessel and cleanse it, and whatever you put into it either wine, water or milk, will come out as pure as it goes in; but let the vessel get corroded and musty and it vitiates whatever it receives. There are some professors who have a multitude of words, but in spirituality are dead,—twice dead. The life and power of godliness is crowded out of them by a dead, formal routine of duties, in order to quiet a conscience that is harrassed by their backsliding; and what they say in a meeting serves rather to chill than to add to its spirituality. I think there is a danger of trusting too much upon former experience. The hopes, joys, and evidences of our acceptance with God, which we had last year, will not answer for the present time. Nothing but a living, active faith, and a witness of the Spirit that our ways please him, ought to satisfy us; but how many professors are there, who are in this cold, lukewarm state. I think the only way a christian can maintain a godly walk in these days is to come to the fountain daily, and make a self-dedication to God and his service.

I believe the time is drawing near when we shall need all the grace we have to sustain us; and many, no doubt, who think they will stand this trial, will find to their sorrow that they have neglected to take in a supply, and their vessel will founder and sink to rise no more.

None, but those whose names are written in the book of life, will be delivered when the time of trouble comes.

The danger of a false hope is not perceptible, sometimes, until it is too late to have a good one. May the Lord arouse us to watch and pray.

D. N. Smith.

Source of Comfort.—It is not from myself I look for comfort at any time, but from my God and his free grace. Here is comfort enough for all times. When I am at the best, I ought not, I dare not rely upon myself; when I am at the worst, I may and should rely upon Christ and his sufficient grace. Though I be the vilest sinner that ever came to Him, yet I know he is more gracious than I am sinful; yea, the more my sin is, the more glory will it be to his grace to pardon it.—Leighton.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 28, 1858.

Winsted.

Our visit to Ct. was a very pleasant one. On our way, one evening was spent at Springfield, with Bro. Ladd and the church enjoying his faithful labors. Three requested prayers, and expressed a firm resolution to be christians. Several were intending to be baptized the next Lord's day, (April 11th.) Here we met, also, our dear Bro. Hastings, weary with labors, but strong in faith and hope, laboring successfully in winning sinners to Christ. Thank the Lord for sparing him from the power of death.

Friday, we went to Collinsville, where we were met by Bro. Mathewson, and taken to his happy home. Bro. M—— is quite worn down by his arduous labors in the vineyard of the Lord, during the past winter; but he has seen many come to Christ, who are now happy in his love. In the evening, we had a profitable meeting in Bakerville, where there is a growing interest. Some weeks since, a very interesting discussion was held in this place for several days, between Bro. Howell and a school teacher, by the name of Bulkley, on the subject of immortality. Many were astonished when they saw that the Bible plainly teaches that immortality is gained only "by patient continuance in well doing," and that the wicked will finally be destroyed. When we look at the plainness of this subject as set forth in the Scriptures, we are surprised that all do not see it. We think that a belief in the sleep of the dead is the great safeguard against Spiritualism—the strongest delusion of the age, and which will prove to be the most fatal in its consequences. Much as some good men abhor the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, we believe the time is at hand when they will see it to be one of the cardinal truths of the Bible. We look at the position of those who do not believe this truth like that of one who is unconsciously walking upon the brink of a precipice. But few are aware of their danger, while many even laugh at the individual who sounds the note of warning. Of all the antagonists against christianity, we believe Spiritualism is the most powerful and successful. In it, is the embodiment of nearly all the elements ever brought by infidels in opposition to the doctrine of Jesus and the religion of the Bible. As strange as this may sound to some now, we are convinced that the time is not far distant when they will see that our position is not an ultra one.

Lord's day, April 11th, and every evening following till Friday, we spent in Winsted. A number of backsliders were reclaimed, and several who had never enjoyed religion resolved to become the followers of Christ and requested prayers. One was baptized. The Lord has done a great work in the churches of Winsted for the last few months, and we were rejoiced to find many of our friends happy in the love of the Lord, who, one year since, were strangers to the joys of the christian religion. We found the same interesting feature of christian union that is witnessed in other places. The Congregational preacher, Bro. Bulkley, has had a very interesting experience during the past winter. At one time, he lost his strength at the Methodist church, and was blessed with new zeal in the cause of the Lord, besides having a great revolution in his theology. It might be truly said of him, old things passed away, and all things became new. Some thought he was deranged, others that he had become a fanatic, but several who opposed at first are now enjoying some of the same good spirit. Some have embraced the christian religion, that we little thought would ever yield to the Lord; but found that several of the most devoted men did not hesitate to say that they think the world is enjoying the last revival before the coming of Christ. The thought is a solemn one, but we cannot shake off the conviction that it is even so. How important then that we all do what we can to persuade the people to repent of their sins. We find that all of our preaching brethren, so far as we have had opportunity to converse with them, are of one mind on this point. Truly,

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime."

We closed our meetings in Winsted around the table of the Lord, commemorating the sufferings of our Savior. It was a solemn, but heavenly season.

We were sorry to learn that quite a number of the members of the different churches are embracing Spiritualism, and consequently rejecting the word of the Lord. We learned that a special prayer meeting had been held in one of the churches to pray for those who are being led astray by this "strong delusion." If the church hold on to the Papal dogma that man never dies, we doubt not but that many more of the members will be snared and taken by "the spirits of devils working miracles" for the purpose of convincing the people that their great leader told the truth to our first parents, when he said, "Ye shall not surely die."

Lord's day, April 18th, was spent pleasantly in Worcester, at the church in Thomas street, where Bro. D. T. Taylor has been preaching for some three years. He has now closed his pastoral duties with that church, and concluded to go as an evangelist. We found the church in a very healthy state, so far as we could judge, and earnestly laboring for the salvation of the people. Indeed no church can labor much to bring sinners to Christ without being blessed of the Lord; and on the other hand, a church that does not labor for the conversion of those out of Christ, will dry up like a branch cut from a tree, and its members will bite and devour each other. We have never known an exception to this statement. In the evening about twenty came forward for prayers. It was an interesting season. Now is the time for every christian to be awake, co-operating with the great work of the Holy Spirit so signally manifested throughout christendom. Let us remember that we are to be co-workers with the Lord in saving people from destruction. Let us be in earnest, for our work is nearly done. Be faithful in warning all who come within your reach. Go about the work at once, and you will find your own hearts filled with more ardent lover of Jesus, his word, his children, and those who are out of Christ. Your peace and joy will be "multiplied," and the evidence of your acceptance will soon be bright as the noon-day sun. Come, awake! It is death to sleep now. The final conflict which will decide our eternal destiny is just at hand. The hosts of the enemy are marshalling their forces. Already the skirmishing has commenced. Every christian soldier will soon need the "whole armor," in order to come off conqueror, and obtain the prize of eternal life, and an heirship to the everlasting kingdom. Now is the time to "gird up the loins of your mind" and "be sober." The great battle of "Armageddon" is about to be fought,—the fate of a world to be decided. Let us all be upon the side of the "King of kings," and enjoy the peaceful kingdom forever and ever with all the dear saints of the Lord.

The Son of God.

It is said, the Son of God existed, not in fact, but in the purpose and promise of God, prior to the birth of Mary.

Permit me to test this assertion by the word of truth. The Son of the Blessed affirmed as follows:—

"I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." John 6: 38.

"The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life to the world." John 6: 33.

"What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend up where he was before?" John 6: 62.

"And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." John 17: 5.

"No man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man whose abode is heaven." G. Campbell's translation. John 3: 13.

"Then said the Jews unto him, Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham? Jesus said unto them, verily, verily, I say unto you, before Abraham was, I am." John 8: 57, 58.

"I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world and go to the Father. His disciples said unto him, lo, now speakest thou plainly, and speakest no proverb." John 16: 28–29.

TESTIMONY OF THE INSPIRED APOSTLES.

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him," &c.—"And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth." John 1: 1–14.

"God, who created all things by Jesus Christ." Eph. 3: 9.

"By whom (the Son of God) also he made the worlds." Heb. 1: 2.

"Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature; for by him were all things created—and he is before all things," &c. Col. 1: 15, 17.

"These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the beginning of the creation of God." Rev. 3: 14.

"Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; declared the Son of God, with power, as to his holy, spiritual nature, (the nature he possessed before he took the body prepared him) by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. 1: 3, 4.

It is remarked, if he actually existed before man was created, then he could not be the seed of Abraham. Permit me to ask, why was he declared to be the seed of Abraham "according to the flesh," unless he was something else, according to another nature? Rom. 1: 3, 4, proves him to have been the Son of God in his spiritual nature, which he himself declared "came down from heaven." Consequently, he must have pre-existed. It is affirmed, that it (the Word that was made flesh) had existed in the eternal purpose of God; but the Word, or begotten Son, (see ver. 14,) was in actual existence with God and enjoyed glory with him before the world was, as John 1: 1 and 17: 5 proves.

It is thought by some, that Christ is now our great antitypical High Priest after the order of Aaron. But how can this be, when the Spirit of truth "testifieth, (of Christ) thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec?" Heb. 7: 17. He is that "other priest (which) should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron." Heb. 7: 11. If he is not of the order of Melchisedec, our entire salvation is all a shadow and no reality! "The Law (which included the Aaronic priesthood) made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by the which we draw nigh to God." Heb. 7: 19. If our High Priest is "after the order of Aaron," we must still tremble and despair before the lightnings and thunders of Mount Sinai! Blessed be God our great High Priest, after the order of Melchisedec, (the Son of God,) will bring us to the mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem," &c. Heb. 12: 22. There, through the riches of divine mercy may we meet to celebrate forever the praises of redeeming love.

SECOND SERIES.

No. I.

To Uncle Fred;—"Too old and clumsy to attempt the demolishment of your (my) strong towers and bulwarks," eh? Glad you own up that they are "strange."—Thank you! "No use to try to convert you." Well, it would be a hard matter, I think, for I am rooted and grounded in the truth, on this question, and it would be difficult to move me, and I am rather inclined to think that you are strongly under conviction that I have the truth.—Come, now, confess; is it not so?

And so you will "allow Kate to give a reason of her hope, or belief in Millerism," thinking that it will be "quite amusing." Perhaps, Uncle Fred, you will find my faith not quite so amusing in its character as you imagine; it is not, I assure you, made up of "cunningly devised fables" respecting the "day and hour of the Lord's coming;" "ascension robes;" "no work;" "creeping and rolling;" "kissing and feet washing." I will assure you in the outset, that these things form no part of my creed, and I am sure that they never did of good Bro. Miller's. If, therefore, you are promising yourself amusement from a plea in defence of these, you are destined to a disappointment.

By the way, however, let me say in the commencement, that I do not claim to be a "Millerite," nor any other ite, unless it be a "Bibleite." I copy no man's creed, but whatsoever I find taught in the Bible, that I believe.

I believe that the same Jesus seen by the disciples to go into heaven, will so come again, in like manner as he went away. That at his second, personal and visible advent, he will destroy all the kingdoms of this world, and establish his "everlasting kingdom," "under the whole heavens," and that the saints of the Most High will take the kingdom, and possess it forever, even for ever and ever." That the righteous living will be changed in a moment to immortality, and the righteous dead will be raised immortal at the coming of Jesus Christ, and that this constitutes the "first resurrection." and upon such as have part in it, "the second death hath no power," and that they will "reign with Christ a thousand years" prior to the resurrection of the wicked.

I believe that this thousand years will constitute the true Millenial age, when the earth shall be full of the glory of God; when the wolf shall dwell with the Lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. That then will be fulfilled the covenant made with Abraham, that he shall have the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and his seed with him. He "died in faith, not having received the promise," God giving him "none inheritane in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on," but when raised from the dead immortal, he will then be prepared to enter upon his everlasting inheritance, and enjoy it "forever."

I believe from the history of the world and the signs of the times, that we are near the end of earthly governments, and the reign of Christ.

Now, Uncle Fred, I need not enter into any argument to prove to you that Christ will surely come again to this world—raise the dead, and reward every man according to his works. These things you believe as confidently as I do, but respecting the order of these events, the locality of the kingdom, the Millenium, and promise to Abraham, and evidences of the immediate coming of Christ, we differ in opinion, and I will therefore, in a series of letters, give you the evidences upon which I predicate my present faith, and while I shall fail to amuse, I hope to be able to instruct you in certain very important truths which are entirely overlooked by the mass of religious teachers, being buried beneath the rubbish of human tradition. And it may be, Uncle Fred, that at the termination of this series you will come to the conclusion that Kate has not so fully manifested her "folly and delusion," as you at first seemed to suppose.

It is an ignorance of our true sentiments that leads our opponents to heap upon us such epithets, and I am glad you have kindly permitted me to tell what they are, and to give you my reasons for entertaining them, and thereby open the way for the removal of your prejudice, a prejudice created by Madame Rumor, who has seemingly called into exercise all her subtlety, to devise falsehoods against us. That there have been errors, and grievious errors among us as a people, I do not deny; but I do contend that these were not a result of truths held by us in distinction from the Orthodoxy of the day, but a departure from them; and those who have thus gone into wild notions and fanaticism, have claimed no affinity with those who are particularly identified with Bro. Miller's views. Some have gone off on one hobby and some another—"Judaism," "Seventh-day Sabbath," "Unconscious state," "No Churchism," and "Apostolic Churchism," &c.

Now while each of these parties labor for the promotion of their favorite hobby, and are at variance with one another, there is a class denominated "Adventists," who are laboring in love and harmony for the promotion of those views, not only which constitute them a "peculiar people," but also those which are held in harmony with other denominations; and while they believe that the time of the end has unfolded the sealed book of Daniel's prophecy, and manifested the signs of the speedily approaching judgment, demonstrating the revelation of Jesus Christ during the present generation, and thus evolved new truths essential to the times, which ought to be specially urged upon the attention of the church and world; they offer the hand of fellowship to all who love Jesus and his appearing, whether identified with them, or not, and are ready to co-operate with all in the great work of soul-saving.

So much, Uncle Fred, for my introduction. In my next I will give you my views respecting the kingdom of Christ, and I shall be happy to answer questions, or notice any objection you may wish to offer.

Yours in love,

Kate.

The Statement of a Medium of First Class Powers.

"I weigh less. I measure three inches less around my waist, and my face is not so full as formerly. I have no appetite. When I retire, I fall asleep, and in a few minutes awake, and think it is morning; I sleep no more, but toss and turn from side to side, and moan and sigh the live-long night. I keep the windows closed lest my neighbors will hear me. Sometimes I have to be lifted out of bed when it is time to arise. It seems to me as though my back was broken. After rising I cannot straighten myself immediately. I sit leaning forward, bent nearly double, and straighten by degrees. I do not grow out of shape. My spine is not curved, if it was I should despair. But I think I shall yet be a cripple for life. I take cold easily. My diseased spine affects me in this way,—it appears to me that the ticking of the clock and the chirping of Canary, suddenly, sound as loud as the firing of a gun; my strength leaves me, and I become as white as a corpse. I then stop my ears, and motion for mother not to speak. I have experienced such turns as this every day, for one year, and sometimes two or three times a day. I do not know what I should do if this should happen when I was in the circle. I can walk up hill better than down hill. Going up and down stairs is very burdensome to me. One night I took a table-spoon full of brandy, in order to procure sleep; I slept till one o'clock and then awoke with a head-ache, yet, somewhat refreshed by sleep. I cannot take Chloroform. If I go, even, into a dentist's office where it is administered to others, the nerves of my face twitch as they do in St. Vitus' Dance. In the day time I feel nearly all my former vivacity, and I am encouraged, but when night comes, my sufferings are greater than I can bear. I do not lean towards Homeopathy as much as formerly."

Good News.

Bro. Grant:—I think it my duty to inform you and the flock of God that I am still in the field of labor. In the Providence of God I was led to come to Augusta about the first of January and have spent the most of the time since in this city. Truth is taking hold on the minds of the people; there are numbers of persons in this city who are settled on the word of God. They have erected the old family altar, without polishing any of the stones. So they offer up their sacrifice daily, and I do think the Lord accepts them.

Sinners feel the need of salvation.—Quite a number have presented themselves as seekers after truth.

We hold our meetings in a large school house in the upper story. The last Lord's day the house was full. Quite an interest is felt on this subject in this city.—Pray for us, dear brethren, that we may be wise as serpents and harmless as doves; but never shun to declare the whole counsel of God. Amen.

Yours in hope,

Israel Damman.

Spiritual Problem.

At a meeting of the Seaman's Bethel, in North Square, Father Taylor proposed the above subject to be solved. The meeting commenced with considerable interest and spirituality, and continued to increase in the same by short experiences of new converts, and warm hearted professors, until about half through, when a man got up, a professed preacher of the gospel, and made a long, dry speech, with well chosen words, figures and comparisons, until every one was surfeited. When he sat down it was quite perceptible that the interest of the meeting had gone down many degrees. Says Father Taylor;—"Brethren, here is a problem for you to solve. Why did it go down?"

There are too often occasions to ask the same question. The problem is easy enough solved. You may take a vessel and cleanse it, and whatever you put into it either wine, water or milk, will come out as pure as it goes in; but let the vessel get corroded and musty and it vitiates whatever it receives. There are some professors who have a multitude of words, but in spirituality are dead,—twice dead. The life and power of godliness is crowded out of them by a dead, formal routine of duties, in order to quiet a conscience that is harrassed by their backsliding; and what they say in a meeting serves rather to chill than to add to its spirituality. I think there is a danger of trusting too much upon former experience. The hopes, joys, and evidences of our acceptance with God, which we had last year, will not answer for the present time. Nothing but a living, active faith, and a witness of the Spirit that our ways please him, ought to satisfy us; but how many professors are there, who are in this cold, lukewarm state. I think the only way a christian can maintain a godly walk in these days is to come to the fountain daily, and make a self-dedication to God and his service.

I believe the time is drawing near when we shall need all the grace we have to sustain us; and many, no doubt, who think they will stand this trial, will find to their sorrow that they have neglected to take in a supply, and their vessel will founder and sink to rise no more.

None, but those whose names are written in the book of life, will be delivered when the time of trouble comes.

The danger of a false hope is not perceptible, sometimes, until it is too late to have a good one. May the Lord arouse us to watch and pray.

D. N. Smith.

Source of Comfort.—It is not from myself I look for comfort at any time, but from my God and his free grace. Here is comfort enough for all times. When I am at the best, I ought not, I dare not rely upon myself; when I am at the worst, I may and should rely upon Christ and his sufficient grace. Though I be the vilest sinner that ever came to Him, yet I know he is more gracious than I am sinful; yea, the more my sin is, the more glory will it be to his grace to pardon it.—Leighton.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 28, 1858.

Winsted.

Our visit to Ct. was a very pleasant one. On our way, one evening was spent at Springfield, with Bro. Ladd and the church enjoying his faithful labors. Three requested prayers, and expressed a firm resolution to be christians. Several were intending to be baptized the next Lord's day, (April 11th.) Here we met, also, our dear Bro. Hastings, weary with labors, but strong in faith and hope, laboring successfully in winning sinners to Christ. Thank the Lord for sparing him from the power of death.

Friday, we went to Collinsville, where we were met by Bro. Mathewson, and taken to his happy home. Bro. M—— is quite worn down by his arduous labors in the vineyard of the Lord, during the past winter; but he has seen many come to Christ, who are now happy in his love. In the evening, we had a profitable meeting in Bakerville, where there is a growing interest. Some weeks since, a very interesting discussion was held in this place for several days, between Bro. Howell and a school teacher, by the name of Bulkley, on the subject of immortality. Many were astonished when they saw that the Bible plainly teaches that immortality is gained only "by patient continuance in well doing," and that the wicked will finally be destroyed. When we look at the plainness of this subject as set forth in the Scriptures, we are surprised that all do not see it. We think that a belief in the sleep of the dead is the great safeguard against Spiritualism—the strongest delusion of the age, and which will prove to be the most fatal in its consequences. Much as some good men abhor the doctrine of the sleep of the dead, we believe the time is at hand when they will see it to be one of the cardinal truths of the Bible. We look at the position of those who do not believe this truth like that of one who is unconsciously walking upon the brink of a precipice. But few are aware of their danger, while many even laugh at the individual who sounds the note of warning. Of all the antagonists against christianity, we believe Spiritualism is the most powerful and successful. In it, is the embodiment of nearly all the elements ever brought by infidels in opposition to the doctrine of Jesus and the religion of the Bible. As strange as this may sound to some now, we are convinced that the time is not far distant when they will see that our position is not an ultra one.

Lord's day, April 11th, and every evening following till Friday, we spent in Winsted. A number of backsliders were reclaimed, and several who had never enjoyed religion resolved to become the followers of Christ and requested prayers. One was baptized. The Lord has done a great work in the churches of Winsted for the last few months, and we were rejoiced to find many of our friends happy in the love of the Lord, who, one year since, were strangers to the joys of the christian religion. We found the same interesting feature of christian union that is witnessed in other places. The Congregational preacher, Bro. Bulkley, has had a very interesting experience during the past winter. At one time, he lost his strength at the Methodist church, and was blessed with new zeal in the cause of the Lord, besides having a great revolution in his theology. It might be truly said of him, old things passed away, and all things became new. Some thought he was deranged, others that he had become a fanatic, but several who opposed at first are now enjoying some of the same good spirit. Some have embraced the christian religion, that we little thought would ever yield to the Lord; but found that several of the most devoted men did not hesitate to say that they think the world is enjoying the last revival before the coming of Christ. The thought is a solemn one, but we cannot shake off the conviction that it is even so. How important then that we all do what we can to persuade the people to repent of their sins. We find that all of our preaching brethren, so far as we have had opportunity to converse with them, are of one mind on this point. Truly,

> "We are living, we are dwelling
> In a grand and awful time;
> In an age on ages telling,
> To be living is sublime."

We closed our meetings in Winsted around the table of the Lord, commemorating the sufferings of our Savior. It was a solemn, but heavenly season.

We were sorry to learn that quite a number of the members of the different churches are embracing Spiritualism, and consequently rejecting the word of the Lord. We learned that a special prayer meeting had been held in one of the churches to pray for those who are being led astray by this "strong delusion." He is that "other priest (which) should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron." Heb. 7: 11. If he is not of the order of Melchisedec, our entire salvation is all a shadow and no reality! "The Law (which included the Aaronic priesthood) made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by the which we draw nigh to God." Heb. 7: 19. If our High Priest is "after the order of Aaron," we must still tremble and despair before the lightnings and thunders of Mount Sinai! Blessed be God our great High Priest, after the order of Melchisedec, (the Son of God,) will bring us to the mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem," &c. Heb. 12: 22. There, through the riches of divine mercy may we meet to celebrate forever the praises of redeeming love.

SECOND SERIES.

No. I.

To Uncle Fred;—"Too old and clumsy to attempt the demolishment of your (my) strong towers and bulwarks," eh? Glad you own up that they are "strange."—Thank you! "No use to try to convert you." Well, it would be a hard matter, I think, for I am rooted and grounded in the truth, on this question, and it would be difficult to move me, and I am rather inclined to think that you are strongly under conviction that I have the truth.—Come, now, confess; is it not so?

And so you will "allow Kate to give a reason of her hope, or belief in Millerism," thinking that it will be "quite amusing." Perhaps, Uncle Fred, you will find my faith not quite so amusing in its character as you imagine; it is not, I assure you, made up of "cunningly devised fables" respecting the "day and hour of the Lord's coming," "ascension robes;" "no work;" "creeping and rolling;" "kissing and feet washing." I will assure you in the outset, that these things form no part of my creed, and I am sure that they never did of good Bro. Miller's. If, therefore, you are promising yourself amusement from a plea in defence of these, you are destined to a disappointment.

By the way, however, let me say in the commencement, that I do not claim to be a "Millerite," nor any other ite, unless it be a "Biblelite." I copy no man's creed, but whatsoever I find taught in the Bible, that I believe.

I believe that the same Jesus seen by the disciples to go into heaven, will so come again, in like manner as he went away. That at his second, personal and visible advent, he will destroy all the kingdoms of this world, and establish his "everlasting kingdom," "under the whole heavens," and that the saints of the Most High will take the kingdom, and possess it forever, even for ever and ever." That the righteous living will be changed in a moment to immortality, and the righteous dead will be raised immortal at the coming of Jesus Christ, and that this constitutes the "first resurrection," and upon such as have part in it, "the second death hath no power," and that they will "reign with Christ a thousand years" prior to the resurrection of the wicked.

I believe that this thousand years will constitute the true Millenial age, when the earth shall be full of the glory of God; when the wolf shall dwell with the Lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. That then will be fulfilled the covenant made with Abraham, that he shall have the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and his seed with him. He "died in faith, not having received the promise," God giving him "none inheritane in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on," but when raised from the dead immortal, he will then be prepared to enter upon his everlasting inheritance, and enjoy it "forever."

I believe from the history of the world and the signs of the times, that we are near the end of earthly governments, and the reign of Christ.

Now, Uncle Fred, I need not enter into any argument to prove to you that Christ will surely come again to this world—raise the dead, and reward every man according to his works. These things you believe as confidently as I do, but respecting the order of these events, the locality of the kingdom, the Millenium, and promise to Abraham, and evidences of the immediate coming of Christ, we differ in opinion, and I will therefore, in a series of letters, give you the evidences upon which I predicate my present faith, and while I shall fail to amuse, I hope to be able to instruct you in certain very important truths which are entirely overlooked by the mass of religious teachers, being buried beneath the rubbish of human tradition. And it may be, Uncle Fred, that at the termination of this series you will come to the conclusion that Kate has not so fully manifested her "folly and delusion," as you at first seemed to suppose.

It is an ignorance of our true sentiments that leads our opponents to heap upon us such epithets, and I am glad you have kindly permitted me to tell what they are, and to give you my reasons for entertaining them, and thereby open the way for the removal of your prejudice, a prejudice created by Madame Rumor, who has seemingly called into exercise all her subtlety, to devise falsehoods against us. That there have been errors, and grievious errors among us as a people, I do not deny; but I do contend that these were not a result of truths held by us in distinction from the Orthodoxy of the day, but a departure from them; and those who have thus gone into wild notions and fanaticism, have claimed no affinity with those who are particularly identified with Bro. Miller's views. Some have gone off on one hobby and some another—"Judaism," "Seventh-day Sabbath," "Unconscious state," "No Churchism," and "Apostolic Churchism," &c.

Now while each of these parties labor for the promotion of their favorite hobby, and are at variance with one another, there is a class denominated "Adventists," who are laboring in love and harmony for the promotion of those views, not only which constitute them a "peculiar people," but also those which are held in harmony with other denominations; and while they believe that the time of the end has unfolded the sealed book of Daniel's prophecy, and manifested the signs of the speedily approaching judgment, demonstrating the revelation of Jesus Christ during the present generation, and thus evolved new truths essential to the times, which ought to be specially urged upon the attention of the church and world; they offer the hand of fellowship to all who love Jesus and his appearing, whether identified with them, or not, and are ready to co-operate with all in the great work of soul-saving.

So much, Uncle Fred, for my introduction. In my next I will give you my views respecting the kingdom of Christ, and I shall be happy to answer questions, or notice any objection you may wish to offer.

Yours in love,

Kate.

Mediums.

The Statement of a Medium of First Class Powers.

"I weigh less. I measure three inches less around my waist, and my face is not so full as formerly. I have no appetite. When I retire, I fall asleep, and in a few minutes awake, and think it is morning; I sleep no more, but toss and turn from side to side, and moan and sigh the live-long night. I keep the windows closed lest my neighbors will hear me. Sometimes I have to be lifted out of bed when it is time to arise. It seems to me as though my back was broken. After rising I cannot straighten myself immediately. I sit leaning forward, bent nearly double, and straighten by degrees. I do not grow out of shape. My spine is not curved, if it was I should despair. But I think I shall yet be a cripple for life. I take cold easily. My diseased spine affects me in this way,—it appears to me that the ticking of the clock and the chirping of Canary, suddenly, sound as loud as the firing of a gun; my strength leaves me, and I become as white as a corpse. I then stop my ears, and motion for mother not to speak. I have experienced such turns as this every day, for one year, and sometimes two or three times a day. I do not know what I should do if this should happen when I was in the circle. I can walk up hill better than down hill. Going up and down stairs is very burdensome to me. One night I took a table-spoon full of brandy, in order to procure sleep; I slept till one o'clock and then awoke with a head-ache, yet, somewhat refreshed by sleep. I cannot take Caloroform. If I go, even, into a dentist's office where it is administered to others, the nerves of my face twitch as they do in St. Vitus' Dance. In the day time I feel nearly all my former vivacity, and I am encouraged, but when night comes, my sufferings are greater than I can bear. I do not lean towards Homeopathy as much as formerly."

Naturally I am as irritable as any other man. But when I find my anger or any other evil temper arise in my mind, immediately I go to my Redeemer and give myself up to be managed by Him. Thus I have gained the mastery over passion.—Clarke.

The new spring bonnets, says a lounger on Broadway, continue to be worn of the oyster shell pattern, small and rounded at the cheeks. Eminent medical men attribute the great increase among women of neuralgia, tic-doloreux, loss of sight, and great suffering in the ear, to this fashion of excessively small bonnets, which dress the neck instead of the head.

From Bro. I. C. Wellcome.

Bro. Grant:—I perceive you are quite in earnest that all writers for the Crisis should sign their real names. Well, this may be the best way. I never have an objection to my work appearing over my own name, only because I make such poor work of it I sometimes feel some shame to see my articles after they are in print. So I will now conform to your wish by owning up for the past and going along better for the future. I wrote the articles under the captions, "Duty of Husbands to Wives," "Duty of Wives to Husbands," "Duty of Parents to Children," "Duty of Children to Parents," "Notes by the Way," "Musings of an Evangelist." If any others I do not recollect.

Now let the others own up, and if our articles are always read with more interest when our own names are attached to them, we shall make the reflections of those who have read more interesting to them. May be I shall not endorse the sentiment that it is always best to sign our names to all we write. If a thing is worth saying, and is well said, it matters but little who says it. The thought is what we want. But enough on that point. I know that when I read a good thing, or a bad thing, I always wish I knew who did that.

Don't neglect to write now, brethren and sisters, and tell us the best you have and add your names. Your brother in Christ, still looking for him,

I. C. Wellcome.

Brunswick, Me., April, 1858.

From Bro. P. S. W. Deyo.

Bro. Grant:—I have been trying to do all I could for the cause of my Master in the West. Through the blessing of God fifty have obeyed the form of doctrine delivered to them—which was, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? . . . For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6: 3, 5. Others will soon follow. The church now numbers sixty.

Brethren, the gospel has the same effect that it always has had. I still feel encouraged to handle the sword of the Spirit, and may we all do so with meekness and godly fear. It is good to get once more where we can see our old friend—the Crisis, which is laden with light, and warm epistles. May our hearts be seasoned with grace. I believe the duty of the church is to daily look for the Lord. I firmly believe that we are between the midnight and morning, and soon we shall see the King in his beauty. Thus far let us also be ready, for in such an hour as we think not the Son of man cometh. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Your brother waiting for redemption,

Peter S. W. Deyo.

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited to contribute to the fund whether they are subscribers or not.

Obituary.

At East Weare, Feb. 26th, Horatio Hillard Carr, son of Aaron Carr, in the 22d year of his age.

His disease was inflammation of the bowels and subsequent mortification, occasioned by excessive lifting. His sickness was of few days, but very distressing, except a short time before his death.

Horatio H. Carr was a young man of much promise; and by a kind and sympathetic heart had gathered around him a large circle of endeared friends, as the vast concourse which assembled on the day of his funeral, with weeping eyes and sympathizing hearts, bore decisive testimony. The funeral was attended at the residence of his father, and although he was buried some two miles away, yet the procession that accompanied him to his grave was nearly a quarter of a mile in length. The South Weare Cornet Band, of which young Carr was a worthy member and second leader, accompanied their departed friend to his solitary resting-place, till the voice of Jesus shall awake the dead! His relatives and friends most deeply feel their loss; but his peaceful, happy death gave such unmistakable evidence of his acceptance by his Savior that it adds great comfort to their otherwise afflicted hearts.

Previous to a narrative of Horatio's last hours, we notice his recent interest in the study of the sacred Scriptures. Some two years since an aged and Christian friend of his, gave him a copy of the New Testament; with an ardent wish that he would carry it with him and profit by its perusal. By an examination of this Testament it is evident that it was not bestowed in vain. Some three or four days before his death, a friend was examining this precious volume in the room where the sick man lay. When he discovered his young Christian friend reading, he said: "Are you reading something good?" His friend replied, "I am looking at a verse I found marked;" and going to him, she pointed to Matt. 11: 29, saying, "Horatio, did you mark that?" He replied, "I did!" Said his friend, "Do you feel that?" He said, "I do!" The passage reads thus:—"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." This verse was entirely enclosed with pencil mark. We will give one more verse enclosed in the same manner: "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh unto you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded." James 4: 8. These passages gave an idea of the state of his mind before he was taken sick, although he had not yet given his heart to God, as the following narrative will clearly show:—

Wednesday, the 24th, two days before his death, he tried to pray, but remarked to his sister, who had the principal charge of him, "I fear it will do no good!"

On Thursday he said to his sister, "I feel very happy; I feel as though some one was watching over me beside my earthly friends!" Pausing again, he said, "If I am spared to get well, I shall travel an entirely different road from what I have travelled!" After this he requested his sister to open the blinds, and as the light broke into the room, he said, "O, how beautiful every thing looks—don't it?" and then added: "I am about to close my eyes on these beautiful scenes, but I shall soon open them again on scenes that will look more beautiful than they do here!"

Friday morning at an early hour, it was evident that Horatio H Carr was dying! and during the last three or four hours of his life, he offered to his Heavenly Father and Savior three most fervent prayers, that were audible, for himself and his friends. The following expressions which fell from his lips, will give some idea of the manner of his praying:—"Heavenly Father, hear my prayer!" "Dear Jesus! spare me a little longer, if it is thy will; if not, take me to thy right hand!" After the first prayer, by his request, his father was called to his bedside, and while holding him by the hand, Horatio asked him, and other members of the family, to forgive him all his wrongs; and being assured he was forgiven, he said: "Then my Heavenly Father will forgive me!" Still holding his father's hand, he exhorted him, saying: "Be ready to meet me in heaven!" saying, "I have neglected this too long! I did not begin soon enough!" In his last prayer he prayed most earnestly to his Heavenly Father that he would have mercy and bless his earthly Father. While holding his dear and only brother, Henry, by the hand, who was about two years older, he said, "We shall play no more together!" referring, doubtless, to their playing in the band, as they were both members of it. While the two brothers still held each other by the hand, Henry said: "Horatio! what shall I do when you are gone?" The dying brother, with a clear and distinct voice, quickly replied: "Seek Jesus—seek a treasure in heaven!" In his last prayer, also, he prayed most earnestly for his brothers and sisters—three in number—and to show that he was perfectly sane, he said, "O my Heavenly Father, bless my sister Olive, who is not here! May she be converted and meet me in heaven!" He also spoke of the resurrection, and said to his friends that they would meet him there. A short time before death closed his mortal life, he said: "I hope I shall die easy." When reminded that his mother died easy, he replied: "I remember it well." After selecting the minister to attend his funeral, and making some other arrangements in relation to the same, he made his last and memorable prayer, and just before he closed, he said: "All is well!" Soon after this he raised his hand and said, "Glory!" A short pause ensued, and then three times he shouted—"Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Hallelujah!" These were the last words of Horatio H. Carr.

A discourse was delivered on the occasion by the writer, founded on 1 Cor. 15: 21–23:—

"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's, at his coming."

At the close of the services, the following hymn was read, and then played by the Band in the tune "Pleyel's Hymn"—it being a great favorite with the deceased:—

"Sinners, turn; why will ye die?
God, your Maker, asks you why—
God, who did your being give,
Made you with himself to live.

Sinners, turn; why will ye die?
Christ, your Savior, asks you why—
Will you not in him believe?
He has died that you might live.

Will you let him die in vain?
Crucify your Lord again?
Why, ye guilty sinners, why
Will ye slight his grace, and die?

Will ye not his grace receive?
Will ye still refuse to live?
O, ye dying sinners, why—
Why will ye forever die?"

The playing of this select and favorite piece, as a just tribute to the dead—while his instrument lay still upon the coffin—produced a scene most deeply affecting.

The dirge by the band, at the grave, was highly commendable, and its effect will not soon be forgotten.

"How short the race our friend has run,
Cut down in all his bloom;
The course but yesterday begun,
Now finished in the tomb!

Thou, joyous youth, hence learn how soon
Thy years may end their flight;
Long, long before life's brilliant noon
May come death's gloomy night.

To serve thy God no longer wait,
To-day his voice regard;
To-morrow mercy's open gate
May be forever barred."

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMER ARAGO.

New York, April 20.

Steamship Arago, from Southampton 7th inst., arrived here at one o'clock this morning.

TURKEY.

The news from the provinces of Turkey continues to speak of discontent and dissension, and that from the south and from Asia Minor is not much better. Constant street fights were taking place in different towns between the Christians and Mussulmans, and among the Christians themselves; Greeks were fighting with Catholics. In consequence the Pasha at Broussa, in Asia Minor, had ordered that all the Greeks were to leave the city in the space of two months. An earthquake had been felt at Smyrna.

AUSTRIAN ITALY.

The Cologne Gazette contains an article and a letter from Vienna, which appear to betray some little apprehension respecting the tranquility of the Lombard provinces. This letter from Vienna mentions a report, that the Archduke had sent in his resignation to the Emperor, on account of a demonstration made by the Milanese nobility offensive to his dignity.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Halifax, April 23, 11 1-2 A. M.

Steamship Canada, from Liverpool 10th inst., has arrived.

The European intelligence by this arrival possesses no feature of special interest.

Later intelligence from India, received at London, is under Bombay dates of March 18.

Previous to that date the British troops had made their grand attack on Lucknow, and the city had fallen. The rebels fled from their stronghold in the greatest disorder, and were hotly pursued by the British cavalry and artillery.

There was not much hard fighting at the capture, and the losses were light, the rebels making but a feeble resistance.

At the latest advices the whole city was in possession of the British.

There had been quite a panic in Calcutta, in consequence of a wide spread fear of an outbreak among the natives, but it turned out to have been unfounded.

There is nothing later from China.

A levy of French seamen from 21 to 40 years of age is going on in a most complete and strict manner. Instructions issued for carrying out this measure state that it is adopted with the object of giving the fleet seamen completely formed and experienced, and who are in full force of age and activity.

Domestic Summary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

[From the New York Independent.]

Kentucky.—Louisville.—The Spirit of God seems to be brooding over our city, and to have produced an unusual degree of tenderness and solemnity in all classes. Never since our residence in the city have we seen so fair a prospect for a general and thorough work of grace, as is now indicated.

Baltimore.—The union prayer meeting established by the Young Men's Christian Association has been largely attended and most delightful meetings have been enjoyed. Representatives from all denominations of christians were present.

Richmond, Va.—The Central Presbyterian says, "The meetings are conducted by laymen, and christians of all evangelical denominations participate in the exercises. A stranger entering the Hall would not suspect, from any thing seen or heard, that all present did not belong to the same communion. These exhibitions of true christian unity are most refreshing. The effect of these daily assemblages of the people of God has been to increase their affection for one another, and to awaken an intenser desire for the conversion of the impenitent."

Charleston, S. C.—The Southern Presbyterian says, "Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, and Presbyterians, all engaged in united prayer for God's reviving grace."

Wilmington, N. C.—Crowded meetings have been held daily in the Front-street Baptist church. Christians of all denominations attend, offer prayer, give a word of exhortation, and make brief statements of interesting occurrences in other places. Prayer meetings are held also in the churches, at 10 A. M., 12 M., and 4 P. M., and services in nearly all of the churches at night. There have been many conversions in all the congregations, and the houses are crowded with anxious listeners. The oldest men in the place never saw the like before. All look on with amazement, and say, "Truly the Lord is in this place." All classes are embraced in the work; and there is "great joy with this people."

From the North.—A correspondent of the Albany Journal, writing from Keeseville, on the 3d inst., says: "All classes feel the power of the revival—printers, mechanics, clerks, farmers, and business men generally. The work is spreading."

In Yates county there have been more than 1,000 conversions. In Penn Yan nearly 300. The work never was so general and so free from all excitement.

Auburn.—The Advertiser of the 25th of March says that the revival in Auburn continues with undiminished vigor in all the churches in the city. The "oldest citizens" have never witnessed a more general religious interest than is now manifested. This interest does not seem to be spasmodic excitement, but proceeds from a deep thoughtfulness and attention to the subject of religion. There is a union of effort and hearty co-operation on the part of members of all denominations.

Buffalo.—We are in the midst of a religious revival, more wide-spread in its effects, and more earnest in its efforts, than any we recollect in the city. A universal feeling appears to be aroused on the subject of religion. Clubs have been broken up, and parties indefinitely postponed in consequence. The work of the revival is not confined to one particular class, but from the highest to the lowest, and of all classes. They unite in religious ceremonies and exercises daily and nightly.

The Greenfield Democrat of last week says, "The union prayer meetings in this village were fully attended last week, and continued highly interesting in their character. On Sunday the Congregationalists, Baptists, and Methodists united in religious services in the forenoon at the Brick church, and in the afternoon and evening in Washington Hall.

The Congregationalist mentions the following particulars: "For the last two weeks the increasingly marked features of the revival in New Bedford are the outspeaking of old silent disciples, a profounder spirit of tenderness and prayer, the conversion of some men of much influence, and the attendance at prayer meetings of many persons who, until recently, would have proudly and unbelievingly scorned to attend.

Maine.—Nearly all the churches in Portland are understood to have shared more or less largely in the recent outpouring of divine influence. The night police devote to prayer the half hour at midnight, which is granted them for refreshment at the station-house. Several conversions have occurred.

The Revival Spreading to Canada.—There is reason to believe that the blessing so richly bestowed upon American churches will now be imparted to us also. Daily prayer-meetings are held in Montreal, London, and Brantford, and this week one has been commenced in Toronto.

Says the Independent,—The present revival of religion has done more to develop and concentrate the actual unity of Christ's disciples, than any event since the formation of the American Bible Society.

At the prayer meeting at the Old South Chapel, Tuesday morning, April 2, it was stated that a rumseller was disposing of his stock, because he could not get religion and sell rum at the same time. Another gentleman spoke of his efforts, in connection with others, among the abandoned in the "Black Sea." They went forth as missionaries and found rumsellers and abandoned women ready to listen. It was stated by another gentleman that the deaf and dumb were having prayer meetings. Thirty-five of them meet together once a week, and several of them have been converted.

This week public services are held in the Julian Theatre, Dubuque, Iowa, with preaching every evening by the various evangelical ministers in rotation, all taking their turns. It is hoped thus to reach some who do not visit the churches, and the experiment promises well. The house was well filled and would doubtless be crowded. Union prayer meetings were held every morning in the Congregational church, and largely attended and sustained with interest.

Connecticut.—The Religious Herald reports an advancing state of the revival at Hartford. The Methodist Presiding Elder of the Hartford District, stated in a religious meeting a few evenings since, that of the forty-eight churches under his charge, forty-four of them were blessed with revivals.

St. Louis, Mo.—The businessmen's prayer meeting has been transferred to the Mercantile Library Hall, the largest in the city, and on Monday one thousand persons were supposed to be present.

The World's Crisis

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY BELIEVERS IN THE Immediate Coming of Jesus Christ.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE.

HENRY V. DAVIS, JOHN COUCH, | MILES GRANT, GEO. T. ADAMS.

J. H. TURNER, PRINTER.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION

TO BE PAID IN ADVANCE.

For a single copy one year	$[illegible]
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	[illegible]
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address for 6 months,	15.00
Thirty copies to one address for 6 months,	[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability when sending in the amount of their subscription, should send us as much in addition to their subscription as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private. Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis. Over all business matters write Business.

the cheeks. Eminent medical men attribute the great increase among women of neuralgia, tic-doloreux, loss of sight, and great suffering in the ear, to this fashion of excessively small bonnets, which dress the neck instead of the head.

From Bro. I. C. Wellcome.

Bro. Grant:—I perceive you are quite in earnest that all writers for the Crisis should sign their real names. Well, this may be the best way. I never have an objection to my work appearing over my own name, only because I make such poor work of it I sometimes feel some shame to see my articles after they are in print. So I will now conform to your wish by owning up for the past and going along better for the future. I wrote the articles under the captions, "Duty of Husbands to Wives," "Duty of Wives to Husbands," "Duty of Parents to Children," "Duty of Children to Parents," "Notes by the Way," "Musings of an Evangelist." If any others I do not recollect.

Now let the others own up, and if our articles are always read with more interest when our own names are attached to them, we shall make the reflections of those who have read more interesting to them. May be I shall not endorse the sentiment that it is always best to sign our names to all we write. If a thing is worth saying, and is well said, it matters but little who says it. The thought is what we want. But enough on that point. I know that when I read a good thing, or a bad thing, I always wish I knew who did that.

Don't neglect to write now, brethren and sisters, and tell us the best you have and add your names. Your brother in Christ, still looking for him,

I. C. Wellcome.

Brunswick, Me., April, 1858.

From Bro. P. S. W. Deyo.

Bro. Grant:—I have been trying to do all I could for the cause of my Master in the West. Through the blessing of God fifty have obeyed the form of doctrine delivered to them—which was, "Know ye not, that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death? . . . For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Rom. 6 : 3, 5. Others will soon follow. The church now numbers sixty.

Brethren, the gospel has the same effect that it always has had. I still feel encouraged to handle the sword of the Spirit, and may we all do so with meekness and godly fear. It is good to get once more where we can see our old friend—the Crisis, which is laden with light, and warm epistles. May our hearts be seasoned with grace. I believe the duty of the church is to daily look for the Lord. I firmly believe that we are between the midnight and morning, and soon we shall see the King in his beauty. Thus far let us also be ready, for in such an hour as we think not the Son of man cometh. Even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Your brother waiting for redemption,

Peter S. W. Deyo.

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited te contribute to the fund whether they are subscribers or not.

There are no persons who make so large a demand on the reason of others as those who have no reason of their own.

Obituary.

At East Weare, Feb. 26th, Horatio Hillard Carr, son of Aaron Carr, in the 23d year of his age.

His disease was inflammation of the bowels and subsequent mortification, occasioned by excessive lifting. His sickness was of few days, but very distressing, except a short time before his death.

Horatio H. Carr was a young man of much promise; and by a kind and sympathetic heart had gathered around him a large circle of endeared friends, as the vast concourse which assembled on the day of his funeral, with weeping eyes and sympathizing hearts, bore decisive testimony. The funeral was attended at the residence of his father, and although he was buried some two miles away, yet the procession that accompanied him to his grave was nearly a quarter of a mile in length. The South Weare Cornet Band, of which young Carr was a worthy member and second leader, accompanied their departed friend to his solitary resting-place, till the voice of Jesus shall awake the dead! His relatives and friends most deeply feel their loss; but his peaceful, happy death gave such unmistakable evidence of his acceptance by his Savior that it adds great comfort to their otherwise afflicted hearts.

Previous to a narrative of Horatio's last hours, we notice his recent interest in the study of the sacred Scriptures. Some two years since an aged and Christian friend of his, gave him a copy of the New Testament; with an ardent wish that he would carry it with him and profit by its perusal. By an examination of this Testament it is evident that it was not bestowed in vain. Some three or four days before his death, a friend was examining this precious volume in the room where the sick man lay. When he discovered his young Christian friend reading, he said "Are you reading something good?" His friend replied, "I am looking at a verse I found marked;" and going to him, she pointed to Matt. 11 : 29, saying, "Horatio, did you mark that?" He replied, "I did!" Said his friend, "Do you feel that?" He said, "I do!" The passage reads thus:—"Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." This verse was entirely enclosed with pencil mark. We will give one more verse enclosed in the same manner: "Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh unto you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double minded." James 4 : 8. These passages gave an idea of the state of his mind before he was taken sick, although he had not yet given his heart to God, as the following narrative will clearly show:—

Wednesday, the 24th, two days before his death, he tried to pray, but remarked to his sister, who had the principal charge of him, "I fear it will do no good!"

On Thursday he said to his sister, "I feel very happy; I feel as though some one was watching over me beside my earthly friends!" Pausing again, he said, "If I am spared to get well, I shall travel an entirely different road from what I have travelled!" After this he requested his sister to open the blinds, and as the light broke into the room, he said, "O, how beautiful every thing looks—don't it?" and then added: "I am about to close my eyes on these beautiful scenes, but I shall soon open them again on scenes that will look more beautiful than they do here!"

Friday morning at an early hour, it was evident that Horatio H. Carr was dying! and during the last three or four hours of his life, he offered to his Heavenly Father and Savior three most fervent prayers, that were audible, for himself and his friends. The following expressions which fell from his lips, will give some idea of the manner of his praying:—"Heavenly Father, hear my prayer!" "Dear Jesus! spare me a little longer, if it is thy will; if not, take me to thy right hand!" After the first prayer, by his request, his father was called to his bedside, and while holding him by the hand, Horatio asked him, and other members of the family, to forgive him all his wrongs; and being assured he was forgiven, he said: "Then my Heavenly Father will forgive me!" Still holding his father's hand, he exhorted him, saying: "Be ready to meet me in heaven!" saying, "I have neglected this too long! I did not begin soon enough!" In his last prayer he prayed most earnestly to his Heavenly Father that he would have mercy and bless his earthly Father. While holding his dear and only brother, Henry, by the hand, who was about two years older, he said, "We shall play no more together!" referring, doubtless, to their playing in the band, as they were both members of it. While the two brothers still held each other by the hand, Henry said: "Horatio! what shall I do when you are gone?" The dying brother, with a clear and distinct voice, quickly replied: "Seek Jesus—seek a treasure in heaven!" In his last prayer, also, he prayed most earnestly for his brothers and sisters—three in number—and to show that he was perfectly sane, he said, "O my Heavenly Father, bless my sister Olive, who is not here! May she be converted and meet me in heaven!" He also spoke of the resurrection, and said to his friends that they would meet him there. A short time before death closed his mortal life, he said: "I hope I shall die easy." When reminded that his mother died easy, he replied: "I remember it well." After selecting the minister to attend his funeral, and making some other arrangements in relation to the same, he made his last and memorable prayer, and just before he closed, he said: "All is well!" Soon after this he raised his hand and said, "Glory!" A short pause ensued, and then three times he shouted—"Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Hallelujah!" These were the last words of Horatio H. Carr.

A discourse was delivered on the occasion by the writer, founded on 1 Cor. 15: 21–23:—

"For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead.

For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's, at his coming."

At the close of the services, the following hymn was read, and then played by the Band in the tune "Pleyel's Hymn"—it being a great favorite with the deceased:—

"Sinners, turn; why will ye die?
God, your Maker, asks you why—
God, who did your being give,
Made you with himself to live.

Sinners, turn; why will ye die?
Christ, your Savior, asks you why—
Will you not in him believe?
He has died that you might live.

Will you let him die in vain?
Crucify your Lord again?
Why, ye guilty sinners, why
Will ye slight his grace, and die?

Will ye not his grace receive?
Will ye still refuse to live?
O, ye dying sinners, why—
Why will ye forever die?"

The playing of this select and favorite piece, as a just tribute to the dead—while his instrument lay still upon the coffin—produced a scene most deeply affecting.

The dirge by the band, at the grave, was highly commendable, and its effect will not soon be forgotten.

"How short the race our friend has run,
Cut down in all his bloom;
The course but yesterday begun,
Now finished in the tomb!

Thou, joyous youth, hence learn how soon
Thy years may end their flight;
Long, long before life's brilliant noon
May come death's gloomy night.

To serve thy God no longer wait,
To-day his voice regard;
To-morrow mercy's open gate
May be forever barred."

Foreign News.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMER ARAGO.

New York, April 20.

Steamship Arago, from Southampton 7th inst., arrived here at one o'clock this morning.

TURKEY.

The news from the provinces of Turkey continues to speak of discontent and dissension, and that from the south and from Asia Minor is not much better. Constant street fights were taking place in different towns between the Christians and Mussulmans, and among the Christians themselves; Greeks were fighting with Catholics. In consequence the Pasha at Broussa, in Asia Minor, had ordered that all the Greeks were to leave the city in the space of two months. An earthquake had been felt at Smyrna.

AUSTRIAN ITALY.

The Cologne Gazette contains an article and a letter from Vienna, which appear to betray some little apprehension respecting the tranquility of the Lombard provinces. This letter from Vienna mentions a report, that the Archduke had sent in his resignation to the Emperor, on account of a demonstration made by the Milanese nobility offensive to his dignity.

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Halifax, April 23, 11 1-2 A. M.

Steamship Canada, from Liverpool 10th inst., has arrived.

The European intelligence by this arrival possesses no feature of special interest.

Later intelligence from India, received at London, is under Bombay dates of March 18.

Previous to that date the British troops had made their grand attack on Lucknow, and the city had fallen. The rebels fled from their stronghold in the greatest disorder, and were hotly pursued by the British cavalry and artillery.

There was not much hard fighting at the capture, and the losses were light, the rebels making but a feeble resistance.

At the latest advices the whole city was in possession of the British.

There had been quite a panic in Calcutta, in consequence of a wide spread fear of an outbreak among the natives, but it turned out to have been unfounded.

There is nothing later from China.

A levy of French seamen from 21 to 40 years of age is going on in a most complete and strict manner. Instructions issued for carrying out this measure state that it is adopted with the object of giving the fleet seamen completely formed and experienced, and who are in full force of age and activity.

Domestic Summary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

[From the New York Independent.]

Kentucky.—Louisville.—The Spirit of God seems to be brooding over our city, and to have produced an unusual degree of tenderness and solemnity in all classes. Never since our residence in the city have we seen so fair a prospect for a general and thorough work of grace, as is now indicated.

Baltimore.—The union prayer meeting established by the Young Men's Christian Association has been largely attended and most delightful meetings have been enjoyed. Representatives from all denominations of christians were present.

Richmond, Va.—The Central Presbyterian says, "The meetings are conducted by laymen, and christians of all evangelical denominations participate in the exercises. A stranger entering the Hall would not suspect, from any thing seen or heard, that all present did not belong to the same communion. These exhibitions of true christian unity are most refreshing. The effect of these daily assemblages of the people of God has been to increase their affection for one another, and to awaken an intenser desire for the conversion of the impenitent."

Charleston, S. C.—The Southern Presbyterian says, "Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, and Presbyterians, all engaged in united prayer for God's reviving grace."

Wilmington, N. C.—Crowded meetings have been held daily in the Front-street Baptist church. Christians of all denominations attend, offer prayer, give a word of exhortation, and make brief statements of interesting occurrences in other places. Prayer meetings are held also in the churches, at 10 A. M., 12 M., and 4 P. M., and services in nearly all of the churches at night. There have been many conversions in all the congregations, and the houses are crowded with anxious listeners. The oldest men in the place never saw the like before. All look on with amazement, and say, "Truly the Lord is in this place." All classes are embraced in the work; and there is "great joy with this people."

From the North.—A correspondent of the Albany Journal, writing from Keeseville, on the 3d inst., says: "All classes feel the power of the revival—printers, mechanics, clerks, farmers, and business men generally. The work is spreading."

In Yates county there have been more than 1,000 conversions. In Penn Yan nearly 300. The work never was so general and so free from all excitement.

Auburn.—The Advertiser of the 25th of March says that the revival in Auburn continues with undiminished vigor in all the churches in the city. The "oldest citizens" have never witnessed a more general religious interest than is now manifested. This interest does not seem to be spasmodic excitement, but proceeds from a deep thoughtfulness and attention to the subject of religion. There is a union of effort and hearty co-operation on the part of members of all denominations.

Buffalo.—We are in the midst of a religious revival, more wide-spread in its effects, and more earnest in its efforts, than any we recollect in the city. A universal feeling appears to be aroused on the subject of religion. Clubs have been broken up, and parties indefinitely postponed in consequence. The work of the revival is not confined to one particular class, but from the highest to the lowest, and of all classes. They unite in religious ceremonies and exercises daily and nightly.

The Greenfield Democrat of last week says, "The union prayer meetings in this village were fully attended last week, and continued highly interesting in their character. On Sunday the Congregationalists, Baptists, and Methodists united in religious services in the forenoon at the Brick church, and in the afternoon and evening in Washington Hall."

The Congregationalist mentions the following particulars: "For the last two weeks the increasingly marked features of the revival in New Bedford are the outspeaking of old silent disciples, a profounder spirit of tenderness and prayer, the conversion of some men of much influence, and the attendance at prayer meetings of many persons who, until recently, would have proudly and unbelievingly scorned to attend."

Maine.—Nearly all the churches in Portland are understood to have shared more or less largely in the recent outpouring of divine influence. The night police devote to prayer the half hour at midnight, which is granted them for refreshment at the station-house. Several conversions have occurred.

The Revival Spreading to Canada.—There is reason to believe that the blessing so richly bestowed upon American churches will now be imparted to us also. Daily prayer-meetings are held in Montreal, London, and Brantford, and this week one has been commenced in Toronto.

Says the Independent,—The present revival of religion has done more to develop and concentrate the actual unity of Christ's disciples, than any event since the formation of the American Bible Society.

At the prayer meeting at the Old South Chapel, Tuesday morning, April 2, it was stated that a rumseller was disposing of his stock, because he could not get religion and sell rum at the same time. Another gentleman spoke of his efforts, in connection with others, among the abandoned in the "Black Sea." They went forth as missionaries and found rumsellers and abandoned women ready to listen. It was stated by another gentleman that the deaf and dumb were having prayer meetings. Thirty-five of them meet together once a week, and several of them have been converted.

This week public services are held in the Julian Theatre, Dubuque, Iowa, with preaching every evening by the various evangelical ministers in rotation, all taking their turns. It is hoped thus to reach some who do not visit the churches, and the experiment promises well. The house was well filled and would doubtless be crowded. Union prayer meetings were held every morning in the Congregational church, and largely attended and sustained with interest.

Connecticut.—The Religious Herald reports an advancing state of the revival at Hartford. The Methodist Presiding Elder of the Hartford District, stated in a religious meeting a few evenings since, that of the forty-eight churches under his charge, forty-four of them were blessed with revivals.

St. Louis, Mo.—The business men's prayer meeting has been transferred to the Mercantile Library Hall, the largest in the city, and on Monday one thousand persons were supposed to be present.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn., that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

There will be a Conference holden on the 2d Saturday of each month, in Orrington, Me., at the Advent Chapel. Brethren in the ministry will please remember these meetings.

For the Crisis.

THEY'LL RISE AGAIN.

Mother, weeping at the tomb,
O'er thy lost one's faded bloom,—
Weeping o'er the tender dead,—
Cherished hopes so quickly sped,—
Mother, cheer thy heart forlorn,
He'll arise when comes the dawn.

Sister, mournest thou in grief
O'er thy brother's life so brief?
Sighing oft for his return—
Doth his form in dreams discern?
Cease thy tears their bitter flow,
He'll awake in the morning's glow.

Husband, faded is the life
That so cheered thee 'mid earth's strife,
Cheered thee 'mid the gloom of years,
Blending sunshine with thy fears?
Calmly hush thy tearful strain,
Her thou'lt greet in life again.

Children, mourn ye parents dead?
Mourn ye o'er the love that's fled,
That no longer soothes your way,
Darkly gone without its ray?
Cheer you, ever hoping on
To greet them when breaks the dawn.

They'll awake, the loved ones dear,
When the morning, bright and clear,
Ushers in the endless day,
Whose light ne'er to Death gives away.
Then they'll rise, the good of earth,
Quickened by immortal birth.

Cheering, thrilling hope is this,
That so gladdeneth life with bliss;
Blessed boon to mortals giv'n,
Lighting up the path to heav'n
With a splendor passing bright,
E'er to cheer the pilgrim's night.

Christ the Hope of the Church.

"Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord."

During the long period of time through which the church has been borne since the above language was uttered, changed and varied have been her circumstances. Short and scattering have been her seasons of prosperity. Her night of weeping has been long and weary; yet her course has been steadily onward as the spouse of Christ; and though many difficulties have been thrown in her pathway, hitherto she has surmounted them all; and a miraculous providence it is that the church maintains her identity to-day, while the four great Empires of earth, all of which were hostile to her interests, have risen, swayed the sceptre of universal government, and in spite of the fostering care of human legislation, have waned, and finally become extinct.

We ask, while so fearfully in the minority as the church has been as to numbers, and with so many drawn swords grasped by the hand of her powerful foes pointing at her from every quarter, why has she not, like the Amalekites, been blotted out from under heaven,—or like the Idumeans been wasted by her enemies until her name should be forgotten? It is because He that liveth forever, the high and lofty one who inhabiteth eternity, has rebuked kings for the sake of his people, saying, "Touch not mine anointed and do my prophets no harm."

To the church, God has made a disclosure of the divine character and purpose. In this revelation is clearly brought to view the work and calling of his people; but not without the fact stated that while attending to their Master's business they will be mocked by the pride of earth and loaded with the anathemas of those who usurp the government of the world. Hence their dependence on him who hath said, "Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord."

While glancing at the past, we discover that every age of time brings with it an appropriate work for the church, together with certain obstacles to be surmounted. The duties devolving upon Abraham were that he should quit his father's house and country and under the divine guidance become the founder of a system of worship divine and heavenly in its nature, and thus lift up a standard against the system of Polytheism then coming in upon the infant nations of the earth; and by obeying the heavenly mandate, he became the friend of God. In order that the Amorites might have an opportunity of filling their cups of iniquity, and God make an exhibition of his sovereign power, the children of Israel must be in bondage to the idolatrous nation of the Egyptians, and Moses raised up and in a miraculous manner preserved to become under the divine Being the deliverer and great legislator of that nation. After a forty years' pilgrimage in the wilderness, Joshua must lead on in the van of the host, and drive out those seven nations and divide to each tribe their lot of inheritance. For four hundred and fifty years the government was administered by judges unto Samuel the prophet, at which time they waxed into a kingdom.

Under the administration of their kingly form of government they often became rebellious, conforming in their worship to the idolatry of the heathen, and were sharply reproved by the Lord early sending his prophets unto them. Thus things continued until they were carried into captivity, when their independence ceased. The predicted captivity having expired, a return was required. But the captives, on reaching their native country, were filled with mourning and lamentation. Wasteness stared them in the face from every quarter. Their once beautiful city in ruin—their sanctuary desolate—its altars broken down. Now here is a work to be done, and difficulties attending its accomplishment. The city and sanctuary is to be restored to its former magnificence and grandeur, but foes are all around,—the trowel must be worked by one hand and the sword grasped by the other. Proposals were first made by Sanballat and Tobias to negotiate, but that policy not succeeding next came their threats of extermination. How applicable the words of the prophet proceeding from him who watches over his people to do them good, while so arduous a work was before them and nothing but threatened ruin staring them in the face from those that would swallow them up;—"Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit."

From this point let the mind pass down the stream of time to the advent of the Messiah. At this time the Roman world, though blessed with universal peace, was enveloped in the darkness of heathenism, and the Jewish church was divided into sects, the most prominent of which were the Pharisees, the Sadducees, and the Essenees.

With all, except a remnant who were looking and waiting for the consolation of Israel, religion and the worship of God was barely a nominal thing. In keeping with an impression which at this time seemed to pervade all minds, that some uncommon event was about to transpire, amid the moral gloom which hung like dark drapery about every nation, a star of uncommon radiance was seen resting o'er Bethlehem's manger. The silence of midnight was broken by music unearthly, such as never before greeted a shepherd's ear. It was the sweet chorus of the angel band chosen for the important occasion, the echo of which will be responded to by the church until the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ shall burst o'er all the earth. This marked the dawning of a new era.

The birth of the Prince of the kings of the earth is announced, and as he reclines upon the arm of the blessed virgin, an edict is issued from the throne of the Eternal;—"Let all the angels of God worship him!" His mission to earth was one of importance. He came to break the iron rule of Satanic usurpation,—to war with the prince of the power of the air,—to redeem this world which once as a gem had a place in heaven's great casket, but fell into the hands of an adversary who marred it, and to restore it to the family of glorified worlds when the morning stars will sing again and all the sons of God will shout aloud for joy. The panoply of Jesus of Nazareth was the fulness of the Spirit. In him all fulness dwelt. He was anointed with the Holy Ghost. He had the Spirit without measure. His contests were not physical, but moral; hence it was not by the might of human arm nor military power that he conquered, but by the Spirit of the living God. When he became the captive of death, and was locked up in the enemy's prison-house, he was quickened by the Spirit. It was by the mighty power of God he was raised from the dead.

The war that was waged against Satan and his hosts by the Captain of our salvation is to be prosecuted by his people. If so, the same divine unction the Son of God possessed, is needful to be imparted to them.

It is by the indwellings of the divine Spirit the church is to gain a victory over all her foes. It is by the power of the spirit of faith she is to be kept until her salvation is revealed in the last time. It is by the Spirit she is sealed unto the day of redemption. It is by the Spirit her banished ones, locked up in death's charnel house, are to be quickened and gathered from the east, west, north and south, to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God.

Well might the Savior say, "Without me ye can do nothing;" and with equal propriety could Paul say, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." Truly the Lord is the might of his people. And as the battle rages, waxing hotter and hotter, and we are on the very eve of victory, with what firmness should we grasp our sword and shield, and resist the last assaults of the devil, who is now mustering all his forces for a grand rally, heeding the word of command as it comes from Him who will judge and make war, and fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

Glory to God! victory belongs to the church, though she has been scattered in a dark and cloudy day, and for a small season it would seem God had hid his face from her; yet his word of promise cannot fail. With everlasting mercy he will gather her.

O time! speed on the blessed consummation of this world's history, when we shall no more have occasion to weep over the wrecks of earth; when our hearts will no more break o'er suffering humanity, or the unconscious clay of loved ones; when the reign of death will cease, and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their head; when they shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen.

LINES.

How deeply grieved I've been to see
God's children so divided be;
One bears a name, but not the other—
This builds a wall—they can't say "brother!"
How oft I've seen the painful sight,
Friendship towards one,—another, slight,—
When side by side each other stood
And each were equally as good;
A smile for one with outstretched hand,
The other must unnoticed stand.
And what's the cause of all this wrong?
Why both to one church don't belong!
O cast away sectarian pride,
Let christian love your actions guide;
Be kind and courteous unto all,
To high and low, to great and small.
By being so perhaps you'll win
Some soul that's now a slave to sin.
Don't think me harsh, I'm only plain,—
O what's an empty, empty name?
Don't let a name our union part,
If we are Christ's we're one in heart.
He who his steps doth heavenward bend,
Why he's my brother, he's my friend;
No matter by what name he's call'd,
Or if he has no name at all.

Practical Faith.

THE people of God, the people who love him and have faith in him and in his promises, who love his present truth however unpopular it may be, and who are not afraid to speak the whole truth, are a proselyting people; for the truth is a proselyting, a conquering principle, and is effectual even though its advocates be a people who are "everywhere spoken against," "falsely," for its Author's sake. And the people of God, too, have the gift of proselyting, which is "the gift of the Holy Ghost." And they have the means of proselyting freely; for the means by which true converts are made is by the dispensing of that wisdom that "cometh from above," which if any of our teachers, or others, "lack," they can be supplied "liberally," according to James, by simply asking "of God." There is no good or true reason why God should not bless the efforts of a particular sect, even though public opinion be against them. Public opinion was against the disciples on the day of Pentecost; but, notwithstanding, thousands were proselyted to the cause of Christ. All that is needed is to have practical FAITH in God, then "whatsoever" is asked will be received.

Let public opinion be ever so arrogant, a people having the truth need not quail before it. If they will but cultivate the stern will of a Luther, that does not hesitate to enter the temple of error and dash the glittering idols of a heathenish multitude before its astonished gaze, they will triumph over all foes, through the grace of the Captain of their salvation.

To win proselytes to any great reform, it requires men of fixed principle, combining confidence, without boastfulness—boldness, without raillery—earnestness, without bigotry—uncompromising truthfulness—unwavering faith in the principles they advocate—a contempt for the opinion of the multitude, and an earnest desire to please the Deity. With these requisites you will make proselytes to the cause in which you are engaged, though it be ever so "despised" by popular sentiment.

Choice Selections.

Directions to Persons just commencing a Religious Life.

The following is from an interesting little work, published by Gould & Lincoln, 59 Washington St., Boston. Price—single copy 6 cents; per dozen, 60 cts., post paid.

1. Remember that the commencement of the christian life is to be like the "dawning light, which increaseth more and more to the perfect day." Therefore, when the hope of peace and pardon dawns in the heart, do not consider the great business of life as accomplished, but only as begun.

2. Do not expect so sudden and remarkable a change, as to leave no doubt of its reality. Did religion enter the soul in perfection, and to the entire exclusion of sin, the change would be so marked and obvious as to leave no room for doubt. But, usually, the christian character is full of contradiction. There is a perpetual struggle between good and evil, and thus a continual competition of evidence for and against, according as the good or evil prevails.

3. Evidence of piety is not so much to be sought in high emotions of any kind, as in real humility, self-distrust, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, sorrow for sin, and a continual effort, in every-day life, to regulate our thoughts, feelings and conduct by the word of God. It is the nature and not the degree of our affections which is to be regarded in the examination of our evidences. Some persons are so constituted, that they are not susceptible of very strong emotions, and ought not to expect them, in reference to religion, any more than other subjects that interest the mind. The best way to know our feelings is, to see how they influence the conduct. "By their fruit ye shall know them."

4. Do not expect to find in your own case, every thing you have heard or read of in the experience of others. For, it may be, many things we hear and read of, are not correct feelings, and do not afford just grounds of confidence to any one; and if they are correct experience, it may be the experience of a mature christian, and not to be expected in the beginning of a religious life. It must be remembered that as no two countenances are formed alike, so no two hearts are fashioned alike, or placed in exactly the same circumstances; and it would be as vain to seek all the varieties of christian experience in one person, as to seek all the varieties of human features in one face.

5. Do not expect that the evidence desired will all come immediately and at once. It must come progressively, as the result of continued effort in obedience to the will of God.

6. Do not suppose that religion is a principle of such self-preserving energy, as that when once implanted in the soul it will continue to thrive and increase without effort. The plant of divine grace can no more thrive without care, and diligent and patient cultivation, than can those rare and valued plants, that demand the physical efforts and culture of man.

God will not sustain and bring to maturity the work of grace, without your own voluntary concurrence in the diligent use of means. He will not do it any more than he would cause the harvest to whiten in the field of the sluggard. Indulge, therefore, no such ideas of inability and dependence on God, as shall impair a full sense of perfect obligation to do whatever can be done in working out your own salvation. God never assists any but those who make efforts to aid and advance themselves.

7. Entertain no such ideas of the sovereignty of God in the bestowment of his grace, as would awaken any doubt of his affording needful aid, where he sees sincere endeavors to grow in grace. If some christians are more eminent than others, it is simply because they make more efforts to be so, and God aids these efforts. So that all worldly-minded and indifferent christians continue in this state, because they do not choose to make efforts to get out of it. Any person can be an eminent christian that chooses to be so. Christians are too apt to feel as if eminence in piety was a distinction made by the sovereignty of God, and to suppose that high attainments are not within the reach of all, and that languid and inefficient piety is the result of divine sovereignty rather than negligence and sloth. A more false or more pernicious opinion cannot easily be adopted by christians. The truth is, that the road to eminence in gifts and graces, and the means of obtaining them, are open to all who seek them, and if any do not obtain them, it is owing to their own sloth and inefficiency, and not to any deficiency on the part of God in blessing diligent efforts. It always pleases him to crown with success the hand of the diligent instead of the hand of the slothful, not only in temporal but in spiritual things. This thought cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of those who are just commencing a christian life. To them, peculiarly, are such promises as these directed: "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Every one that asketh receiveth," &c.

Do not be afraid of indulging in feelings which may seem to be right, from the fear of deception. On the contrary, cherish such feelings, and try to recall them often. Go forward and do your duty, and God will save you from deception while thus employed.

8. There is one caution which is peculiarly needful to those who have been greatly interested in the subject of religion, and that is, to take particular care of the health.

There is such a mysterious and intimate connection between the mind and the body, that one cannot be wearied or suffer, without affecting the other. When the mind is fatigued or exhausted, it affects the body, and this again reacts on the mind.

Every person ought to be aware, that the more anxiously and intensely the mind is interested on any subject, the greater is the need of exercise, sleep and frequent relaxation. Attention to religion does not demand that all lawful business be suspended, and forbid the neglect of all needful rest and exercise.

9. Do not expect to be made happy by religion, unless you become eminent christians. A half-way christian can neither enjoy the pleasures of the world nor the pleasures of religion; for his conscience will not let him seek the one, and he is too indolent to obtain the other. The christian may be the happiest man on earth, but he must be a faithful, active and devoted christian. None are disappointed in finding religion a source of unfailing peace and joy, but those who refuse to drink deep of the wells of salvation; unless we except those who, from some derangement of the nervous system, or failure of health, do not enjoy the clear and undisturbed exercise of their faculties. A healthy mind in a healthy body, may always be made happy by religion.

10. Do not look at the practice and example of other christians, in forming the standard of piety at which you aim. The allowance of this thing has probably had a more disastrous influence on the church and on the world, than all other causes that could be named. Generally, when persons commence a christian life, their consciences are susceptible and tender. They are strict and watchful in the performance of duty, and are pained even by a slight neglect. They have been wont to feel that becoming religious implies a great change; that "old things must pass away and all things become new." But when they begin to look around among their christian friends, and turn to them for aid, as those who have had experience and have made advances in christian life, they find that they seem to look upon duties and deficiences in a very different manner. They seem to neglect many things which the young christian has felt to be very important; and to practice many things which he had supposed to be inconsistent with religion. Then commences the disastrous effect. The young christian begins to feel that he need not be more particular than those to whom he has ever looked up with deference and respect. He begins to imagine that he has been rather too strict and particular. He begins to take a retrograde course; and though his conscience and the Bible often check and reprove, yet, after a few inefficient struggles, he lowers his standard and walks as others do.

Look into your Bible, and see how christians ought to live. See how the Bible says those who are christians must live, and then, if you find your christian friends living in a different way, instead of having cause for feeling that you may do so too, you have only cause to fear that they are deceiving themselves with the belief that they are christians, when they are not. Remember that the farther your christian friends depart from the standard of christian character laid down in the Bible, the less reason have you to hope that they are christians. And do not hesitate on this subject because you find many professed christians who are indifferent and lax in their practice and example. Remember that Christ has said, "Many shall say unto me, in that day, Lord, Lord," thus claiming to be his disciples, to whom he will say, "I never knew you." Do not let professed christians tempt you to fall into the society of such unhappy cast-aways.

Extravagance in Dress.

One of the most serious evils that exist in society at the present time, and one that has had a great tendency to bring about financial crises, bankruptcies, defalcations, mercantile dishonor, and a withdrawal of that confidence, without which the wheels of commerce are clogged, and the course of trade impeded, is the insane passion for dress and gaudy ornaments which is manifested by a class of American ladies, and is fostered by their husbands and fathers. The evil has come to be of such magnitude, the press everywhere is lifting up its voice against it. May it be potential in arresting the attention of ladies, and lead them to a thorough reform—a reform which may save their husbands and fathers from bankruptcy, and haply from guilt; which may be made by them without sacrifice; which will add to their attractions by taking from their meretricious ornaments, and which will promote their peace of mind.

The sad history of mercantile disaster, and dishonesty in high places, which the history of the past few years has disclosed, is full of warning, if it is not also of reproach, to those ladies who have lived beyond the most ample means to gratify a vanity which is unworthy of them. Ladies make a great mistake when they suppose they add to their charms by vieing with the plumage of the gaudiest bird in their apparel.

"To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess."

But these are no more wasteful or ridiculous than for women to pile the price of a year's income upon their backs. We once knew a man who called upon us, his countenance beaming with pleasure, to exhibit a wonderful invention of his own. He produced a boquet of rare and beautiful flowers, which he had liberally spangled with gold and silver leaf. To the lover of nature and the beauties of the garden, nothing could be more repulsive. We look upon a superfluity of dress and ornaments on a woman with much the same feeling. "Loveliness needs not the foreign aid of ornaments, but is, when unadorned, adorned the most."—Golden Rule.

A Child's Faith.

A beloved minister of the gospel was one day speaking of that active, living faith, which should at all times cheer the heart of the sincere follower of Jesus, and related to me a beautiful illustration, that had just occurred in his own family.

He had gone into a cellar, which in winter was quite dark, and entered by a trap door. A little daughter, only three years old, was trying to find him, and came to the trap door, but on looking down, all was dark, dark—and she called, "Are you down cellar, papa?"

"Yes, would you like to come, Mary?"

"It is dark. I can't come, papa."

"Well, my daughter, I am right below you, and I can see you though you cannot see me, and if you will drop yourself I will catch you."

"Oh! I should fall; I can't see you, papa."

"I know it," he answered, "but I am really here, and you shall not fall or hurt yourself. If you will jump, I will catch you safely."

Little Mary strained her eyes to the utmost, but she could catch no glimpse of her father. She hesitated, then advanced a little further, then, summoning all her resolution, she threw herself forward, and was received safely in her father's arms.

A few days after, she again discovered the cellar door open, and supposing her father there, she called, "Shall I come again, papa?"

"Yes, my dear, in a minute," he replied, and had just time to reach his arms towards her, when, in her childish glee, she fell shouting into his arms, and clasping his neck, said, "I knew, dear papa, I should not fall."

And now, my dear readers, the Lord Jesus is calling you to come to him. Many of you, I trust, have already obeyed his call, and chosen him as your portion, but he is still saying, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not," and, "They that seek me early shall find me." Though, like little Mary, you cannot see him visibly present, yet he assures you he is willing and waiting to receive you, and you have only to drop yourselves into the arms of his sovereign mercy, and he will as surely receive you now, as when, while on earth, he "took little children in his arms, laid his hands on them, and blessed them."—Stories for Children.

George and his Little Sister.

A little boy asked his mother to let him lead his little sister out on the green grass. She had just begun to run alone, and could not step over any thing that lay in the way. His mother told him he might lead out the little girl, but charged him not to let her fall. I found them at play, very happy, in the field.

I said, "You seem very happy, George. Is this your sister?"

"Yes, sir."

"Can she walk alone?"

"Yes, sir, on smooth ground."

"And how did she get over these stones, which lie between us and the house?"

"O, sir, mother charged me to be careful that she did not fall, and so I put my hands under her arms, and lifted her up when she came to a stone, so that she need not hit her little foot against it."

"That is right, George; and I want to tell you one thing. You see now how to understand that beautiful text, 'He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.' God charges his angels to lead and lift good people over difficulties, just as you have lifted little Anne over these stones. Do you understand it now?"

"O yes, sir, and I shall never forget it while I live."

Can one child thus take care of another, and cannot God take care of those who put their trust in him? Surely he can; and there is not a child, who may read this story, over whom he is not ready to give his holy angels charge.—Stories for Children.

The Polite Boy.

The other day we were riding in crowded cars. At one of the stations an old gentleman entered, and was looking around him for a seat, when a lad ten or twelve years of age rose up, and said, "Take my seat, sir." The offer was accepted, and the infirm old man sat down. "Why did you give me your seat?" he inquired of the boy. "Because you are old, sir, and I am a boy," was the quick reply. The passengers were very much pleased and gratified. For my part, I wanted to seize hold of the little fellow and press him to my bosom. It was a respect for age which is always praiseworthy.

When a boy or girl does not reverence the aged, it is a sure sign that they are evil in more respects than one. We once saw a lad run after a lame old man in the street, and hoot at him; but he was known as one of the worst lads in the village. He would swear, disobey his parents, rob orchards, and do other things equally bad. We feel quite sure that the polite boy in the cars never uses wicked or vulgar words. His parents probably can trust him.—Child's Paper.

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

THEY'LL RISE AGAIN.

Mother, weeping at the tomb,
O'er thy lost one's faded bloom,—
Weeping o'er the tender dead,—
Cherished hopes so quickly sped—
Mother, cheer thy heart forlorn,
He'll arise when comes the dawn.

Sister, mournest thou in grief
O'er thy brother's life so brief?
Sighing oft for his return—
Doth his form in dreams discern?
Cease thy tears their bitter flow,
He'll awake in the morning's glow.

Husband, faded is the life
That so cheered thee 'mid earth's strife,
Cheered thee 'mid the gloom of years,
Blending sunshine with thy fears?
Calmly hush thy tearful strain,
Her thou'lt greet in life again.

Children, mourn ye parents dead?
Mourn ye o'er the love that's fled,
That no longer soothes your way,
Darkly lone without its ray?
Cheer you, ever hoping on
To greet them when breaks the dawn.

They'll awake, the loved ones dear,
When the morning, bright and clear,
Ushers in the endless day,
Whose light ne'er to Death gives sway.
Then they'll rise, the good of earth,
Quickened by immortal birth.

Cheering, thrilling hope is this,
That so gladdeneth life with bliss;
Blessed boon to mortals giv'n,
Lighting up the path to heav'n
With a splendor passing bright,
E'er to cheer the pilgrim's night.

For the Crisis

Christ the Hope of the Church.

During the long period of time through which the church has been borne since the above language was uttered, changed and varied have been her circumstances. Short and scattering have been her seasons of prosperity. Her night of weeping has been long and weary; yet her course has been steadily onward as the spouse of Christ; and though many difficulties have been thrown in her pathway, hitherto she has surmounted them all; and a miraculous providence it is that the church maintains her identity to-day, while the four great Empires of earth, all of which were hostile to her interests, have risen, swayed the sceptre of universal government, and in spite of the fostering care of human legislation, have waned, and finally become extinct.

We ask, while so fearfully in the minority as the church has been as to numbers, and with so many drawn swords grasped by the hand of her powerful foes pointing at her from every quarter, why has she not, like the Amalekites, been blotted out from under heaven,—or like the Idumeans been wasted by her enemies until her name should be forgotten? It is because He that liveth forever, the high and lofty one who inhabiteth eternity, has rebuked kings for the sake of his people, saying, "Touch not mine anointed and do my prophets no harm."

To the church, God has made a disclosure of the divine character and purpose. In this revelation is clearly brought to view the work and calling of his people; but not without the fact stated that while attending to their Master's business they will be mocked by the pride of earth and loaded with the anathemas of those who usurp the government of the world. Hence their dependence on him who hath said, "Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit saith the Lord."

While glancing at the past, we discover that every age of time brings with it an appropriate work for the church, together with certain obstacles to be surmounted. The duties devolving upon Abraham were that he should quit his father's house and country and under the divine guidance become the founder of a system of worship divine and heavenly in its nature, and thus lift up a standard against the system of Polytheism then coming in upon the infant nations of the earth; and by obeying the heavenly mandate, he became the friend of God. In order that the Amorites might have an opportunity of filling their cups of iniquity, and God make an exhibition of his sovereign power, the children of Israel must be in bondage to the idolatrous nation of the Egyptians, and Moses raised up and in a miraculous manner preserved to become under the divine Being the deliverer and great legislator of that nation. After a forty years' pilgrimage in the wilderness, Joshua must lead on in the van of the host, and drive out those seven nations and divide to each tribe their lot of inheritance. For four hundred and fifty years the government was administered by judges unto Samuel the prophet, at which time they waxed into a kingdom.

Under the administration of their kingly form of government they often became rebellious, conforming in their worship to the idolatry of the heathen, and were sharply reproved by the Lord early sending his prophets unto them. Thus things continued until they were carried into captivity, when their independence ceased. The predicted captivity having expired, a return was required. But the captives, on reaching their native country, were filled with mourning and lamentation. Wasteness stared them in the face from every quarter. Their once beautiful city in ruin—their sanctuary desolate—its altars broken down. Now here is a work to be done, and difficulties attending its accomplishment. The city and sanctuary is to be restored to its former magnificence and grandeur; but foes are all around,—the trowel must be worked by one hand and the sword grasped by the other. Proposals were first made by Sanballat and Tobias to negotiate, but that policy not succeeding next came their threats of extermination. How applicable the words of the prophet proceeding from him who watches over his people to do them good, while so arduous a work was before them and nothing but threatened ruin staring them in the face from those that would swallow them up;—"Not by might nor by power, but by my spirit."

From this point let the mind pass down the stream of time to the advent of the Messiah. At this time the Roman world, though blessed with universal peace, was enveloped in the darkness of heathenism, and the Jewish church was divided into sects, the most prominent of which were the Pharisees, the Sadducees, and the Essenes.

With all, except a remnant who were looking and waiting for the consolation of Israel, religion and the worship of God was barely a nominal thing. In keeping with an impression which at this time seemed to pervade all minds, that some uncommon event was about to transpire, amid the moral gloom which hung like dark drapery about every nation, a star of uncommon radiance was seen resting o'er Bethlehem's manger. The silence of midnight was broken by music unearthly, such as never before greeted a shepherd's ear. It was the sweet chorus of the angel band chosen for the important occasion, the echo of which will be responded to by the church until the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ shall burst o'er all the earth. This marked the dawning of a new era.

The birth of the Prince of the kings of the earth is announced, and as he reclines upon the arm of the blessed virgin, an edict is issued from the throne of the Eternal;—"Let all the angels of God worship him!" His mission to earth was one of importance. He came to break the iron rule of Satanic usurpation,—to war with the prince of the power of the air,—to redeem this world which once as a gem had a place in heaven's great casket, but fell into the hands of an adversary who marred it, and to restore it to the family of glorified worlds when the morning stars will sing again and all the sons of God will shout aloud for joy. The panoply of Jesus of Nazareth was the fulness of the Spirit. In him all fulness dwelt. He was anointed with the Holy Ghost. He had the Spirit without measure. His contests were not physical, but moral; hence it was not by the might of human arm nor military power that he conquered, but by the Spirit of the living God. When he became the captive of death, and was locked up in the enemy's prison-house, he was quickened by the Spirit. It was by the mighty power of God he was raised from the dead.

The war that was waged against Satan and his hosts by the Captain of our salvation is to be prosecuted by his people. If so, the same divine unction the Son of God possessed, is needful to be imparted to them.

It is by the indwellings of the divine Spirit the church is to gain a victory over all her foes. It is by the power of the spirit of faith she is to be kept until her salvation is revealed in the last time. It is by the Spirit she is sealed unto the day of redemption. It is by the Spirit her banished ones, locked up in death's charnel house, are to be quickened and gathered from the east, west, north and south, to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God.

Well might the Savior say, "Without me ye can do nothing;" and with equal propriety could Paul say, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." Truly the Lord is the might of his people. And as the battle rages, waxing hotter and hotter, and we are on the very eve of victory, with what firmness should we grasp our sword and shield, and resist the last assaults of the devil, who is now mustering all his forces for a grand rally, heeding the word of command as it comes from Him who will judge and make war, and fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

Glory to God! victory belongs to the church, though she has been scattered in a dark and cloudy day, and for a small season it would seem God had hid his face from her; yet his word of promise cannot fail. With everlasting mercy he will gather her.

O time! speed on the blessed consummation of this world's history, when we shall no more have occasion to weep over the wrecks of earth; when our hearts will no more break o'er suffering humanity, or the unconscious clay of loved ones; when the reign of death will cease, and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their head; when they shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. Amen. A. ROSS.

LINES.

How deeply grieved I've been to see
God's children so divided be;
One bears a name, but not the other—
This builds a wall—they can't say "brother!"
How oft I've seen the painful sight,
Friendship towards one,—another, slight,—
When side by side each other stood
And each were equally as good;
A smile for one with outstretched hand,
The other must unnoticed stand.
And what's the cause of all this wrong?
Why both to one church don't belong!
O cast away sectarian pride,
Let christian love your actions guide;
Be kind and courteous unto all,
To high and low, to great and small.
By being so perhaps you'll win
Some soul that's now a slave to sin.
Don't think me harsh, I'm only plain,—
O what's an empty, empty name?
Don't let a name our union part,
If we are Christ's we're one in heart.
He who his steps doth heavenward bend,
Why he's my brother, he's my friend;
No matter by what name he's call'd,
Or if he has no name at all.

Practical Faith.

THE people of God, the people who love him and have faith in him and in his promises, who love his present truth however unpopular it may be, and who are not afraid to speak the whole truth, are a proselyting people; for the truth is a proselyting, a conquering principle, and is effectual even though its advocates be a people who are "everywhere spoken against," "falsely," for its Author's sake. And the people of God, too, have the gift of proselyting, which is "the gift of the Holy Ghost." And they have the means of proselyting freely; for the means by which true converts are made is by the dispensing of that wisdom that "cometh from above," which if any of our teachers, or others, "lack," they can be supplied "liberally," according to James, by simply asking "of God." There is no good or true reason why God should not bless the efforts of a particular sect, even though public opinion be against them. Public opinion was against the disciples on the day of Pentecost; but, notwithstanding, thousands were proselyted to the cause of Christ. All that is needed is to have practical FAITH in God, then "whatsoever" is asked will be received.

Let public opinion be ever so arrogant, a people having the truth need not quail before it. If they will but cultivate the stern will of a Luther, that does not hesitate to enter the temple of error and dash the glittering idols of a heathenish multitude before its astonished gaze, they will triumph over all foes, through the grace of the Captain of their salvation.

To win proselytes to any great reform, it requires men of fixed principle, combining confidence, without boastfulness—boldness, without raillery—earnestness, without bigotry—uncompromising truthfulness—unwavering faith in the principles they advocate—a contempt for the opinion of the multitude, and an earnest desire to please the Deity. With these requisites you will make proselytes to the cause in which you are engaged, though it be ever so "despised" by popular sentiment.

Choice Selections.

Directions to Persons just commencing a Religious Life.

The following is from an interesting little work, published by Gould & Lincoln, 59 Washington St., Boston. Price—single copy 6 cents; per dozen, 60 cts. post paid.

1. Remember that the commencement of the christian life is to be like the "dawning light, which increaseth more and more to the perfect day." Therefore, when the hope of peace and pardon dawns in the heart, do not consider the great business of life as accomplished, but only as begun.

2. Do not expect so sudden and remarkable a change, as to leave no doubt of its reality. Did religion enter the soul in perfection, and to the entire exclusion of sin, the change would be so marked and obvious as to leave no room for doubt. But, usually, the christian character is full of contrarieties. There is a perpetual struggle between good and evil, and thus a continual competition of evidence for and against, according as the good or evil prevails.

3. Evidence of piety is not so much to be sought in high emotions of any kind, as in real humility, self-distrust, hungering and thirsting after righteousness, sorrow for sin, and a continual effort, in every-day life, to regulate our thoughts, feelings and conduct by the word of God. It is the nature and not the degree of our affections which is to be regarded in the examination of our evidences. Some persons are so constituted, that they are not susceptible of very strong emotions, and ought not to expect them, in reference to religion, any more than other subjects that interest the mind. The best way to know our feelings is, to see how they influence the conduct. "By their fruit ye shall know them."

4. Do not expect to find in your own case, every thing you have heard or read of in the experience of others. For, it may be, many things we hear and read of, are not correct feelings, and do not afford just grounds of confidence to any one; and if they are correct experience, it may be the experience of a mature christian, and not to be expected in the beginning of a religious life. It must be remembered that as no two countenances are formed alike, so no two hearts are fashioned alike, or placed in exactly the same circumstances; and it would be as vain to seek all the varieties of christian experience in one person, as to seek all the varieties of human features in one face.

5. Do not expect that the evidence desired will all come immediately and at once. It must come progressively, as the result of continued effort in obedience to the will of God.

6. Do not suppose that religion is a principle of such self-preserving energy, as that when once implanted in the soul it will continue to thrive and increase without effort. The plant of divine grace can no more thrive without care, and diligent and patient cultivation, than can those rare and valued plants, that demand the physical efforts and culture of man.

God will not sustain and bring to maturity the work of grace, without your own voluntary concurrence in the diligent use of means. He will not do it any more than he would cause the harvest to whiten in the field of the sluggard. Indulge, therefore, no such ideas of inability and dependence on God, as shall impair a full sense of perfect obligation to do whatever can be done in working out your own salvation. God never assists any but those who make efforts to aid and advance themselves.

7. Entertain no such ideas of the sovereignty of God in the bestowment of his grace, as would awaken any doubt of his affording needful aid, where he sees sincere endeavors to grow in grace. If some christians are more eminent than others, it is simply because they make more efforts to be so, and God aids these efforts. So that all worldly-minded and indifferent christians continue in this state, because they do not choose to make efforts to get out of it. Any person can be an eminent christian that chooses to be so. Christians are too apt to feel as if eminence in piety was a distinction made by the sovereignty of God, and to suppose that high attainments are not within the rich of all, and that languid and inefficient piety is the result of divine sovereignty rather than negligence and sloth. A more false or more pernicious opinion cannot easily be adopted by christians. The truth is, that the road to eminence in gifts and graces, and the means of obtaining them, are open to all who seek them, and if any do not obtain them, it is owing to their own sloth and inefficiency, and not to any deficiency on the part of God in blessing diligent efforts. It always pleases him to crown with success the hand of the diligent instead of the hand of the slothful, not only in temporal but in spiritual things. This thought cannot be too strongly impressed upon the minds of those who are just commencing a christian life. To them, peculiarly, are such promises as these directed: "Ask, and ye shall receive; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. Every one that asketh receiveth," &c.

Do not be afraid of indulging in feelings which may seem to be right, from the fear of deception. On the contrary, cherish such feelings, and try to recall them often. Go forward and do your duty, and God will save you from deception while thus employed.

8. There is one caution which is peculiarly needful to those who have been greatly interested in the subject of religion, and that is, to take particular care of the health.

There is such a mysterious and intimate connection between the mind and the body, that one cannot be wearied or suffer, without affecting the other. When the mind is fatigued or exhausted, it affects the body, and this again reacts on the mind.

Every person ought to be aware, that the more anxiously and intensely the mind is interested on any subject, the greater is the need of exercise, sleep and frequent relaxation. Attention to religion does not demand that all lawful business be suspended, and forbid the neglect of all needful rest and exercise.

9. Do not expect to be made happy by religion, unless you become eminent christians. A half-way christian can neither enjoy the pleasures of the world nor the pleasures of religion; for his conscience will not let him seek the one, and he is too indolent to obtain the other. The christian may be the happiest man on earth, but he must be a faithful, active and devoted christian. None are disappointed in finding religion a source of unfailing peace and joy, but those who refuse to drink deep of the wells of salvation; unless we except those who, from some derangement of the nervous system, or failure of health, do not enjoy the clear and undisturbed exercise of their faculties. A healthy mind in a healthy body, may always be made happy by religion.

10. Do not look at the practice and example of other christians, in forming the standard of piety at which you aim. The allowance of this thing has probably had a more disastrous influence on the church and on the world, than all other causes that could be named. Generally, when persons commence a christian life, their consciences are susceptible and tender. They are strict and watchful in the performance of duty, and are pained even by a slight neglect. They have been wont to feel that becoming religious implies a great change; that "old things must pass away and all things become new." But when they begin to look around among their christian friends, and turn to them for aid, as those who have had experience and have made advances in christian life, they find that they seem to look upon duties and deficiences in a very different manner. They seem to neglect many things which the young christian has felt to be very important; and to practice many things which he had supposed to be inconsistent with religion. Then commences the disastrous effect. The young christian begins to feel that he need not be more particular than those to whom he has ever looked up with deference and respect. He begins to imagine that he has been rather too strict and particular. He begins to take a retrograde course; and though his conscience and the Bible often check and reprove, yet, after a few inefficient struggles, he lowers his standard and walks as others do.

Look into your Bible, and see how christians ought to live. See how the Bible says those who are christians must live, and then, if you find your christian friends living in a different way, instead of having cause for feeling that you may do so too, you have only cause to fear that they are deceiving themselves with the belief that they are christians, when they are not. Remember that the farther your christian friends depart from the standard of christian character laid down in the Bible, the less reason have you to hope that they are christians. And do not hesitate on this subject because you find many professed christians who are indifferent and lax in their practice and example. Remember that Christ has said, "Many shall say unto me, in that day, Lord, Lord," thus claiming to be his disciples, to whom he will say, "I never knew you." Do not let professed christians tempt you to fall into the society of such unhappy cast-aways.

Extravagance in Dress.

One of the most serious evils that exist in society at the present time, and one that has had a great tendency to bring about financial crises, bankruptcies, defalcations, mercantile dishonor, and a withdrawal of that confidence, without which the wheels of commerce are clogged, and the course of trade impeded, is the insane passion for dress and gaudy ornaments which is manifested by a class of American ladies, and is fostered by their husbands and fathers. The evil has come to be of such magnitude, the press everywhere is lifting up its voice against it. May it be potential in arresting the attention of ladies, and lead them to a thorough reform—a reform which may save their husbands and fathers from bankruptcy, and haply from guilt; which may be made by them without sacrifice; which will add to their attractions by taking from their meretricious ornaments, and which will promote their peace of mind.

The sad history of mercantile disaster, and dishonesty in high places, which the history of the past few years has disclosed, is full of warning, if it is not also of reproach, to those ladies who have lived beyond the most ample means to gratify a vanity which is unworthy of them. Ladies make a great mistake when they suppose they add to their charms by vieing with the plumage of the gaudiest bird in their apparel.

"To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess."

But these are no more wasteful or ridiculous than for women to pile the price of a year's income upon their backs. We once knew a man who called upon us, his countenance beaming with pleasure, to exhibit a wonderful invention of his own. He produced a boquet of rare and beautiful flowers, which he had liberally spangled with gold and silver leaf. To the lover of nature and the beauties of the garden, nothing could be more repulsive. We look upon a superfluity of dress and ornaments on a woman with much the same feeling. "Loveliness needs not the foreign aid of ornaments, but is, when unadorned, adorned the most."—Golden Rule.

For the Children.

A Child's Faith.

A beloved minister of the gospel was one day speaking of that active, living faith, which should at all times cheer the heart of the sincere follower of Jesus, and related to me a beautiful illustration, that had just occurred in his own family.

He had gone into a cellar, which in winter was quite dark, and entered by a trap door. A little daughter, only three years old, was trying to find him, and came to the trap door, but on looking down, all was dark, dark—and she called, "Are you down cellar, papa?"

"Yes, would you like to come, Mary?"

"It is dark. I can't come, papa."

"Well, my daughter, I am right below you, and I can see you though you cannot see me, and if you will drop yourself I will catch you."

"Oh! I should fall; I can't see you, papa."

"I know it," he answered, "but I am really here, and you shall not fall or hurt yourself. If you will jump, I will catch you safely."

Little Mary strained her eyes to the utmost, but she could catch no glimpse of her father. She hesitated, then advanced a little further, then, summoning all her resolution, she threw herself forward, and was received safely in her father's arms.

A few days after, she again discovered the cellar door open, and supposing her father there, she called, "Shall I come again, papa?"

"Yes, my dear, in a minute," he replied, and had just time to reach his arms towards her, when, in her childish glee, she fell shouting into his arms, and clasping his neck, said, "I knew, dear papa, I should not fall."

And now, my dear readers, the Lord Jesus is calling you to come to him. Many of you, I trust, have already obeyed his call, and chosen him as your portion, but he is still saying, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not," and, "They that seek me early shall find me." Though, like little Mary, you cannot see him visibly present, yet he assures you he is willing and waiting to receive you, and you have only to drop yourselves into the arms of his sovereign mercy, and he will as surely receive you now, as when, while on earth, he "took little children in his arms, laid his hands on them, and blessed them."—Stories for Children.

George and his Little Sister.

A little boy asked his mother to let him lead his little sister out on the green grass. She had just begun to run alone, and could not step over any thing that lay in the way. His mother told him he might lead out the little girl, but charged him not to let her fall. I found them at play, very happy, in the field.

I said, "You seem very happy, George. Is this your sister?"

"Yes, sir."

"Can she walk alone?"

"Yes, sir, on smooth ground."

"And how did she get over these stones, which lie between us and the house?"

"O, sir, mother charged me to be careful that she did not fall, and so I put my hands under her arms, and lifted her up when she came to a stone, so that she need not hit her little foot against it."

"That is right, George; and I want to tell you one thing. You see now how to understand that beautiful text, 'He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, lest at any time thou dash thy foot against a stone.' God charges his angels to lead and lift good people over difficulties, just as you have lifted little Anne over these stones. Do you understand it now?"

"O yes, sir, and I shall never forget it while I live."

Can one child thus take care of another, and cannot God take care of those who put their trust in him? Surely he can; and there is not a child, who may read this story, over whom he is not ready to give his holy angels charge.—Stories for Children.

The Polite Boy.

The other day we were riding in crowded cars. At one of the stations an old gentleman entered, and was looking around him for a seat, when a lad ten or twelve years of age rose up, and said, "Take my seat, sir." The offer was accepted, and the infirm old man sat down. "Why did you give me your seat?" he inquired of the boy. "Because you are old, sir, and I am a boy," was the quick reply. The passengers were very much pleased and gratified. For my part, I wanted to seize hold of the little fellow and press him to my bosom. It was a respect for age which is always praiseworthy.

When a boy or girl does not reverence the aged, it is a sure sign that they are evil in more respects than one. We once saw a lad run after a lame old man in the street, and hoot at him; but he was known as one of the worst lads in the village. He would swear, disobey his parents, rob orchards, and do other things equally bad. We feel quite sure that the polite boy in the cars never uses wicked or vulgar words. His parents probably can trust him.—Child's Paper.

WHOM WILL OUR FATHER BEAUTIFY?

Whom will our Father beautify?
Those whom the world call great?
Who, clad in silk and purple, boast
Their pomp of high estate?

Whom will our Father beautify?
The young, the fair, the brave?—
A garland on their brow they bear
That withers at the grave.

But with th' approval of the skies
That language fails to speak,
He deigns to robe the lowly one
And beautify the meek.

Look Ahead.

"So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near, even at the doors." Matt. 24 : 33.

Although the exact time of the Lord's coming is a subject on which there is a diversity of opinion, yet it is pretty generally conceded by all professing christians that we are in portentious times, doubtlessly foreshadowing the speedy Advent of the Son of God; even as the hollow rumbling underground bespeaks the coming earthquake, or the "ground-swell" of the ocean the approaching storm. The marvelous revival which has been felt over all christendom, means something more than periodical excitement, despite what a very few miserable sophists may say to the contrary; which, together with the lowering aspect of the political horizon of the world, gives unmistakable signs that almost

"The day of judgment long delayed is come!"

Merchants, a few months since arrogant, and almost heaven-defying in the pride of their wealth, find that the riches of this world make unto themselves wings and fly away; and now humbled before God, like the poorest being in the land, they pray for that assistance which they so much need, and which a merciful and kind Creator so gladly bestows upon them. Thus are men's hearts perplexed and failing them.

The potentates of Europe who stood aloof during the last sanguinary and almost bootless struggle, now look menacing and warlike. Nations who for centuries have borne the chains of old feudal oppression, the war-forged gyves of the conquered, or the still worse slavery of popish thraldom, now tug fiercely at their fetters, as if they would snap asunder their galling bands, and raise their emancipated hands to greet the only Lord which man should ever own.

The gospel has crept into places where the world wots not of, and softly as the evening zephyrs whispers the glad tidings of a Savior's love. It has glided into the stronghold of superstition and idolatry; into the cell of the self-righteous recluse; into the weary captive's dungeon; into the pagoda and minaret; into the sultry forests and jungles of Africa; into the ice-bound regions of the North. From pole to equator, from nadir to zenith, the mighty Spirit of God is moving upon the universe. The call of mercy is borne on every wind. The worldling, in eager pursuit of wealth or pleasure, hears, stops, and turns to his God! The soldier hears it upon the battle-field; his stern heart is melted, and his eagle eye bedimmed with tears of penitence and sorrow. The sailor, listlessly leaning over the ship's side, hears the marvelous sound rising mysteriously from the depths of the ocean, and uttering the affectionate invitation "come!" The breast of that reckless yet generous child of the ocean who a thousand times had braved the furious gale, and shook from his hair the salt spray as if he held in derision the anger of the fretted waves, throbs with emotions long foreign to his thoughts, and the long forgotten prayers of his distant mother come upon his memory sad and solemn as evening chimes. Perhaps he tries to shake the conviction off; 'tis vain—the arrow is driven up to the feather. He strikes his rebel colors, hauls down the "skull and cross bones," and runs up to his peak the glorious Gospel ensign.

And yet still mightier work than this is done. The sinner-seeking, sinner-saving grace of God has entered those dens of festering corruption, seething and fermenting with rank pollution, and exhaling a malaria a thousand times more deadly than the plague. Taken the rum-deformed drunkard and the poor miserable, degraded daughters of sin by the hand, and with tones of ineffable love and persuasion says, "Come! Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden and I will give you rest." The eager hand is stretched for the blessing and again the arches of high heaven resound with—"The dead is alive—the lost is found!"

With such a mighty work going on, what a sin is it that there should remain an idle or disinterested laborer in the field! Talk of the cross! What cross is there which comes not through a lack of love to the Lord of glory? What would such mawkish and sensitive beings have done in those days long past, when sword and faggot, cord and axe inundated the earth with blood and made the gore-stained world a reeking Aceldama? What would they do now if hydra-headed popery and rampant idolatry shadowed this continent, and with their savage hordes sought to turn this land of Bibles into a land of the sword and the crucifix? Crosses! Alas! we do not sufficiently appreciate our light and privileges, if we let such trifling difficulties as we experience retard us from putting forth every energy in the furtherance of man's salvation. We shall reap an abundant reward if we faint not, and soon forget in the joys which await the faithful those sorrows we experience now.

Shall we grow weary or relax when the fight is almost won? Shall we turn back when we can almost see the flashing of the golden cupola of the temple in the New Jerusalem, as it catches the light from the face of Him who sitteth upon the throne? God forbid!

"To patient faith the prize is sure,
And they who to the end endure
The cross, shall wear the crown."

Shall this Work Stop?

The clock strikes ten. Worn with the labors of the day I perhaps should be at rest, but time presses and I have a few words which I wish to say.

I have been issuing Tracts—have spent most of the day in superintending the printing of some thousands of various kinds. I am tired. I need rest. The labors I perform are almost enough for two or three. I preach, I write, I travel, I publish, I buy and sell and give away. My health is not firm though somewhat better than it has been. I have cares resting upon me—a family to attend to and care for. I want to study. I want to read my Bible more. I want to finish some works that I have begun. I want to write others. I have calls for labor in every direction—I am perplexed—what shall I do?

I began to publish because I wanted tracts and books to circulate. I have, within the past five or six years, printed and issued more than two hundred and fifty thousand copies of books, pamphlets, tracts and handbills. They are afloat. Some have been instruments in God's hands of doing good. Only yesterday a friend wrote me of one who was led to Christ by one of the "Olive Leaves." The seed is springing up in various quarters; to God be all the glory.

This work has been to me a labor of love. I have done it heartily as unto the Lord. I have done it cheerfully. I do not complain of the toil. Still it has been no less a labor. To preach from three to ten times a week,—to travel from six to seven thousand miles per year,—to visit, study, write for papers, to take the charge of a father's family and also that of my own,—all these are about enough for any one man. But when in addition to this a person writes and revises hundreds of pages of manuscript—then watches every page of it as it is in the hands of the printer—reads and revises all—then prints, watches and oversees every thing, and then when these hundreds of thousands of books and tracts have to be packed, boxed, or mailed, directed, billed, lugged about the country, sent all over it on credit, sold, the pay collected, the books all paid for promptly at the appointed time—the paper-maker, stereotypist, printer and binder all paid—hundreds and thousands of letters written to agents about books, with books, for books, answering questions, &c. &c., put this all together, and then add to it all the malice of enemies of God and truth, the contempt of false friends, the fault-finding of every jealous mortal whose hobby you will not ride or be rode by—the slanders of those who hate a live religion and love a dead form, the financial difficulties attending the transaction of business at the present time, and the cool indifference of those who "wish you well," and don't care two cents whether you sink or swim, and the reader can judge how many more feathers it would require to break the camel's back.

And so I do not wonder that to-day, amid the toil, while viewing the accumulating cares and the increasing demands upon time, health and strength preventing improvement, hindering study and wearing on health, I wished myself free from the whole of it, and some one else in the harness, or else the load "dumped" in the road. I can do something. I can do considerable, but I cannot do every thing. I could write books and tracts if I didn't have to print them. Or I could write and print them if I didn't have to peddle them out all over the land and have so much care, labor and writing in consequence.

What I shall do I don't know. I pray God to guide me. But I come back to the question—shall the work stop? It has almost stopped during the hard times. Few can afford to scatter tracts now. And yet a thousand tracts will probably do twice as much good now as they would have done a year ago. Men have had the bottom knocked out of some of their speculations. God has beat common sense into them at the same time that he emptied their pockets and smashed up their schemes. Men have time now to pray, to read their Bibles, to learn truth, to be saved! Just now they need the light to shine in on them. Who will let it shine? Now, if ever, is the time to press the work with vigor. Who will do it? A tract may save a soul from delusion—aye! from death! Who will scatter the seed? Are the poor in want of tracts for themselves or friends? Let them send for them without price. Do others wish to purchase, they are ready for your orders.

Are preachers interested in the matter? Will they take hold of it and urge it? Are brethren and sisters interested? Will they give six cents a week to buy tracts to distribute? Twenty persons doing this can scatter 50,000 pages per year. Who will start tract societies? Who will leave off tea and tobacco and coffee to further the object? Who will work? Who will deny themselves? Who will talk and who will act?

It is late,—weary nature seeks repose. One word before we part—"Shall this work stop?" What say you, brethren and sisters? Let your answer be in action, not in words. God bless you all.

REVIVAL INCIDENT.—The work is quite general in the city of Chicago. The noon prayer-meetings are attended with much interest. The following are specimens of the reports:

"A pious gentleman had been out of town and was returning in the cars. He was introduced to a lady, and among other topics of conversation he spoke about the welfare of her soul. Not more than ten minutes were taken up with this subject, and yet impressions were made on her mind never to be effaced. They separated, and in a few days the gentleman received a letter from the lady informing him of her conversion, and saying that his short conversation with her was blessed of God to this happy result. 'How glad you must feel,' said a friend to him, 'that you improved that opportunity!' 'Yes,' he replied, 'but how ashamed I am that I have lost so many opportunities equally good. When christians can instrumentally save a soul by a ten minutes' effort, what guilt in negligence!"

The Revival Interest.

TO THE FRIENDS OF JESUS SCATTERED ABROAD:—A few words on this subject may not be amiss. We hear some who do not appear much engaged, saying that they have doubts whether God is in this work. I have only to say in answer to such, that the promise is, that through His name whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins; and it no where says that they shall go with us or shall come among us before they can believe. I do feel to rejoice that any will believe on Jesus for salvation. I hope they will be led into all truth. The more they have of it the more free they will be. There is one thing that is now apparent, and that is, where there is a selfish spirit,—"for us or in our place we want God to work,"—such narrow wishes are not blessed. The humble place is where God can work, where there is a generous, liberal spirit. In such places a gracious work has been in progress, and will continue.

From all parts of the country where Union Meetings are held and properly conducted, we hear of a good work; many have found rest to their souls. Personal effort has been abundantly successful. We hear many signal ways that God has worked salvation to the impenitent.

Yesterday, in the noon prayer-meeting at the Old South chapel, (which still continues interesting,) a gentleman related an incident of conversion. He had just received a letter stating the circumstance. It was on this wise. A man of his acquaintance, who was a profane man, had a little daughter. One evening he carried her up to bed. After she was placed in bed, she called to her father and asked him to say the Lord's prayer. Finally she prevailed on him. He commenced and got through with it, by leaving out some part of it. She discovered that he had not said it right and repeated it over after him. On her doing so he was immediately convicted, and the letter stated he had become a praying man. This the speaker said was the second circumstance of similar character that he had known. Upon his taking his seat, another gentleman arose and said that he knew of a case a little nearer home. He himself last fall was in his sins, an unconverted man; said that on one evening he thought he would take his little daughter to bed. When in the chamber his little daughter asked him to pray the Lord's prayer. He put her off by telling her not to put such questions to him; but she insisted and said it herself. He too was shown by the Spirit's influence in these simple means that there was a need of his being a praying man, and he could say to the praise of God, that he now could pray with and for his family.

We have heard many singular means that are brought to bear upon the mind of the sinner to bring him to see the need of a Savior. We read accounts in the papers published every week of the work in every direction, and no man can say that this or that is the fruit of this or that man's labors. Laymen have been in most cases the humble instruments in the hand of God.

I truly feel to acknowledge my unworthiness and short comings in that God has shown to me by experience that much understanding of the scriptures of the prophets is not essential to be a successful winner of souls to Jesus Christ.

Brethren, we have greatly erred in supposing that because we understood most all prophecies, that we were very near God in our devotions. Faith has been wanting in the present promises of God, and I hope none will fail in seeing this point. What is a present promise? might be inquired. Taking God at his word, now; whatsoever you ask in prayer, believing that you have them now. This I understand to be living faith. I fail here more than in believing what he has promised shall take place in the future. I have noticed in all the meetings that I have been in of late, that if a request is made for prayer for individuals, it has been responded to at once. I wish I could see as much faith among my dear advent brethren. Have we not, brethren, had somewhat of a selfish feeling and perhaps spiritual pride, in that we have received a large amount of Bible knowledge? We may have been impatient with those who did not at once embrace our views. Have we not stopped there, and supposed that all work for souls was done. Perhaps we have tried in our own strength to win them to the truth.

To-day, in the 12 o'clock meeting at the Old South chapel, a lawyer from Providence arose and said he had been a professor for twenty years, and since the present revival had been in progress he had felt quite indifferent about it; it might or it might not be genuine, though at times his conscience had been aroused; after he heard a discourse on the words,—"When I have a more convenient season." These words kept coming up in his mind many times during the last four weeks—"convenient season." He had been into the world and got its spirit. Finally he went to church and heard another sermon on the text,—"If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto me." The preacher had not proceeded far in his discourse before there came such a feeling over him he could not describe. He began to weep, and cried out so loud in the congregation that all heard him. Tears flowed in abundance. He felt that God has been so good, he loved him so he could not help crying. He had been known to be a professor by the world, and now there was a cross for him to take up to tell to his former associates his love to God, and make a confession of the past. And for the last four days he had found a peace he could not tell of. One thing he could say that he did not want one ounce taken off from the yoke; he loved to bear his cross. He had related the circumstance to a judge who was looked upon as a very upright, moral man; every one supposed him to be very worthy. The judge came to meeting and heard a sermon on the love of God. He went home and wept all night. He came to meeting the next day and stood up and confessed he had been such a sinner, but God had pardoned all his sins. This was a startling announcement to the people present.

Thus we see that this work is not the fruit of protracted effort. The high and the low, the rich and the poor are called. Praise the Lord! W. C. STONE.

Boston, April 21st, '58.

P. S.—Since writing the above I have been into another meeting at Old South chapel. It was as well attended as usual,—no abatement in interest. A gentleman from Beverly arose and said that in that town, eighteen miles from Boston, a few weeks ago, six christian persons commenced a daily prayer meeting. At first, very few attended. It was hard starting, owing to unbelief; but now a good work is going on in that town. A lady had requested prayers for her four sons; three had been converted to God.

A gentleman from Providence said the good work was still going on in that city. There had been besides the Judge of the Supreme Court, several lawyers and many prominent citizens converted to God. He said also that at Pawtucket Sheriff Sherman had been led to call on God for salvation, and was now happy in the Lord, and that there was an individual who had been a great skeptic in that place, who doubted about the genuineness of the work, was asked if he thought Sheriff Sherman would be carried away by such an excitement. His answer was that "he would be the last man that yields to it." He was told that he was already on the Lord's side and he had better go and see for himself. He called on him at his office and talked with him, and asked the Sheriff to pray for him there. He would not be put off then by the excuse that it was not a proper place and that some one might come in upon them. He did not care. They knelt down in the office and prayed. He asked pardon for his sins, believed on the Lord and was converted on the spot.

I have been into the Young Men's Christian Association meeting at Tremont Temple, held from 6 to 7 and 9 to 10 o'clock, P. M. There were some 200 young men assembled. A number of young men arose and testified having found the pearl of great price. One said that for one week past, since he had given Christ his affections, he had enjoyed more love in one day than in all his former life. It was real solid happiness. Last Fast day he spent in real happiness, when for previous fast days he would go and ride all day and there would be a void come night; he had now found a better way to find real pleasure. These young men are working christians. They select a young man and talk with him, and make him a subject of prayer. And thus the work goes on.

Don't.

Don't look so coldly at that Brother! What if he has not acted just right, or to suit your notions? What if he has done exceedingly wrong—frowns will not restore him. God cast a loving look on you, when a sinner. Now act godly. Don't tell his fault to your neighbor—no, not to your best or truest earthly friend. First of all tell it to your God and his God as you approach the mercy seat. Then, all bathed in dews of heavenly grace, go tell it to him alone; you may reach his heart, convert him and save a soul from death, and also refresh your own soul. Don't neglect a preacher because he does not "turn the world upside down." The weak need encouragement—they need help. Even Moses needed an Aaron and a Hur to stay up his hands; how much more those less than Moses. Is he spiritual? he may do a work which the mighty man may never do. "Not by might nor by power, but by my SPIRIT saith the Lord." Enter into the work—pray for him, with him—exhort with him, it may be weep with him, but don't despise him. He may be one of God's little ones. He may do others good if not you; destroy him not by your influence. 'Tis unchristian—'tis the work of a cold heart.

Don't "present your bodies a living sacrifice" to Mammon, unholy, but acceptable, so that weariness compels you "to forsake the assembling of yourselves together" at the prayer meeting. Don't think to save time and gain labor by neglecting the family altar. "Busy season"—"work drives," you say; very well, so much the more need of Divine help and blessing. "It takes time,"—yes, true, but could you not spend ten, fifteen, twenty, even thirty minutes in conversation with a neighbor, if one should call? Have you not done it? Is it not easily, cheerfully done? Time to talk with neighbor, yet no time to talk with God!! Believe it not. 'Tis Satan's delusive lie. Don't cherish it. Neglect not so great salvation,—don't "fail of the grace of God."

Correspondence.

From Bro. M. Chandler.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I thought it would interest some to read a few lines from me, and learn my position and work. It has been some time since I have written. I have spent most of my time since last June in preaching the word, and all of my time for the last six months. The Lord has blessed his word, and many have been converted to God. I have traveled through the North part of this State, and some in Wisconsin; some South, and also in Iowa. I visited the churches in McHenry, Stephenson and Jo Davis counties—had a good time. The past winter, I spent some time in Crawford Co., Wis., in a new field, and God blessed his truth, and a goodly number, I trust, were converted to God. A number of Universalists and two infidels were converted to the truth, and, I trust, to God. A goodly number embraced the truth. There is a great desire to hear more, but I have not been able to visit them or you, but hope to soon.

I have spent some time in Warren Co., this State, since February, and have found a church there, baptized sixteen, and expect to baptize more soon. The work is going on there gloriously; it commenced under the labors of Bro. Rathburn, who has just started out to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. He has been convinced for years he ought to preach, but let the cares of this life prevent. He has broke loose at last, and God has blest his labors, and I pray that he may be a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the truth. He is arranging his matters to devote his whole time to the work of the ministry. We still pray God to raise up faithful men for his vineyard, who can stand the privations and trials of the West, for the field is ripe, all ready for the harvest, and laborers are few. Some who came out and tried the western field for a season, have returned East again. If God has got any servants East that feel the woe if they preach not the gospel, and can trust him for their support, and can labor for the salvation of souls, and leave the consequences with God, I pray the Lord to send them West. There has never been such anxiety to hear the word since 1843 as at the present time.

I would not be understood to excuse the people West for not doing more for the support of the cause. We must all stand before the Judge for ourselves. If through covetousness or any other cause, the gospel is hindered, there is a reckoning day just at the door. We must meet it. God will do right on his part and the great question is, will we? I believe the time for labor is almost over. We must work while the day lasts. Trials will soon be ended, sorrow over, tears dried, battles fought, victory won, triumph gained, immortality put on, crown of life given, and an inheritance received. O! how glorious! In view of the exceeding great and precious promises we will go on. I do not wonder that the apostle Paul, in view of what was before him, lost sight of the past, and considered all was nothing compared to the future inheritance. Let us imitate the great apostle and the inheritance will be ours.

Your brother as ever, in hope of immortality when the Lord comes,

Moses Chandler.

Cordova, Ill.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

Dear Bro. Grant:—This is a solemn and interesting day to me, from the fact that it is the 46th year of my mortal life; and the 30th year of my christian experience; and the 4th year of my best religious life. Four years ago this day, I prepared my first article for the Crisis. Since that time I have written about forty pieces for the above named paper; and I still feel that I am an unprofitable servant in the vineyard of the Lord.

I was cut off from christian liberty and free toleration by a majority of the acting members of the church to which I belonged. I told them I could not live so; that I must have liberty to express my views and feelings as I saw them delineated in God's word. After considerable opposition from my professed friends and brethren, for several months, I resolved to leave the church; and I said to them, that if I could not have the privilege of telling the truth to the units, and the tens that met in their little vestry for prayer and conference, I would tell it to hundreds and thousands through the medium of my pen. Their minister requested me publicly, (at one of their conferences) to desist from advocating any views in opposition to their own sentiments. Some of their number said, amen! I consequently left, not only the church, but the conference and prayer meetings. Then I felt lonely and sad. But my sadness was soon turned into joy, believing that my suffering was in consequence of my believing in the truth of God, and closely adhering thereto. I know the truth does make me free, and happy too. Praise the Lord! Now, dear brother, and all my christian friends who may read this article, let me say to you, in the name of the Lord, that we have the promise that if we abide in Christ, and his words abide in us, we may ask what we will, and it shall be done!

"O may God, the mighty God of Jacob, help us to be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord! "All that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." We have had no Advent preaching here for more than a year; only what we could get from the sure word of prophecy and advent papers and books. We feel that we are exalted to heaven by religious privileges, notwithstanding we are deprived the privilege of hearing the living preacher's voice of the right stamp. We have been praying the Lord to send us an under Shepherd, to break to us the bread of life, and to instruct us more perfectly into the things of the kingdom of God. But personal responsibility rests upon us all! If we cannot have special help, or a faithful minister of Christ to labor with us, we must be contented to work single handed in that respect; but let God work in us to will and to do of his own good pleasure. O, brother, sister, be faithful, faithful, faithful till you all arrive at home!

Yours in hope, and patient waiting for Christ,

P. Tandy.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 5, 1858.

Coming of Christ.

The Lord seems to be arousing many in the different churches to look for his second coming immediately. This is what we have been anxiously expecting, and we look upon it as one of the interesting signs of the times. This truth seems to be particularly felt by the most devoted class of christians, many of whom are very anxious to hear on the subject. We anticipate an increasing interest among the children of the Lord as we approach the great event which is to consummate the christian's hope. For nearly six thousand years the church has been looking for the glorious day when Paradise would be restored, and the kingdom of God be established on the earth. The disciples were anxious to know, before the Savior ascended to the Father, when he would come again and restore the kingdom. He mentioned a chain of events reaching from the first century through the dark ages, and the scenes of bloody persecution, till we come near the close of the last century, when the days of tribulation were to cease, and signs of his second coming would begin to appear, which should cause rejoicing in the hearts of his children, because their redemption was drawing near. Those signs appeared at the appointed time, and in the manner specified, hence there can be no doubt but that the event indicated by the signs will be as literally and faithfully accomplished as any part of the prophecy. All things indicate that we may soon expect to see the great Redeemer of our fallen race. Can we not echo the expression of John upon the isle of Patmos,—"Even so come Lord Jesus?" Thank the Lord there are some responsive hearts, who even have need of patience to wait for the glad day to arrive. We do not wonder that Dr. Watts wrote,—

"How bright the vision, O how long
Shall this glad hour delay?
Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

This, we think, expresses the feelings of every disciple of Christ. How can it be otherwise? if we love Jesus, do we not love his appearing? Paul tells us, there is "a crown of righteousness" for "all them also that love his appearing." The plain inference is, there is no crown for those who do not love the appearing of Christ. We can not understand how one can love Jesus, and not love to see him. We now find many anxious to talk on the subject, who, till recently, have shown great indifference, and even dislike to the subject.

When in C., a few weeks since, a good deacon was asked, what do you think of this great revival? He replied, "I think it is the sealing time." A devoted member of another church gave about the same answer. Inquiry was made of a minister in the place, who has recently received very rich blessings from the Lord, and much light on the Scriptures; and we found he was looking for the Lord soon to come. Thus the Spirit of God is awakening new and deeper interest on the subject of the second advent of the Messiah. Nearly all professors of religion with whom we converse, appear to be of one mind upon the subject, and remark, this looks like the last call of mercy for this guilty world.

The Weekly Times, published in Cincinnati, O., says, when speaking of the revival in that city,

"Those who do not attend the churches, and feel no interest in religion, have no idea of the magnitude of this movement. . . . It is an extraordinary religious movement, and, as such, deserves extraordinary attention, even from the daily press. . . . Immense congregations assemble at the call of the church bells. The services generally were of an unusual character, a spirit of unusual devotion being exhibited."

Bishop McIlvaine remarked in one of the prayer meetings, "that during forty-five years of labor in the vineyard of Christ, he had never known of such a movement—one apparently so free of the agencies of men—one so evidently the work of God."

Morris Chapel "was crowded to excess" to hear the pastor of the church preach on the "signs which precede the coming of Christ."

The following remarks from the Times show that the Lord is arousing his people to look for the return of our Savior:

"Many of the more zealous christians, looking into the peculiarities of this awakening, are inclined to believe it is the great sign which is to precede the second coming of Christ. They look upon the movement as an outpouring of the Spirit of God upon the world, calling for the last time upon sinners for repentance. This view has been advanced from some of the pulpits."

The question arises in our minds, are we, who believe that the last call of mercy is being heard, doing our whole duty to those around us? Let each child of the Lord do all in his power to persuade "the children of the wicked one" to desert from their cruel master, and join the company that will soon be made incorruptible and immortal, and established forever in the paradise of God, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are felt and feared no more.

The Christian's Future.

Oh, how the "present evil world" looks, when viewed beside that! How wretched, unlovely, dreary, fit only to feed the fires of the last day! Though it was once good, yea very good, sin spoiled all. But there 's no sin in

"That bright world to which I go,

"Joys substantial and sincere."

Weary saint, are you sick of earth—tired of being buffeted by wicked men and devils? Look yonder; see what God has prepared for you; you, and all the rest of our Father's family. A few more sorrows, a few more trials, a few more battles with "the world, the flesh, and the Devil," and we shall be at home. And such a home!

"And O, it fills my heart with joy,
To know we 're almost home."

Shall we not, my brethren and sisters, be indeed pilgrims and strangers here in this polluted, sin-defiled, God-hating world? What can we find here, what do we see or hear that does not make us long for home? True, we should be perfectly resigned to the will of our Heavenly Father; for he is "too wise to err, and too good to be unkind." With filial love, and gratitude and joy, we should heartily kiss the rod, and say, as did Job, "All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come." But entirely consonant with this blessed state of heart, methinks I hear the entire Church, the "bride" of Christ, cry out, with the Revelator; "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

These "vile bodies," which now, at best, are but a clod of animated dust, liable at any moment to become the prey of disease, pain, death and corruption, will then shine forth, clad in the bright robes of immortality. They will exchange ashes for beauty; sickness, disease, and pain, for the everlasting bloom of health and vigor; death, and the most distant fears of it, for eternal life. In short, these miserable, mortal bodies; these poor "tabernacles" of clay, which will just answer our purpose during this our brief pilgrimage, will be changed for bodies fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body.

Here, we are surrounded by wicked men, who harass and annoy the child of God; but there we shall ever have the best, the loveliest, the sweetest society. Instead of being obliged to feel the shafts of envy, hatred and malice from our fellow beings, we shall have the ecstatic joy of knowing ourselves beloved by every individual of that innumerable, heavenly band. Yes, and not only beloved by all, but loved too by each as he loves himself.

Here, we are subject to temptation within and temptation without; but when we reach that blissful land, "the Prince of the power of the air" will have been destroyed. No more tempting Devil then; no more alluring, fascinating world, to charm and lead astray; no more shall the flesh lust against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh. No, the warfare is ended and the soldiers discharged. The "old ship Zion" is safely moored in the harbor of eternal felicity.

Here, we are oppressed with heat, and pierced by cold, subject to hail, tempest, thunder and lightning; accidents, misfortunes, disappointments, cares and losses are the common lot of all; while poverty, gaunt, hungry want, is the lot of many. There is scarcely an end to the evils to which flesh is heir. But they'll ne'er invade that peaceful land. Nothing to disturb or molest there.

"No chilling winds, or poisonous breath
Can reach that healthful shore;
Sickness and sorrow, pain and death,
Are felt and feared no more."

Here, friends become enemies; the fondest hopes are blasted; those on whom we have lavished kindness, return evil for good; our hearts are often wrung with anguish on account of the ingratitude of others. But no such thing there. Nothing but love, and kindness, and harmony, will possess the breasts of those pure, and holy, and lovely ones who gain that blissful land.

Behold the earth created anew! The present earth is a miserable, crazy abode, fit only for travelers to tarry for a night. 'Tis like a house that is old and rickety, or that has been visited by a tornado. The windows are partly broken out; many of the clapboards torn away; some of them hanging by one end; the roof "leaky;" the once plastered walls partly bare, so that the piercing blasts of winter find an easy access; much of the furniture broken to pieces, &c. &c. Now, who in such circumstances would not desire a new, commodious, well furnished house? Who would refuse it, suppose some rich man should offer it gratuitously? And yet, men refuse to accept an inheritance in the New Earth! Now, this is but a sorry illustration of this old earth, compared with the new one. Never before have we witnessed, or imagined, such a glorious dwelling-place as will be given us when we arrive at home. Talk of the beauties of nature! a beautiful landscape, with its delightful groves, rich verdure, purling brooks, singing birds, lowing herds! Earth has never seen beauty yet since Eden's dire catastrophe, when "the ground became cursed for man's sake." The sun with its dazzling rays, illuminating and beautifying the face of Nature, is but dim and dark indeed compared with the glorious Sun of Righteousness which will be the light of that fair land.

In short, this gloomy earth will be completely thrown in the shade; or, as the Prophet says, it "shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." As we thus look back upon this dark world, its trifling joys and sorrows, its pleasure and pain will seem but as the short lived incidents of a dream. If disgust could find a place in heaven, methinks we should then be disgusted when we take a backward glance upon earth's wealth and splendor, pomp, pride and greatness. Oh, surely,

"Like a bubble 't will look
From the midst of a glorified throng."

Every thing which is truly good in the present state, with perhaps one exception, will be restored and be there; while that only which is positively evil, on account of evil, will be destroyed.

Christian, do you love any thing here? You shall have it again, if it is really good, and then it will be far more lovely. The wheat, both animate and inanimate, will all be gathered, while that which is chaff will be burned up. Thus the choice spirits, the lovely, the good of all ages—the "jewels" selected, one here, and another there, from the "rubbish" of "this present evil world," will all be there in the "casket," while the wicked will be destroyed, utterly "burned up." The selection of every thing good, and the rejection of every thing evil, will form a paradise too glorious for our dull minds to comprehend. The Lord gives us a little glimpse of it now and then, but,

"What will it be to be there!"

May that be the happy lot of both reader and writer, is the prayer of

Death and Judgment.

"It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment."

Whatever distinctions may obtain in life, none are made by death. In the "land of forgetfulness," all reach one common level. The crowned head, the haughty aristocrat, blend with the sons of toil and oppression in the dust of the grave. The proud Circassian and sooty surf slumber side by side in the sleep of death. The warrior's nerveless arm no longer grasps the weapon of slaughter nor spreads desolation over conquered realms. The children of wickedness are quiet; unbroken silence chains the blasphemer's tongue and hushes the voice of revelry. The lips of the prophet that portrayed the future—of the apostle and evangelist, that proclaimed redemption to a dying world, are sealed and motionless. The martyr's pangs are quelled, and the burden of toil, temptation and suffering, is left forever.

"Of all but moral character bereaved," all this silent throng await the day of decision,—the solemn, solemn judgment. Till that day, they sleep the dreamless sleep. No chronometer's index points the fleeting hours to the "lack-lustre eye." No bell gives "warning of the lapse of time," to "the dull, cold ear of death." No account is kept of days, or months, or years; for the bright lights of heaven which measure off these periods to "the busy tribes of flesh and blood," are veiled from the perceptions of those in that domain. The ebb and flow of the troubled sea of life rolls above them; but its heavy surges disturb not the slumbers of those silent chambers. The outbursts of joy, the wailings of grief, the din of war, or the pipings of peace, the revolutions of empires, or the desolations of nature, send no report to the depths of the grave. Whether prosperity or adversity reigns above,—whether the dearest friend or the most cherished cause comes to honor, or comes to nought, the sleeper's heart is unaffected. Generation after generation are coffined and placed with them, and the monumental marble dates their exit, till the hand of time erases every memento engraved upon the polished surface, and crumbles to dust the stone remembrance, that chronicles the passing ages,—but the sleepers mark not the long interval.

So dark is the night of death, so heavy its slumbers, so blank its unconscious repose, that death and judgment are placed by inspiration in close proximity. "After death the judgment!" O how near are the sublimities of the great day! So deep is the death-sleep that the inspired writers scarcely account the time, however long, but place the coming of Christ, the kingdom of God, and eternal glory, as alike near to all nations. In comforting the afflicted saints, they comfort the persecuted Christian, and the dying martyr with the prospect of the Savior's coming; and though thousands of years, in human reckoning, separated them from the "everlasting kingdom," yet so swiftly would the period of inanimation fleet, that the glazed eye was scarcely regarded as closing on scenes temporal, till it opens on scenes eternal!

Death is a dark valley, but, to the child of God, narrow. Its slumbers are profound, but they will soon be broken.—"Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." Because there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge in the state of death, let us do what our hands find to do with our might. Eternal life precedes the judgment, and is given to the followers of Christ alone; while the eternal night of the second death awaits the impenitent sinner. No gospel message is provided for those who neglect the great salvation in any coming era. No resurrection power ever visits the vaults of "everlasting destruction!" O that men were wise, that they understood their latter end!

May the readers of the "Crisis" prepare to meet God. May we "be diligent to be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless," may the "word of the Lord have "free course, run and be glorified," proving a "savor of life unto life" to many.—If we die, may we die "in the Lord"—"sleep in Jesus," and "awake in his likeness." Amen.

Recipe to Make Bad Children.

If you want your children to snarl, fret, scold, and become saucy, take the following course before them, and with them. When they ask you for anything you do not wish them to have, say, "You shan't," "I won't," "Go along out of the way," "Get out of the way," "Get out of the house," "Be still," "No more of your clack," &c. Say it in an angry tone, with gestures that indicate to the child you are mad, all out of patience, or never had any.

2. When you wish to correct a mistake, or improper statement, say, "You lie," "That's a falsehood," "I never said it," "You know better," "It's just like you," "You can't tell the truth." If you do not always have occasion to use this kind of talk to your children, use it to your wife, or the wife to the husband, or either, to your servants, before the children. They will soon learn the language, and catch the spirit of it, too; and in due time will give it back to you, in all its varied accents and beautiful styles.

I have seen this rule applied in many instances, and it seldom fails to produce the effect when the children are intelligent, unless they chance to be of a very amiable disposition, so as to become disgusted.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

Bro. Grant:—I was called upon Monday to go to Stowe, Mass., and attend the funeral of little Geo. Henry, the son of Bro. Samuel and Sr. Rogers, who died Sunday, April 18th, of lung fever, aged 1 year and 9 months.

Thus we see that death is doing its cruel work of destroying life and causing all hearts to bleed, filling the land with weeping and sorrow. So on this occasion the sudden death of little Geo. H. has sadly afflicted our brother and sister. They sigh, they weep, and feel most deeply their loss. But their hope joyfully looks forward to the time when the dead shall live again. For they most fully believe that with Rachel's children, little George Henry will come again from the land of the enemy and enter the Paradise of God and there have eternal life. God bless the parents with the sweet consolations of the gospel and a readiness to meet their loved one in the kingdom of God, where parting will be known no more forever.

Thy brother,

"Don't Tell Father."

There is many a good mother who plans the ruin of the child she dearly loves—teaches him the first lesson in wrong by simply saying, "Now don't tell father."—Surely, mothers do it thoughtlessly, ignorantly, not considering that it is a first lesson in deception.

It is not at all strange that gamblers, and liars, and thieves, and hypocrites, and distrustful, evil-minded people so abound, when weak loving mothers, with honeyed words and carresses, sweeten the little teachings that so soon ripen into all kinds of meanness and unprincipled rascality.

I heard a kind, well-meaning mother say to the puny baby in her arms—"Well, birdie shall have its good candy every day; bad papa shan't know it; see how he loves it!" and the little thing, whose reach of life had not a whole winter in it yet, snatched at the bright red and blue colored poison, and made as many glad motions as though it took its whole body to suck it with. The poor little thing had been fed on candy, almost, and fretted for more wherever its mouth was not filled. Even the nourishment nature had provided, did not satisfy it, for it was not as sweet as candy.

I thought it was no wonder, if children

Correspondence.

From Bro. M. Chandler.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I thought it would interest some to read a few lines from me, and learn my position and work. It has been some time since I have written. I have spent most of my time since last June in preaching the word, and all of my time for the last six months. The Lord has blessed his word, and many have been converted to God. I have traveled through the North part of this State, and some in Wisconsin; some South, and also in Iowa. I visited the churches in McHenry, Stephenson and Jo Davis counties—had a good time. The past winter, I spent some time in Crawford Co., Wis., in a new field, and God blessed his truth, and a goodly number, I trust, were converted to God. A number of Universalists and two infidels were converted to the truth, and, I trust, to God. A goodly number embraced the truth. There is a great desire to hear more, but I have not been able to visit them or you, but hope to soon.

I have spent some time in Warren Co., this State, since February, and have found a church there, baptized sixteen, and expect to baptize more soon. The work is going on there gloriously; it commenced under the labors of Bro. Rathburn, who has just started out to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. He has been convinced for years he ought to preach, but let the cares of this life prevent. He has broke loose at last, and God has blest his labors, and I pray that he may be a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the truth. He is arranging his matters to devote his whole time to the work of the ministry. We still pray God to raise up faithful men for his vineyard, who can stand the privations and trials of the West, for the field is ripe, all ready for the harvest, and laborers are few. Some who came out and tried the western field for a season, have returned East again. If God has got any servants East that feel the woe if they preach not the gospel, and can trust him for their support, and can labor for the salvation of souls, and leave the consequences with God, I pray the Lord to send them West. There has never been such anxiety to hear the word since 1843, as at the present time.

I would not be understood to excuse the people West for not doing more for the support of the cause. We must all stand before the Judge for ourselves. If through covetousness or any other cause, the gospel is hindered, there is a reckoning day just at the door. We must meet it. God will do right on his part and the great question is, will we? I believe the time for labor is almost over. We must work while the day lasts. Trials will soon be ended, sorrow over, tears dried, battles fought, victory won, triumph gained, immortality put on, crown of life given, and an inheritance received. O! how glorious! In view of the exceeding great and precious promises we will go on. I do not wonder that the apostle Paul, in view of what was before him, lost sight of the past, and considered all was nothing compared to the future inheritance. Let us imitate the great apostle and the inheritance will be ours.

Your brother as ever, in hope of immortality when the Lord comes,

From Bro. P. Tandy.

Dear Bro. Grant:—This is a solemn and interesting day to me, from the fact that it is the 46th year of my mortal life; and the 30th year of my christian experience; and the 4th year of my best religious life. Four years ago this day, I prepared my first article for the Crisis. Since that time I have written about forty pieces for the above named paper; and I still feel that I am an unprofitable servant in the vineyard of the Lord.

I was cut off from christian liberty and free toleration by a majority of the acting members of the church to which I belonged. I told them I could not live so; that I must have liberty to express my views and feelings as I saw them delineated in God's word. After considerable opposition from my professed friends and brethren, for several months, I resolved to leave the church; and I said to them, that if I could not have the privilege of telling the truth to the units, and the tens that met in their little vestry for prayer and conference, I would tell it to hundreds and thousands through the medium of my pen. Their minister requested me publicly, (at one of their conferences) to desist from advocating any views in opposition to their own sentiments. Some of their number said, amen! I consequently left, not only the church, but the conference and prayer meetings. Then I felt lonely and sad. But my sadness was soon turned into joy, believing that my suffering was in consequence of my believing in the truth of God, and closely adhering thereto. I know the truth does make me free, and happy too. Praise the Lord! Now, dear brother, and all my christian friends who may read this article, let me say to you, in the name of the Lord, that we have the promise that if we abide in Christ, and his words abide in us, we may ask what we will, and it shall be done!

O may God, the mighty God of Jacob, help us to be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord! "All that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." We have had no Advent preaching here for more than a year; only what we could get from the sure word of prophecy and advent papers and books. We feel that we are exalted to heaven by religious privileges, notwithstanding we are deprived the privilege of hearing the living preacher's voice of the right stamp. We have been praying the Lord to send us an under Shepherd, to break to us the bread of life, and to instruct us more perfectly into the things of the kingdom of God. But personal responsibility rests upon us all! If we cannot have special help, or a faithful minister of Christ to labor with us, we must be contented to work single handed in that respect; but let God work in us to will and to do of his own good pleasure. O, brother, sister, be faithful, faithful, faithful till you all arrive at home!

Yours in hope, and patient waiting for Christ,

P. Tandy.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 5, 1858.

Coming of Christ.

The Lord seems to be arousing many in the different churches to look for his second coming immediately. This is what we have been anxiously expecting, and we look upon it as one of the interesting signs of the times. This truth seems to be particularly felt by the most devoted class of christians, many of whom are very anxious to hear on the subject. We anticipate an increasing interest among the children of the Lord as we approach the great event which is to consummate the christian's hope. For nearly six thousand years the church has been looking for the glorious day when Paradise would be restored, and the kingdom of God be established on the earth. The disciples were anxious to know, before the Savior ascended to the Father, when he would come again and restore the kingdom. He mentioned a chain of events reaching from the first century through the dark ages, and the scenes of bloody persecution, till we come near the close of the last century, when the days of tribulation were to cease, and signs of his second coming would begin to appear, which should cause rejoicing in the hearts of his children, because their redemption was drawing near. Those signs appeared at the appointed time, and in the manner specified, hence there can be no doubt but that the event indicated by the signs will be as literally and faithfully accomplished as any part of the prophecy. All things indicate that we may soon expect to see the great Redeemer of our fallen race. Can we not echo the expression of John upon the isle of Patmos,—"Even so come Lord Jesus?" Thank the Lord there are some responsive hearts, who even have need of patience to wait for the glad day to arrive. We do not wonder that Dr. Watts wrote,—

"How bright the vision, O how long
Shall this glad hour delay?
Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

This, we think, expresses the feelings of every disciple of Christ. How can it be otherwise? if we love Jesus, do we not love his appearing? Paul tells us, there is "a crown of righteousness" for "all them also that love his appearing." The plain inference is, there is no crown for those who do not love the appearing of Christ. We can not understand how one can love Jesus, and not love to see him. We now find many anxious to talk on the subject, who, till recently, have shown great indifference, and even dislike to the subject.

When in Ct. a few weeks since, a good deacon was asked, what do you think of this great revival? He replied, "I think it is the sealing time." A devoted member of another church gave about the same answer. Inquiry was made of a minister in the place, who has recently received very rich blessings from the Lord, and much light on the Scriptures; and we found he was looking for the Lord soon to come. Thus the Spirit of God is awakening new and deeper interest on the subject of the second advent of the Messiah. Talk of the beauties of nature! a beautiful landscape, with its delightful groves, rich verdure, purling brooks, singing birds, lowing herds! Earth has never seen beauty yet since Eden's dire catastrophe, when "the ground became cursed for man's sake." The sun with its dazzling rays, illuminating and beautifying the face of Nature, is but dim and dark indeed compared with the glorious Sun of Righteousness which will be the light of that fair land.

In short, this gloomy earth will be completely thrown in the shade; or, as the Prophet says, it "shall not be remembered, nor come into mind." As we thus look back upon this dark world, its trifling joys and sorrows, its pleasure and pain will seem but as the short lived incidents of a dream. If disgust could find a place in heaven, methinks we should then be disgusted when we take a backward glance upon earth's wealth and splendor, pomp, pride and greatness. Oh, surely,

"Like a bubble 't will look
From the midst of a glorified throng."

Every thing which is truly good in the present state, with perhaps one exception, will be restored and be there; while that only which is positively evil, on account of evil, will be destroyed.

Christian, do you love any thing here? You shall have it again. If it is really good, and then it will be far more lovely. The wheat, both animate and inanimate, will all be gathered, while that which is chaff will be burned up. Thus the choice spirits, the lovely, the good of all ages—the "jewels" selected, one here, and another there, from the "rubbish" of "this present evil world," will all be there in the "casket," while the wicked will be destroyed, utterly "burned up." The selection of every thing good, and the rejection of every thing evil, will form a paradise too glorious for our dull minds to comprehend. The Lord gives us a little glimpse of it now and then, but,

"What will it be to be there!"

May that be the happy lot of both reader and writer, is the prayer of

Death and Judgment.

"It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment."

Whatever distinctions may obtain in life, none are made by death. In the "land of forgetfulness," all reach one common level. The crowned head, the haughty aristocrat, blend with the sons of toil and oppression in the dust of the grave. The proud Circassian and sooty surf slumber side by side in the sleep of death. The warrior's nerveless arm no longer grasps the weapon of slaughter nor spreads desolation over conquered realms. The children of wickedness are quiet; unbroken silence chains the blasphemer's tongue and hushes the voice of revelry. The lips of the prophet that portrayed the future—of the apostle and evangelist, that proclaimed redemption to a dying world, are sealed and motionless. The martyr's pangs are quelled, and the burden of toil, temptation and suffering, is left forever.

"Of all but moral character bereaved," all this silent throng await the day of decision,—the solemn, solemn judgment. Till that day, they sleep the dreamless sleep. No chronometer's index points the fleeting hours to the "lack-lustre eye." No bell gives "warning of the lapse of time," to "the dull, cold ear of death." No account is kept of days, or months, or years; for the bright lights of heaven which measure off these periods to "the busy tribes of flesh and blood," are veiled from the perceptions of those in that domain. The ebb and flow of the troubled sea of life rolls above them; but its heavy surges disturb not the slumbers of those silent chambers. The outbursts of joy, the wailings of grief, the din of war, or the pipings of peace, the revolutions of empires, or the desolations of nature, send no report to the depths of the grave. Whether prosperity or adversity reigns above,—whether the dearest friend or the most cherished cause comes to honor, or comes to nought, the sleeper's heart is unaffected. Generation after generation are coffined and placed with them, and the monumental marble dates their exit, till the hand of time erases every memento engraved upon the polished surface, and crumbles to dust the stone remembrance, that chronicles the passing ages,—but the sleepers mark not the long interval.

So dark is the night of death, so heavy its slumbers, so blank its unconscious repose, that death and judgment are placed by inspiration in close proximity. "After death the judgment!" O how near are the sublimities of the great day! So deep is the death-sleep that the inspired writers scarcely account the time, however long, but place the coming of Christ, the kingdom of God, and eternal glory, as alike near to all nations. In comforting the afflicted saints, they comfort the persecuted Christian, and the dying martyr with the prospect of the Savior's coming; and though thousands of years, in human reckoning, separated them from the "everlasting kingdom," yet so swiftly would the period of inanimation fleet, that the glazed eye was scarcely regarded as closing on scenes temporal, till it opens on scenes eternal!

Death is a dark valley, but, to the child of God, narrow. Its slumbers are profound, but they will soon be broken.—"Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." Because there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge in the state of death, let us do what our hands find to do with our might. Eternal life precedes the judgment, and is given to the followers of Christ alone; while the eternal night of the second death awaits the impenitent sinner. No gospel message is provided for those who neglect the great salvation in any coming era. No resurrection power ever visits the vaults of "everlasting destruction!" O that men were wise, that they understood their latter end!

May the readers of the "Crisis" prepare to meet God. May we "be diligent to be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless," may the "word of the Lord have "free course, run and be glorified," proving a "savor of life unto life" to many.—If we die, may we die "in the Lord"—"sleep in Jesus," and "awake in his likeness." Amen.

Recipe to Make Bad Children.

If you want your children to snarl, fret, scold, and become saucy, take the following course before them, and with them. When they ask you for anything you do not wish them to have, say, "You shan't,' "I won't," "Go along out of the way," "Get out of the way," "Get out of the house," "Be still," "No more of your clack," &c. Say it in an angry tone, with gestures that indicate to the child you are mad, all out of patience, or never had any.

2. When you wish to correct a mistake, or improper statement, say, "You lie," "That's a falsehood," "I never said it," "You know better," "It's just like you," "You can't tell the truth." If you do not always have occasion to use this kind of talk to your children, use it to your wife, or the wife to the husband, or either, to your servants, before the children. They will soon learn the language, and catch the spirit of it, too; and in due time will give it back to you, in all its varied accents and beautiful styles.

I have seen this rule applied in many instances, and it seldom fails to produce the effect when the children are intelligent, unless they chance to be of a very amiable disposition, so as to become disgusted.

From Eld. L. Boutell.

Bro. Grant:—I was called upon Monday to go to Stowe, Mass., and attend the funeral of little Geo. Henry, the son of Bro. Samuel and Sr. Rogers, who died Sunday, April 18th, of lung fever, aged 1 year and 9 months.

Thus we see that death is doing its cruel work of destroying life and causing all hearts to bleed, filling the land with weeping and sorrow. So on this occasion the sudden death of little Geo. H. has sadly afflicted our brother and sister. They sigh, they weep, and feel most deeply their loss. But their hope joyfully looks forward to the time when the dead shall live again. For they most fully believe that with Rachel's children, little George Henry will come again from the land of the enemy and enter the Paradise of God and there have eternal life. God bless the parents with the sweet consolations of the gospel and a readiness to meet their loved one in the kingdom of God, where parting will be known no more forever.

Thy brother,

L. Boutell.

For the Children.

"Don't Tell Father."

There is many a good mother who plans the ruin of the child she dearly loves—teaches him the first lesson in wrong by simply saying, "Now don't tell father."—Surely, mothers do it thoughtlessly, ignorantly, not considering that it is a first lesson in deception.

It is not at all strange that gamblers, and liars, and thieves, and hypocrites, and distrustful, evil-minded people so abound, when weak loving mothers, with honeyed words and carresses, sweeten the little teachings that so soon ripen into all kinds of meanness and unprincipled rascality.

I heard a kind, well-meaning mother say to the puny baby in her arms—"Well, birdie shall have its good candy every day; bad papa shan't know it; see how he loves it!" and the little thing, whose reach of life had not a whole winter in it yet, snatched at the bright red and blue colored poison, and made as many glad motions as though it took its whole body to suck it with. The poor little thing had been fed on candy, almost, and fretted for more wherever its mouth was not filled. Even the nourishment nature had provided, did not satisfy it, for it was not as sweet as candy.

I thought it was no wonder, if children

are taught even in babyhood, that papa was bad, and ugly, and unkind, that in youth they should call him a "snob" and the "old man," and the mother, whom they had learned by experience had no stability of character, and was capable of deception, it is not strange they should so little respect her as to call her "old woman."

I shudder when I hear the frequent words drop from young lips—"Oh, I must not let father know that!"

The father may be a stern man, rigid in his way of bringing up children, but he has a heart somewhere, and surely truthful, honest, loving words from his own child will find that warm place. So it is best never to deceive him in any thing, but keep his confidence unshaken, and the whiteness of the soul unstained by that loathsome sin, deception.

"Father don't allow me to read novels," said a young lady to me lately, "but mother does, and so we two read all we can get, and he never knows it;" and she giggled as though it were very cunning and worthy of praise, to so completely deceive poor, good father.

My soul sickened at the idea of a wife daring to teach her children to disobey their father; of the daughter vain and unprincipled, with such a mother to teach and guide her. Better for the world she had never been born.—Ohio Cul.

LINES.

On the Death of Sister Sophia Wyman.

There is sadness in our home to-day,
A cold, dark weight of woe,
And many tears are falling
For our sister death laid low.

After life's dull, fitful fever,
She is resting calmly now,
No more restless weight of anguish,
No more painful throbbing brow.

Yet we loved our gentle sister,
And we find it hard to part,
Hard to yield our cherished treasure
And to calm the aching heart.

We have tried to look to Jesus,
Tried to learn submission's part,
For he says we shall find comfort
If we come with trusting heart.

Trusting in the precious promise—
I will come to earth again,—
And will raise my sleeping children
In my kingdom e'er to reign.

Health Department.

Can Cancers be Cured?

Dr. J. B. Terry, of Hartford, in his advertisement says that "Cancers can be Cured," not by the scalpel or acids, but simply by the application of a vegetable plaster, which causes a suppuration and a separation of the cancer from the healthy parts, until in a few days the cancer comes away, leaving the surrounding parts entirely free from inflammation and in a condition to rapidly return to a healthy state. If these claims of Dr. Terry are reliable, and cancers can be removed and effectually cured without subjecting the patient to a surgical operation, the fact should be known. We claim that the medical faculty who have never as yet succeeded in discovering a remedy for this terrible malady, ought, as a duty to the public, to examine into this new remedy, and if it is not a reliable remedy, let the public know the fact. And on the other hand, if after a careful test it is found to be a sure remedy, the profession should say so. We believe that Mr. Terry invites the faculty to test his claims thoroughly. He has a case now in hand which will enable the faculty, if they are so disposed, to test the merits of this remedy. It is that of a lady, who has now been in the doctor's hands for about three weeks for a large cancer on the breast. Three days since the whole cancer came away, leaving the surrounding parts perfectly healthy and the deep saucer-shaped wound, some five inches in diameter, entirely free from all appearance of disease, there being no bleeding or discharging, and giving every appearance of being in a condition to heal rapidly. A physician who saw the case, and who had been very sceptical as to the merits of the remedy, remarked that the result thus far was truly wonderful. We do not by any means pretend to endorse the doctor's claims, but deem it a duty the profession owe to the public to give them the benefit of their medical knowledge as to the merits or demerits of the remedy. The lady patient to whom we refer is able to take the air and is in the enjoyment of good health.—Hartford Times.

Animal Poisons.

The venom of the bee and the wasp has a liquid contained in a small vesicle, forced through the hollow tube of the sting into the wound inflicted by that instrument. From the experiments of Fontana, we learn that it bears a striking resemblance to the poison of the viper. That of the bee is much longer in drying when exposed to the air than the venom of the wasp. The sting of the bee should be immediately extricated, and the best application is opium and olive oil; one drachm of the former finely powdered, and rubbed down with one ounce of the latter, and applied to the parts affected by means of lint, which should be frequently renewed. From the rapidity with which these animals destroy their prey, and even one another, we cannot doubt that their poison is sufficiently virulent. Soft poultices of fresh flesh, bread and milk, or in the absence of these, even mud, are excellent applications to the sting of insects, and even the bites of the most venomous snakes. The specifics recommended in such cases for internal use, are not to be compared in efficiency with the timely application of a poultice of the flesh of a chicken or other animal recently killed. The flesh of the rattlesnake itself is, in some parts of America reckoned to possess specific virtues, and doubtless will answer nearly, if not quite as well, as any other good soft and moist poultice, which will seldom fail to effect a cure when promptly applied and frequently renewed. In this way the irritation and inflammation induced by the poison in the part bitten, is often arrested and prevented from extending to vital parts. These conclusions are the results of experiments made with the poison of the rattlesnake, in which the most celebrated Indian and other specifics were used with little or no advantage.

THE TEETH.—At the Dental convention holden at Boston, some of the Dentists asserted that the main, if not the sole cause of defective teeth, was the use of saleratus and cream of tartar in the manufacture of bread, and Dr. Baker fully agreed with the facts which it stated, and gave the results of some experiments which he had made by soaking sound teeth in a solution of saleratus. The teeth were destroyed in fourteen days. Mr. Spaulding, of St. Louis, did not believe that alkali injured teeth, but acknowledged that saleratus did. Saleratus, in his opinion, is not an alkali. Dr. Kendrick, of New Orleans, considered the great means of keeping the teeth healthy was to keep them clean.

Foreign News.

ENGLAND AND FRANCE.—The intelligent London correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser still adheres to his opinion that Louis Napoleon is determined to support his despotism by a war with England, at no distant day. He says this opinion is gaining ground in both countries, and every minor indication, from day to day, points to this conclusion. He says:

"The first signal of the struggle may come at any moment, since nothing could be plainer than that a pretext is now all that is waited for. The refugee difficulty failed to answer the purpose at the time, but even that is still looked to as capable of affording the necessary material for a rupture, in case no other subject should offer that will involve a less flagrant disregard of decency. When Count Walewski withdrew from further discussion on the point, he left it to the people of England to do what was requisite. But the people of England have never yet admitted that any thing was requisite. Therefore they are not likely to do any thing, and the charge can at any time be raised that they have repaid the generous reliance of the Emperor by an insulting indifference. In the hands of Marshal Pelissier a reclamation of this kind will not be frittered down by delicate handling. But it is evidently hoped that some more covert and diplomatic cause of rupture may be found without delay.

Very likely on the re-assembling of Parliament the speeches of the peace members in the House of Commons—Messrs. Bright, Milner Gibson, and others—will furnish the requisite offence. It is enough that an assault upon us has been resolved on."

IMPENDING REVOLUTION IN SPAIN.—The Paris correspondent of the London Times writes:

"A letter from Madrid of the 4th, has the following: 'The plot for the overthrow of the throne of Queen Isabella, and which is known by the name of the "Fusion," begins to awaken general curiosity, in spite of the efforts of the personages who are favorable to it, and who would prefer carrying it on in silence. Attention is still more roused by the air of mystery. Every one knows that it is at Aranjuez the conspirators have resolved to exercise a moral pressure on the Queen. Perhaps the only one among those who surround her who will resist the consummation of the sacrifice is M. Isturitz—but, as I have already said, he cannot do much.'"

CHURCH SERVICE IN A CANTON TEMPLE.—A correspondent of the Watchman, at Canton, writes as follows:

"To think of the Church of England service, and a British sermon in a Mandarin's yamun, which I attended last Sunday, or of worshiping the true God with a Christian congregation in the temple of the favorite goddess Kawn Yin, which I hope to do to-morrow, is certainly enough to make the wooden deities themselves start into life, if they were any thing at all but vanity."

LETTER FROM PARIS.

THE POLITICAL CONDITION OF EUROPE.

PARIS, April 8.

You may depend upon it this imperial enthusiasm of the interested, this boasted imperial action is destined to experience a terrible reaction, the like of which the world has never seen.

Glance over all Europe and see how delicate is the posture of affairs in general. Sardinia and Naples are on the eve of an open rupture on their difference respecting the steamship Cagliari. The effervescence in Lombardo-Venitia is so great, the Austrian Government has deemed it prudent to send three additional regiments thither. Since 1848 there has not been so much agitation in Lombardy and Venice. A few nights ago, Mme. Strozzi, a Venetian lady of rank, entered the Fenice, wearing, by accident, a head dress adorned with yellow and black feathers (these are the Austrian colors.) The moment she was perceived, such a clamor was raised in the theatre that she was instantly obliged to retire, and to call upon Austrian officers for protection; a good many arrests were made, and the next night the theatre was closed, "by order." Whenever a play is brought out in which conspirators appear, they are vehemently applauded. A short time since the stage directors of some play required the Doge of Venice to appear in old costume. Such frantic applause as greeted this image of the past so dear, was never commanded even by Taglioni or Rubini in their prime. At Padua and Paiva (both still seats of universities, faded though their splendor is) the students sent twenty francs to a cure, with a request that he would say mass for the soul of some deceased person at an appointed time, without, however, letting him know for whom the mass was intended. The students went to the church in a body, and sang una voce the Requiem, announcing it was for the repose of Orsini's soul. It was the trial of Orsini, M. Jules Favre's speech and Orsini's letter which has roused Italy to a fever scarcely lower than that which fired the Peninsula in '48. The relation of France and Switzerland are far from being satisfactory, the Federal Government of Switzerland being strongly opposed to the establishment of new consular agents in towns on the Helvetio-Gallo frontier for military reasons, while France threatens Switzerland with retiring the exequator from all Swiss consuls in France if the new consuls are not accepted. The position of France and England is also unsatisfactory, for not only the alliance is in the same weakened condition, but the occupation of the island of Perim by England, is looked upon as a violation of existing treaties, which the interests of France and Russia require them to resist with energy. Marshal Pelissier leaves this week for London, and the papers say "the alliance depends upon the reception he, and the propositions he carries, meet."

There is a sinister rumor afloat that all the generals, especially those of the engineering corps, who served in the Crimea, "will avail themselves of the opportunity" to present their homage to the Queen. If they do go to England, it is merely to make a military reconnoissance with that perfidy habitual to this race, under the guise of a friendly visit. Marshal Pelissier is not only accompanied by the usual legation, but he is attended with his staff, ordnance officers and aides-de-camp. All this looks disagreeable. It is said his embassy will be the most splendid ever sent by France anywhere; a state carriage is making for him which will be finer even than Marshal Soult's coach for Queen Victoria's coronation. He will possess an income of $100,000 a year as ambassador, and the Emperor orders him to be extravagant with it; the salary of ambassador is $50,000 a year; he has a national income as Duke of $20,000 a year, $6000 per annum as Marshal, and $6000 as Senator.

France is delivered over to the soldiers. The rumor is current that M. de Bourquency is to be recalled, and Marshal Canrobert sent to Vienna as the French ambassador! How long will France submit quietly to the heel of soldiers' boots? By the way, thirty-eight French officers (most of them of tarnished character) go to Persia with Ferruk Khan, to initiate the Persians in the black arts of civilization, shooting and stealing. M. Carlier, sometime Prefect of Police, is dead.

SPIRIDION.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, March 4th, Mary Emeline, only daughter of Horatio and Pauline Slater, of Granby, Mass., aged nine years, one month and five days. Her disease was consumption.

She was peculiarly sensitive, and often suffered keenly from the weakness of the nervous system to which different diseases had subjected her. She was naturally of a pious turn of mind, and even at that tender age united morning and evening with her parents at the family altar. She would inquire very anxiously respecting subjects and passages of Scripture, and appeared very much interested and delighted with them. She was a beautiful singer, but her sweet voice is hushed in death, her lovely form is laid away in the cold and silent grave, awaiting the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, when she will arise in immortal bloom and beauty, and sing with the redeemed forever in the kingdom of God. May the Lord support, by his grace, the afflicted parents, and bring them to meet, an unbroken family, at last, where there will be no parting with dear ones, no silent farewell tear.

Sweet Mary's gone to rest awhile,
Free from the sorrows of this life;
But soon dear Mary will arise
To meet her Savior in the skies.

Sweetly she sung while here on earth,
But soon immortal she'll come forth
To sing more sweetly in that home
Where pain and death can never come.

This lovely form, so young and fair,
Laid in the silent tomb,
Just came to show how sweet a flower
In Paradise could bloom.

M. L. PRATT.

Fell asleep, at Pine Swamp, Ct., Mary M., daughter of David H. and Elmira Bronson, aged 17 years and 8 months.

Sister Mary embraced the Savior about four years since, and was baptised, in company with others, by Eld. F. Morgan. About two weeks before her last sickness she met with the church in that place, and gave her testimony in favor of Christ and his cause. This was the last time she met with the people of God at their place of worship. She was taken sick the 20th day of March, and for a few days was not considered dangerous. A physician being called, and her case being decided a critical one, every effort was made to arrest the disease, (which was typhoid fever, inflammation of the bowels, congestion of the lungs,) but to no purpose; she grew worse every day.

Being in the place and hearing of her sickness I called to see her and found her very low. I asked her if she wished to have us pray. "Oh yes," said she, "I shall enjoy it so much." After praying, we endeavored to encourage her in trusting in the Lord, whom she believed, loved and cared for her.

She expressed much satisfaction in having her christian friends visit her. I called to see her again in the afternoon, and was much pleased to see the change that had taken place, which we supposed was for the better. Her voice seemed strong and clear, and we talked of our former acquaintance in that place, and of the goodness and mercy of the Lord toward us, and indulged the hope of seeing her restored to her friends and the society of the children of God.

We called on her the next morning. But it was evident that death was near; yet she retained the same quiet, patient spirit which she has manifested to an uncommon degree from a child, and has won for her the friendship and esteem of all who knew her. It was a common remark, that "Mary has not an enemy in the world,"—it was the testimony of her physician that he had never seen so much patience and resignation manifested in all his practice and experience. Never have I felt the religion of the gospel as I did there, and have since. I could fully believe and realize the poet's sentiment, that—

"Jesus can make a dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are."

From this time it was evident that she was fast failing. Called to see her on Wednesday, and prayed with her for the last time—went to her bedside. She raised her eyes and said, "Will Bro. Brazee pray with me?" I stood a moment as the friend that waited on her was engaged in some act of kindness for her. She looked up again; —"Will Bro. Brazee pray pretty soon?" After prayer, she seemed for a time to be more at rest.

In the afternoon, she called her friends to her bedside and exhorted them to live so as to meet her in the kingdom. She said she should live till about night. When about the time of the sun's going down, she sweetly fell asleep, to awake no more until the resurrection morn.

The funeral services were appointed on Friday at 10 o'clock, at the residence of her father, where the writer endeavored to comfort the afflicted family and friends from the words of the apostle, found in 1 Thess., chapter 4th.

S. S. BRAZEE.

Chester Factories, Mass.

Peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, in Danielsonville, Ct., April 16th, our beloved sister Susan Brayton, aged 37 years.

Funeral discourse preached from 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14, by Bro. Joseph Brown of Providence.

Sister Brayton at the early age of 13 gave her heart to God and has tried to serve him faithfully since, notwithstanding her peculiar sorrows, known fully only to him who knows the secrets of all hearts.

After an illness of twelve weeks, much of which time her pain was acute, though borne with Christion resignation, she fell calmly asleep without a groan.

A few weeks before she died, though she felt at peace with God, she would exclaim, "My poor children! What will become of them!" But before sleeping she could say, "I trust them in the hands of the same God I trust myself in. We feel confident that God even our Father will keep the motherless ones committed to his care. She left a husband and five interesting children, two beloved sisters, beside the church, who keenly feel their loss, yet are submissive to the will of God.

JANE D. ROBERTS.

Danielsonville, Ct., Apr. 25th, 1858

Cease, stricken hearts, no longer mourn,
For her whose breath is fled;
Our sister in the grave is laid,—
She resteth with the dead.

Those dear loved lips have softly bade
Their long, their last good bye
And gentle hands have smoothed her brow
And closed her faded eye.

O weep not that your cherished one
Has found rest in the tomb;
For in the Paradise of God
She'll yet in beauty bloom.

Then weep not for the dear loved one
Whose earthly race is run,
But meekly bow before the Lord
And say, "Thy will be done!"

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

[From the New York Independent.]

OHIO.—The following narrative was tolp at the business men's prayer-meeting in Cincinnati by Hon. Bellamy Storer, formerly M. C.

"He said, on last Thursday morning, at 10 o'clock, a gentleman rapped at the door of Rev. Dr. Fisher's study, at the Second Presbyterian church. Being invited in, he inquired for the sexton. 'I am the editor of an infidel paper in the City of New York; and traveling on the cars last night and this morning, I awoke with a sound ringing in my ears, saying, Repent! repent! and it has been ringing in my ears ever since; and passing this house, I saw in front of it a card stating that there is a prayer meeting in this house every noon. I wish to send a request to that prayer meeting for their prayers in my behalf.' Dr. F. conversed with him for some time, and found him under the most deep and pungent conviction; and they knelt down together and united in solemn and earnest prayer. After which at the Doctor's request, he prayed for himself, and arose from his knees rejoicing in hope. Then he said, 'I once had a praying wife, but by my infidel influence she was induced to change her religious sentiments. I now ask for the prayers of that meeting for her.' On Saturday last her case was made the subject of special prayer in that meeting."

FROM CALIFORNIA.

The great religious revival going on in the Atlantic States is beginning to be felt here. The religious enthusiasm is increasing, and revivals are expected in several of the churches. The attendance at churches has been very much increased of late.

"WHAT'S THE NEWS?"

Isa. 21 : 11; Rom. 13: 12.

Lo! I've something more to say
 Of the news! of the news!
Signs and shadows of the day
 Speak of news, speak of news.
That he, the loved—the crucified—
Soon will come to take his bride
To dwell forever at his side—
 That's the news! that's the news!

The Lamb of God who once was slain,—
 That's the news! that's the news!—
In glory soon will come again,
 That's the news! that's the news!
He'll come unto the world again,
And with his people then remain,
On David's throne for aye to reign,
 That's the news! that's the news!

He comes! he comes! O that's the news!
 Joyful news! joyful news!
He comes, old Satan's head to bruise,
 Joyful news! joyful news!
With power to bind the broken heart,
And to his church full joy impart,
And bid the sorrowing night depart,
 Joyful news! joyful news!

The resurrection morn is near,
 That's the news, that's the news!
The seventh trumpet speaks it here,
 That's the news, that's the news!
The dead in Christ will then arise
To meet their Lord in yonder skies,
And enter God's bright Paradise,
 Cheerful news, cheerful news!

The hour of judgment then will come,
 Solemn news, solemn news,—
The angel cry abroad "'Tis done,"
 Solemn news, solemn news.
Great Babylon ere then shall fall,
The wicked judged, both great and small,
The saints rewarded, one and all,
 That's the news, that's the news!

The judgment day is hast'ning on,
 Solemn news, solemn news,—
The Judge will come, it won't be long—
 Solemn news, solemn news.
Then haste, O sinner, e'er 'tis done;
O haste to God's long-suffering One!
Repent, and flee the wrath to come—
 Heed the news, heed the news!

Earth's kingdoms all will soon become—
 Cheerful news, cheerful news!—
The kingdoms of God's only Son,
 Cheerful news, cheerful news!
And God himself on earth will dwell,
Destroy the curse, and death, and hell,
Then to our tears we'll bid farewell,
 That's the news! that's the news!

And who could not rejoice to hear
 This glad news—this glad news?
And pray the Lord would bring it near?—
 This glad news, this glad news!
And pray God's blessed kingdom come,
And pray his holy will be done,
That heaven and earth might blend in one?
 Glorious news, glorious news!

No. II.

TO UNCLE FRED;—Dear Uncle; you are, as I am aware, identified with that class of expositors who take the position that the kingdom of Christ was established at his first advent; that it was then in its incipient state, as shadowed forth by the "mustard-seed" and "the leaven" in the parables; and that it is to increase, until, as in the illustration, the tiny seed becomes a "great tree," and the leaven operates until the whole lump is leavened. That the stone was "cut out of the mountain" 1800 years ago, and has since been rolling onward through the world, and will eventually "fill the whole earth." That at the coming of Christ, his kingdom becomes submerged in the eternal kingdom of God—Christ ceases to reign, and the saints are all translated to heaven. If in any thing you differ from this view, please correct me.

I take the ground that the kingdom of Christ will not be established until his second advent—that the "stone cut out of the mountain" will not gradually, but suddenly become "a great mountain," and that it will not "fill the whole earth" until it has first demolished all earthly governments. That when in your opinion Christ ceases to reign, he does, in verity, but just begin; and that he will reign "forever." Thus antagonistical are our sentiments on this subject, and were I writing a book, I would enter largely into a discussion of it, but the narrow limits of a letter will necessarily confine me to some of the most important scriptures touching this question. And to those who bow more in reverence to the Word of God than to the opinions of men, the proof I shall adduce will be the most weighty argument.

I shall show first from the character of the kingdom, (2) from the teachings of the Savior, (3) from the teachings of the apostles, (4) from chronology, that the kingdom of God is yet in the future.

1. Its character. It is an universal kingdom. It does not exist cotemporaneously with other kingdoms. See Dan. 7: 14, 27. "And there was given him dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages, should serve him." "All dominions shall serve and obey him." "The kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces, and subdue all these kingdoms." Dan. 2: 44. "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11 : 15. It is an everlasting kingdom. "His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed." Dan. 7: 14. "Heaven and earth shall pass away"—Christ's kingdom never! "they shall perish," but the kingdom "shall stand forever!" If, therefore, the kingdom was set up in the days of Christ's first advent, when the heavens and the earth passed away, the kingdom would come to an end.

2. The teachings of the Savior go to show that the kingdom is yet future. He exhorts his disciples to "seek first the kingdom of God," and taught them to pray, "Thy kingdom come." Why exhort them to "seek" for that which was already theirs, and pray for that which had already "come?" "Fear not," he says to the "little flock," "for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." When does he give it? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory," and "then shall the King say to them on his right hand, Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." Matt. 25: 31–34.

When the disciples entertained the idea "that the kingdom of God would immediately appear," Jesus spake a parable unto them of a certain nobleman who left his servants and went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom, and then return. After a long time he came back, having received the kingdom, and then proceeded to reckon with his servants. Luke 19: 12. When does Christ receive the kingdom? Turn to Dan. 7: 13, 14, and you will find that it is after the "beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame."

Said Jesus to the hypocritical Pharisees, "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth when ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and you yourselves thrust out." These worthy men have passed away from earth, and are not therefore in the kingdom of God. Just before his crucifixion, Christ said to his disciples, "I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom." Luke 22: 29, 30. This represents the kingdom, as yet to come. Again he says, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight, but now is my kingdom not from hence." In the parable of the tares and the wheat, the Savior, when giving an explanation thereof, says that as "the tares are gathered and burned in the fire, so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."

From the passages quoted, it is evident to my own mind that the universality and everlasting duration of the kingdom of God forbids the idea that Christ established it when here on earth, and that he constantly taught a different doctrine from this.

As my sheet is so nearly filled, I will postpose further evidence until my next, and then give the teachings of the apostles on this point. If you have any objections to make, or questions to ask, just send them along, and an answer shall be forthcoming.

Yours as ever,

KATE.

From Sr. M. H. Morrison.

BRO. GRANT:—I think none can have a fuller heart of joy than I over the converversion of sinners, if converted to the love of God, which purifieth the heart by obeying the truth. The Apostle John says, "we are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error."

Well, I cannot help thinking that the doctrine of the nineteenth century will conflict with Christ and the apostles. Christ has given us the truth, and says, "in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men;" making the word "of God of none effect by your tradition." And Paul says, "touch not, taste not, handle not," the commandments and doctrines of men. And he further says, "come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord." Separate from what? the doctrines and commandments of men.

The Crisis says, "we think the time has fully come to pull down the sectarian walls." Well, we would give our amen, and say let them be broken down, and the truth of God's word established, which is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

Your sister in the bonds of the Gospel, praying that many may come into the liberty of the Gospel. Amen.

M. H. MORRISON.

New Glasgow, C. E.

For the Crisis.

Brethren, Beloved,

"Suffer a Word of Exhortation."

We have been taught of God as to the nature of the Christian calling. (1 Thess. 1 : 9, 10,)—the power of the gospel hope, —the source of motive to inspire faith, repentance and obedience to Christ, (Matt. 3, &c.) Now let us "abound therein more more."

The command that must rule in a "Holy Ghost meeting," (if such language is ever proper) is found Heb. 10: 25, "Exhorting—and so much the more as ye see the day approaching!" This is "the day of the Lord"—the time of his coming and kingdom. Heb. 9: 28; 10: 37.

THE SPIRIT'S work of conviction culminates in "the judgment." John 16. It is by the ministries of the Holy Ghost as he broods over our works in "the darkness" of fallen humanity, that this "word of truth" should be kept sounding forth. None are his ministers who abandon his sphere and means of operation, and adopt another that has its origin in human wisdom, sympathy or desire for present appearances. Paul could not seek to please men and yet retain his place as a "servant of Jesus Christ," therefore you—we—cannot. It is at our peril that we allow ourselves to be swayed one hair's breadth from the faith—the blessed hope—and the love of his "glorious appearing." The time argument is stronger than ever. "Be not faithless."

All the reasons that ever did exist, do still exist in greater strength to constrain us to watch—to be ready—with loins girded, our lights burning, and we ourselves like unto men "that wait for their Lord,"—"Amen and amen."

Outward appearances in church and state, all may change; but God, and Jesus, and truth are "the same—yesterday, to-day and forever." Amen.

Satan may transform himself into an angel of light. The "many" ministers, who do "wonderful things;" and claim that Christ is in "their streets" and hearts, are to hear the dread words of our coming Judge—"I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity!"

THE INIQUITY that hurled "Lucifer" from heaven and Adam from Eden, lay in unbelief; this it was that drowned the old world, and desolated the city and sanctuary of God. This has filled the church of Rome and her harlot daughters with every "foul spirit;" and this will make "foolish virgins," or "unfaithful servants" of us professing to be Adventists, who presume to "follow their pernicious ways."

GOD, "THE MIGHTY,—GOD, the Lord, hath spoken." Ps. 50. Now it is bad enough for "the Father of lies" to contradict him, and for "the mother of harlots," to pervert his gospel! Let us who are of the day adhere to "the gospel of the kingdom;" for it is written that though we or "an angel from heaven preach any other gospel—let him be accursed." Gal, 1.

GOD'S WORD is the word of power. "This word "can not be broken" (John 10: 35) in order to spare "Jew, Gentile or the (Advent) church."

But sense always takes present appearances of good for realities. Faith will cling to the word as the power of God unto salvation—to every one that believeth." Faith clings to the word even to the slaying of Isaac,—faith follows "the Lamb withersoever he goeth." How then can we know what prayerfulness, repentance and profession is of God?—by its being like Daniel's prayer, the outpouring of a soul that travails and groans to see God's revealed will accomplished,—like Cornelius' repentance that rushed on beyond Jew and Gentile, and entered, in advance, "the way of life,"—like Paul's profession, that conferred not with flesh and blood," but stood forth pre-eminent, serving the "living and true God, and waiting for his Son from heaven."

"All things are of God"—as to their creation. But man has "sought out many inventions." All religious "inventions"—all Satan's transformations as "an angel of light," never did, nor can, save one soul. All claim to be good, they seem good, they are to all appearance very good; "but be not deceived, God is not mocked." All departures from plain gospel truth now, are in principle like Adam's that cost him his all in Eden,—nay, as bad as those of Babylon, that have made her the "habitation of devils." Beware!

J. B——.

"HATH NOT WHERE TO LAY HIS HEAD."

"Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head."—Luke 9: 58.

Birds have their quiet nest,
 Foxes have holes, and man his peaceful bed—
All creatures have their rest—
 But Jesus had not where to lay His head.

Winds have their hour of calm,
 And waves to slumber on the voiceless deep;
Eve hath its breath of balm
 To hush all senses and all sounds to sleep.

The wild deer hath his lair,
 The homeward flocks the shelter of their shed;
All have their rest from care—
 But Jesus had not where to lay His head.

And yet he came to give
 The weary and the heavy-laden rest,
To bid the sinner live,
  And soothe our griefs to slumber on his breast.

What, then, am I, my God,
 Permitted thus the paths of truth to tread—
Peace purchased by the blood
 Of him who had not where to lay His head?

I, who once made Him grieve,
 I, who once bade his gentle spirit mourn;
Whose hand essayed to weave
 For his meek brow the cruel crown of thorns.

O why should I have peace!
 Why? but for that unchanged, undying love,
Which could not, would not cease,
 Until it made me heir of joys above.

Yes, but for pard'ning grace,
 I feel I never should in glory see
The brightness of that face,
 That once was pale and agonized for me.

Let the birds seek their nest,
 Foxes their holes, and man his peaceful bed;
Come, Savior, in my breast
 Deign to repose thy oft rejected head.

Come, give me rest, and take
 The only rest on earth thou lovest,—in
A heart that, for thy sake,
 Dies bleeding, broken, penitent for sin.

BRO. GRANT:—We have been permitted to read your paper for one year, and can truly say that we have been much pleased with it,—in fact, it has afforded us all the preaching that we have heard in that length of time, with the exception of one sermon preached by Sr. Seymour.

We have learned to read and think for ourselves, consequently the popular preaching of the day is not food for us. Myself and husband are the only ones in this village that have fellowship for, and believe in the Advent faith, as preached by the believers in the immediate coming of our blessed Lord from heaven, who is to make all things new, and gather all his waiting ones into his everlasting kingdom. It is truly cheering and encouraging to hear from our dear brethren and sisters of like precious faith. We feel much encouraged after hearing from them, and hope soon to meet you all in that better kingdom, where dwell all the redeemed of the Lord, and, into that kingdom we are trying to press our way. It would be very gratifying to us, if any of the preaching brethren should be traveling this way to have them call on us; they will find a hearty welcome.

The day will soon dawn, and will usher in a glorious new era. I long for the time to come when we shall be made glorious.

Beecher's Thoughts.

It is with the singing of a congregation as with the sighing of the wind in the forest, where the notes of the million rustling leaves, and the boughs striking upon each other, altogether make a harmony, no matter what be the individual discords.

Laws and institutions are constantly tending to gravitate. Like clocks, they must be occasionally cleansed, and wound up, and set to true time.

Many people are afraid to embrace religion, for fear they shall not succeed in maintaining it.

Does the Spring say, "I will not come unless I can bring all fruits and sheaves under my wings?" No. She casts down loving glances in February, and in March she ventures near in mild days, but is beaten back and overthrown by storm and wind. Yet she returns, and finally yields the earth to April, far readier for life than she found it. The rains are still cold, but the grass is growing green, and the buds are swelling. In May the air is yet chilly, but it has the odor of flowers, and every day grows warmer till the delicious June, when all is bloom and softness, and even the storms have nourishment in them.—Then come the glowing July and the fervid August, followed by the glorious autumn of harvest and victory!

And shall nature do so much, while we dare not undertake to overcome the coldness and deadness of our hearts, and to fill them with the summer of love?

When flowers are full of heaven-descended dews, they always hang their heads; but men hold theirs the higher the more they receive, getting proud as they get full.

The aster has not wasted spring and summer because it has not blossomed. It has been all the time preparing for what is to follow, and in autumn it is the glory of the field, and only the frost lays it low. So there are many people who must live forty years, and have the crude sap of their natural dispositions changed and wasted.

A man may aspire, and yet be quite content until it is time to rise. A bird that sits patiently while it broods its eggs flies bravely afterwards, leading up its timid young. And both flying and resting are but parts of one contentment. The very fruit of the gospel is aspiration. It is to the human heart what spring is to the earth; making every root, and bud, and bough desire to be more.

Repentance is neither base nor bitter. It is good rising up out of evil. It is the resurrection of your thoughts out of graves of lust. Repentance is the turning of the soul from the way of midnight to the point of the coming sun. Darkness drops from the face, and silver light falls upon it. Do not live, day by day, trying to repent, but fearing the struggle and suffering. Deferred repentance, in generous natures, is a greater pain than would be the sorrow of real repentance. Manly regret for wrong never weakens, but always strengthens the heart. As some plants of the bitterest root have the whitest and sweetest blossoms, so the bitterest wrong has the sweetest repentance, which, indeed, is only the soul blossoming back to its better nature.

Christ never seems to us so sweet and glorious, as when he orbs himself over the sea of our sinfulness and ingratitude.

Not parties, but principles. Let us be of no party but God's party, and use all other agencies as we use railroad cars—traveling upon one train as far as it will take us in the right direction, and then leaving it for another.

When we think of the labor required to rear the few who are in our households,—the weariness, the anxiety, the burden of life,—how wonderful seems God's work! for he carries heaven, and earth, and all realms in his bosom.

Many think that God takes no thought for any thing less than a star or a mountain, and is unmindful of the little things of life; but when I go abroad, the first thing which I see is the grass beneath my feet, and, nestling in that, flowers smaller yet, and, lower still, the mosses with their inconspicuous blooms, which beneath the microscope glow with beauty. And if God so cares for the grass of the field, "which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven," shall he not much more care for the minutest things of your life, "O ye of little faith?"—"Life Thoughts," by Miss Proctor.

I Shall be Satisfied.

Satisfied! What a word is that! Did you ever try to sound it with the line of your desires? If you tried could you ever find bottom? If you essayed to measure it could you ever find any shore? No, no, you could not. There is no thougt or wish that can measure it—no yearning that can sound its depth of meaning.—The young who have not yet known it, wonder what is that mysterious joy of love requited; and when the experience thrills upon them they can hardly endure the blessedness of having this one longing satisfied—they are afraid to believe in their own happiness. They seem to bathe and revel in an ocean of delight; and this all because in regard to one need of the soul, and for, (alas! too ofted) a little time they are satisfied. But oh! the satisfaction that is universal and eternal, that shall leave nothing in quantity, quality, or duration, to be desired, what can it be? From that one world shines forth such peaceful glory as gilds and sometimes annihilates this world's unrest. Few indeed there are who reach middle life without having felt, with sinking soul, how utterly unable are all the blessings of this world to satisfy the cravings of the mind. How many are there who have never sat down purposely to examine into the wants of their own heart, only to discover a single state or situation of which they could think (and which they would have a right to enjoy if they were able,) that presented to them a warranted peace? It is true that to persons in such hours of self-questioning there comes often some soft, winning vision at which they have no business to look, and which says to them, "Here and here only then is what could ensure your happiness;" but only because it is forbidden does it seem enchantingly and altogether fair. Were it lawful for them it would become at once, like other pleasures, unsatisfying. But we can bear all this insufficiency of the present supply of our needs, when we remember that at last we shall be satisfied, and with a largeness and bounty so overwhelming that now we cannot even conceive of it. There is no right longing made to go unfulfilled. A pure longing in the soul is God's promise; and He will not forget or fail to make it good, and that where what we wish for will no more be given soon to be sent away or left, because we must lie down with faces "covered."

The world is full of joys and pleasures which we are not permitted to share; and we are tempted of the devil every day to taste forbidden fruit; and often we go mourning and bowed down heavily, because the things most dear and charming to our hearts must be denied. But there is power to make it easy to resist temptation, and to walk through earth a pauper in all its delights, in the assurance which we have that all that is really good for us in every lovely and coveted pleasure, both of the spiritual and natural realm, we shall find infinitely augmented in him who is the source of all beauty, happiness and love—if "we wake in His likeness."

Doctrine.

The following is from "The Christian's Magazine," published by Elias Smith, May, 1805.

The word Doctrine, signifies that truth which Christ preached concerning God and man. This is one consistent whole, without any lack or contradiction. What Christ preached on the mountain, is called Doctrine. Matt. 7: 29. "And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his DOCTRINE." This must mean what he preached to them. This Doctrine is according to godliness. It is called sound Doctrine. There are six principles of the Doctrine of Christ mentioned in Heb. 6: 1, 2. 1. Repentance, 2. Faith, 3. Baptism, 4. Laying on of hands, 5. Resurrection of the dead, 6. Eternal judgment. All Christ preached is included in these six principles. Things contrary to these are the doctrines of men or devils. The word Doctrines signifies something contrary to the word of God and inconsistent with itself. This word is applied to men and devils; not to God. Paul tells us of the doctrines of men, Col. 2: 20: 22.—"Why as living in the world are ye subject to ordinances after the commandments and doctrines of men. In verse 8, he calls these doctrines philosophy, vain deceit, traditioning of men, and rudiments of the world. This is what men are disputing about in the present day. The DOCTRINE of Christ is so consistent that there is no room for any dispute. Those who do not love it either deny or hate it. The doctrines of men are so inconsistent in themselves that there is no room for dispute. One of the doctrines of men is called Calvinism, another Arminianism, a third Hopkintianism. They contradict themselves, and each other. So long as men hold these doctrines, so long there will be perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds. The word doctrines is used to express what the devil has propagated in the world under the name of truth. This is mentioned in 1 Tim. 3: 1. "Now the spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." The principle of the doctrines of devils is this, "Ye shall not surely die." The devil has had preachers in every age to propagate this principle; but their testimonies do not agree. One says at the day of judgment, all men will be taken home to glory; another says after they have suffered in hell a while, they will go to heaven. One says Christ went into hell and preached there two or three days. One says, Christ died here to save men, and then went into hell and died there to save devils. These different doctrines of devils are called universalism, restoration, and such like names.

LUTHER'S OPINION OF MUSIC.—"Music," says Martin Luther, "is one of the fairest and most glorious gifts of God, to which Satan is a bitter enemy; for it removes from the heart the weight of sorrows and the fascination of evil thoughts. Music is a kind and gentle sort of discipline; it refines the passions and improves the understanding. Even the dissonance of unskillful fiddlers serves to set off the charm of such melody, as white is made more conspicuous by the opposition of black. Those who love music are gentle and honest in their tempers. I have always loved Music," adds Luther, "and would not, for a great matter, be without the little skill I possess in the art."

LAZARUS.

Before the cave the wondering throng
  Stand round the weeping Son of Man;
All sound is hushed, save when among
  The crowd a stifled sobbing ran.

He weeps whose breath could shake the spheres,
  And furl the heavens up like a scroll,
And from his eyes the blessed tears
  Adown his cheeks in torrents roll.

A perfect man! He weeps—he feels
  Deep sympathy for human woes,
And ready with his touch to heal,
  From place to place the Savior goes.

Stand back! The heavy stone removed,
  Shows where the dead in sleep is laid;
Enswathed by hands he once had loved,
  The cere-clothes wrap his limbs and head.

Four days in dark oblivion there,
  The grave had hugged the shrinking clay,
When hark! upon the echoing air
  Peals a loud voice which claims the prey!

"Lazarus, come forth!" The frozen blood
  Melts into life, and fills his veins
With the red, vivifying flood,
  Which bursts the fell destroyer's chains.

"Loose him and let him go!" Unbound,
  The liberated captive kneels
Before Death's conqueror on the ground,
  Whose brow the Godhead power reveals.

No grave can hold, however deep,
  The child of God when Jesus calls;
He storms death's gloomiest dungeon-keep,
  And batters down the tyrant's walls!

Cut short, O God! the dreadful strife,
  And take thy weary children home;
Thou "Resurrection and the Life"—
  Come, O Lord Jesus! quickly come!

Born of God.

No. I.

"Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him, and he cannot sin."

This passage has been the subject of many remarks. Some persons (many known by the name of Perfectionists, a few years ago, among the number,) urging that it presents a condition of believers which precludes the possibility of sinning, after we have obtained the state of grace in Christ which is called "begotten of God," or "born of God." This is but the old Antinomianism revamped.

Another theory is, that it must all refer to the resurrection state; in which men will have the new birth, or birth of the Spirit, and be free from all the effects of the fall. I do not adopt either of these views. The apostle speaks of the children of God and the children of the devil. Now to suppose that a child of God cannot sin, is to suppose that a sinner cannot repent. I shall not oppose the Calvinist view of perseverance, nor defend, directly, the Arminian view of "falling from grace."

There are several facts which, fully considered, will give us light on this question.

1. He is begotten, or born of God.
2. The word of God is the power of this condition—the seed.
3. His seed remaineth in him.
4. He doth not commit sin.
5. He that sinneth is of the devil.
6. He that abideth in him sinneth not.

When the apostle declares that such an one doth not commit sin, or cannot sin, does he not say that it is because he abideth in him? And does not Christ himself declare that "except a man abide in me, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered?" Mark that! Admit the full force of the apostle's statement—"he cannot sin." Why? because his seed—the word of God—remaineth in him. This cannot refer to the man as a being, who should be thus incapacitated to sin; but to a condition which secures him from it; for the apostle twice declares that the christian does not commit sin; then, to prove his assertion, declares the impossibility of it while such a condition exists. What is the origin of this condition? The word of God, which is called the seed.

Now, if there is a possibility of losing that seed, or word of God, in its power,—if a man might leave Christ, and no longer abide in him, then he might sin, when he could not if he should abide in him. He will leave Christ if he does not bear fruit, for he himself says, "Abide in me that ye may bring forth fruit. If any one bear not fruit, he is cast forth as a branch and is withered." It is therefore plain that a man may cease to abide in him. Then he may cease to retain the word—the seed, and consequently sin. "Herein," saith John, "the children of God are manifest and the children of the Devil." In the possession of the word, or abiding in Christ, on the part of the believer; in the absence of it, on the part of the sinner.

The great truth stated by John is, that the child of God is not a sinner, and the sinner is the "child of the devil." From corresponding passages it is plain that sin here refers to a sinful life; that is the excuse for John's strong expression. If we sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there is no more sacrifice for sin. Now all sin is wilful, and yet Paul intimates a sin without will. But by sin here he means a life of sin, embracing infidelity and rejection of Christ.—"There is no more sacrifice," which intimates that they had rejected one. If they had the word, had they not the seed? But it did not remain in them. Did they sin while it remained in them? Nay! must they keep it? Mark that wilful sinning! Let us see whether they must keep it. Since they cannot, or will not sin while they have it, "His seed remaineth in him"—not must remain—"For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened and have tasted of the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come; if these shall fall away, to renew them again to repentance, (some wilful sin and infidelity) seeing they crucify the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame." Here is an infidel, irreligious, blasphemous life. But he says, "If they shall fall away."—I know he does; and if you deny that a man may fall away, or depart into sin, after reading that, I will have no further argument with you. He says they may fall away!

Now, they have had the same power that John recognizes in his epistle. Can they sin? Some did sin who had been born of the word. Why then does John say that one cannot sin who has the word of God, as seed? Because it is supposed such an one keeps it. "It remaineth in him." There is a way to depart from Christ, even though we have abode in him—to lose the word out of our heart, or at least, bear no fruit—to sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth.

How can it be done? rather ask, how the man can sin? By losing the word. How can he lose it and not sin in the act? which it is assumed would be to commit sin, though the very act by which he should sin, would throw it from him. This is the ground often taken; but it appears to me that the sin, in this sense, being a sinful life, as we have seen, does imply a space between the holy position and the sinful one, in which the individual shall have lost the word, and consequently the power to remain in holiness; for if the word be wanting, I see no guaranty for holiness.

Watch.

"Let us Not Sleep as do Others."

1 Thess. 5: 6.

Paul saw the danger of the churches in these last days. He warns them not to sleep as do others; giving them to understand that others were asleep, and that there was danger of their sleeping, and that the day of the Lord come on them as a thief. He admonishes them to watch and be sober. Let us examine our souls and see whether we are in darkness, slumbering; or whether we have the light of heaven shining in our souls. Do not let us imagine by our foolish dreams that we are awake. We can talk in our sleep, and say some good things, too. The church has more sleepy dreamers than wide awake ones, and this causes much trouble. Come, brethren, be wide awake. "I am wide awake," says one; "I keep the fourth commandment." You may do this and be as great a persecuter as Saul. Another says, "I obey that commandment which says, 'Sell that thou hast and give to the poor.'" After all you may still be talking and not doing—no love of Jesus in your soul—asleep to the great work of saving sinners.

"Well," says the third, "I am so humble that I can get down on the floor and wash the saints' feet." You may wash their feet in ever so humble a manner, and still have not the spirit of Christ abiding in in you.

Awake! awake! for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed. God requires us to work, not to sleep. "For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that be drunken are drunken in the night." We need broad daylight and both eyes open to labor for the Lord.

Says another, "All God's elect will be saved." What is election? A wise man may be elected to some high office, but when he becomes a fool, the same power that put him into office can put him out of the same. Let us see then that we make our calling and election sure, for many are called, but few are chosen. It is only those who while on earth have done the will of their Father which is in heaven, can reign with Jesus in his kingdom.

Brethren, "let us not sleep as do others."

"Deep Things,"

AND YET MOST SIMPLE.

"The Spirit searcheth all things; yea, the deep things of God." 1 Cor. 2: 10.

Several have of late spoken to me on the subject of the sonship of the Messiah. Well, I delight to be spoken to; hence I respond with pleasure, for I have a word to say on every such occasion.

I. Take this truth as developed in an experience. Sister —— told me she was brought up in the Orthodox faith. Again, she came under Unitarian instruction; but yet, at last she became Christian.

In this state she sat musing, and drew up into the sunlight as it fell upon her window. As the genial radiance warmed her she said, "This is the SUN. Yes—but it is not all the sun! No—the sun proper is in heaven. Yet its beams, its blessed light—enlivening and warming me—are here; hence it IS THE SUN, after all, as its beams are shed upon me."

Very well, sister. This is a good experience as well as good sense. Now for the application.

"The word—Jesus"—is Divine. Yes, but this is not he who gave the word—not properly all of Divinity! No; the Almighty, everlasting God dwells on high. Yet he is revealed. He shines forth in Jesus, who is "the brightness (effulgence) of his glory"—as it is shed on us. Immanuel, is God with us. This is the sum of the matter, though the verbal drapery may be mine.

Recently, as some sat at the feet of one "greater than" Gamaliel, the distinction between the effulgence of the sun and the sun itself was quoted. Heb. 1; John 1; Heb. 3. Well, this distinction was first admitted as if it were clearly seen. But again it was confounded as if it had never been seen at all!

The sunbeams, for instance, are but the brightness of the sun's beams; and yet as if to exalt this brightness it must be something more! It must be the source of itself! The sun-beam must generally be its own source, and be confounded with the sun! But no, this seems to me any thing rather than "the wisdom that cometh from above."

As the sun can be nothing more than itself; so neither can the sunbeam be exalted by any human conception above its relation to its source. Thus the word of God is, as revealed, just this, and no more. Human creeds assume to exalt it by enshrining it in Divine appelatives, mis-applied. "The Son"—who hath by experience the more excellent name than angels—is supposed to be well pleased to have papists and all apostates or others, (even his dear people,) speak of him as generally something more than "the Son who is consecrated forever more!" "Thus saith the Holy Ghost, Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore, God, THY GOD, hath anointed thee. . . . . Unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever."

Jesus says, "the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." Surely there can be no exaltation of Christ above this. There is none Diviner than this Divine indweller! To me there is no possible way for us to "honor the Son," above this own revelation. We are baptized into "the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."—Amen. It seems to me Christian intelligence and faith and love, to admit this distinction that has been developed by divine wisdom. If so, it follows necessarily and forever, that we renounce this faith and love, and scriptural understanding, just so far as we in any way confound this distinction.

Note. We dare not assume to trace this distinction always—nor indeed, at all; beyond the plain "word of the Lord." But as divine wisdom has made and maintained this distinction, it must exist, for it is made only because it exists,—as between the sun-beam and the sun. Since it exists and has been made most palpable, (1 John 1) it can not be un-made, altered or in any way obliterated. "The word" was the word of (or from) God." This "word was made flesh and dwelt among us. . . . We beheld his glory, as of the only begotten of the Father!" John 1.

"The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore that Holy One that shall be born of thee (the virgin) shall be called the Son of God."

Human creeds are here utterly at fault. It needs such a faith—such an unquestioning trust—as will stop at the statements of "wisdom."

All quotations from "the word" where this distinction does not obtain, are irrelevant. They confound the unreflecting. Where the sunbeam is not distinguished from its source, the sun, let it be "the sun."

Short Sermons.

No. IV.

"And I said, should such a man as I flee? and who is there that being as I am, would not go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in." Neh. 6: 11.

When Nehemiah was engaged in rebuilding Jerusalem, he met with great opposition from the surrounding heathen. But he was undaunted and persevering in the work to which God had called him, until finally the enterprise was accomplished, and Jerusalem was restored to something like its former glory, though very far inferior. They used all the efforts and devices which the most bitter enmity could invent; they flattered, they mocked, they ridiculed, they played the hypocrite; yet Nehemiah kept steady at his work, only stopping to refer the matter to his heavenly Father, and to beseech him to interfere in his behalf. How often does he appeal to God in this manner, "Think upon me, O my God," &c. The occasion which called forth the text was the following;—They sent to him four times to try to induce him to leave the city and come down to them. But, being unsuccessful in this, they sent him a letter, charging him with an intention of rebellion. Failing of their object in this, also, they next tried a stratagem. They hired one of his professed friends to endeavor to prevail upon him to secrete himself in the temple, for fear that they would come to slay him. The true object of this was, probably that they might readily kill him or make him a prisoner. But, his answer is, "Should such a man as I flee? and who is there that, being as I am, should go into the temple to save his life? I will not go in." I notice—

I. It is according to the natural man to evade the cross.

The religion of Jesus goes against nature. It is like sailing in a small boat against the current—going up stream.

"Nature must count her gold but dross,
If she would gain that heavenly land."

"The world, the flesh, and the devil," are all arrayed against us. We have enlisted as soldiers in the army of the Lord, and shall never be discharged until the enemies of our King are all subdued, and we crowned in God's everlasting kingdom. And it is no trifling warfare, "for we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world; against spiritual wickedness in high places." Let no one think he can gain the kingdom without many a hard fought battle; or hear the "well done," without leading a life which, despite all opposition from within and from without, is given up to the one object of "doing well."

The gospel requires us to feel as deeply anxious for the good of others, as for our own good. "Love thy neighbor as thyself,' says Jesus. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even the same to them; for this is the law and the prophets." The meaning of this last clause seems to be, "This is according to the whole tenor of the word of God." Indeed, were not our minds so selfish, and depraved, it would seem for a moment that we could not think of any thing short of this, as being the doctrine of the Bible. Now this goes exceedingly against nature. It often times seems like tearing out our very heart-strings. So strongly do we naturally love our own interest, above that of others, that it seems almost like the giving up of the ghost, for us to be willing to make common cause with our brethren for the supply of their wants.

Again, we are required to be wholly sanctified to God; to consecrate ourselves, all that we have and are, on God's altar; and to ever constantly be a whole burnt offering. There must be an unreserved surrender to God, active, appropriating faith, and then the most vigilant watchfulness. If we seriously attempt to attain and to maintain this high ground, we may expect the most violent opposition. Be assured, the devil will stop us if he can. He may even employ our brethren to try to "explain away" the requirements of God.—Yet, despite all opposing influences, here we must come, would we have the spirit of adoption, and be heirs of the kingdom.

II. Reasons why Christians should be bold and fearless.

They serve the best of Masters. However they may seem, in point of fact, they are the nobles of earth. All others are but the miserable slaves of sin and Satan; however great and much esteemed among men. Serve the Creator of the Universe! How noble the thought. Him, to whom "the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance;" and who "taketh up the isles as a very little thing." Oh, what Christian can ever be ashamed of his parentage!

"Ashamed of Jesus! just as soon
Let midnight be ashamed of noon!"

Yea,—

——"Sooner far,
Let evening blush to own a star!"

And shall a servant of the Most High God, the omnipotent, eternal Jehovah,—shall such a one fear the face of clay?—A poor, weak, fellow-worm? God forbid! Rather, with Nehemiah, let him exclaim, "Should such a man as I flee?"—What! a prince (though in disguise) flee before a menial slave?

The wicked, though they mean it not, are servants to the children of God.—Their very hatred and enmity leads them to do the very things which bring the greatest possible good to the child of God. He needs to be weaned from the world, that he may thereby be led the more fully to set his affections on things above. They will do it, and do it most effectually. They will make him sick and tired of this groaning earth, and drive him to God. The wicked are God's sword to chastise the righteous. (Ps. 17: 13). Thus, the Lord makes the wrath of man to praise him, and to subserve the interests of his children. (Ps. 7: 6-10.) Now who would "flee" and endeavor to escape, for fear that men should do us good?

But if there ever was a time—if it can be more shameful and dastardly one time than another, for a christian to fear and "flee" before his enemies, surely now is that time. Never before have christians been inspired with prospects like ours. No, the greatest of all events; that for which the martyrs, apostles, and saints of all ages have labored and suffered—the return of our long absent Lord—the conflagration of the earth that now is, and the judgment of the great day; which christians of all ages past have looked upon as far in the future; all these things are now just at hand. Will not such a hope as this raise us above the world, and make the puny efforts of the wicked against us seem as mere trifles? How small seems reproach and opposition from those who, in a few short months, will be arraigned before God to answer for this their wickedness, and in shame and confusion will beg even the rocks and mountains to fall on them and hide them from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb!

Soon, very soon, dear sorrowing saints, and your warfare will be accomplished, your sufferings all at an end. Then, the more you shall have suffered for Christ here, the brighter will be your crown. Then count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations, for

"Our conflicts and our trials here
Will only make us richer there."

Then do not, I beseech of you, for one moment "flee" from the path of duty for the sake of evading trial, but rejoice to bear the cross continually.

But the greatest of all reasons why we should stand up boldly, as men of God, and never "flee" or swerve from the right remains to be noticed. This motive is love. We should serve the Lord because we love him, and love to serve him; obey him because we love to obey him; suffer reproach because we love to suffer reproach for the name of Jesus; bear the cross because we love to bear it for the sake of him who bore it up Calvary for us; and in all things be led and governed by him who first loved us," (1 Jno. 4: 19) and not merely by hopes of reward, or by fear, or by any other motive. Instead of having a disposition to flee when trials come thick and heavy, we should learn to glory in tribulation. So warm, glowing, ardent should be our love, that with the apostle, when whipped, we shall rejoice that we are counted worthy to suffer shame for his sake. No other religion but this will avail us any thing. Better never make any pretensions to religion than to stop short of this. This is the sweet and all-controling element of heaven.

God grant we may be more deeply imbued with this heavenly love, and so be prepared for his kingdom, is the prayer of your brother,

H. P. Sikes.

For the Crisis.

Answer to "Inquirer."

In my article on "The Time," recently published in the Crisis, my position was that the vulgar era is correct. The quotation from Elder Litch, as published in the 4th volume of the Advent Library in 1842, was made simply for the purpose of establishing the crucifixion of Christ in the same year, and soon after the death of Tiberius Cæsar. It is true that in the aforementioned quotation, Elder Litch took the position that the ministry of Christ was seven years long. Now while I believe that the Elder clearly established the crucifixion of Christ and the death of Tiberius to have both occurred in the same year, I think he was mistaken in regard to the duration of our Savior's ministry; especially so, if we are to understand Luke (3d ch.) to state that the 30th year of our Savior's corresponded with the 15th of the reign of Tiberius, which is questioned by some of the learned. It is questioned by some whether Luke had reference to the reign of Tiberius, which began a little over three years before Augustus died, or [illegible] to his reign after that event; for Tiberius reigned from the time he was associated with Augustus, 26 years, 1 month and 18 days; but from the death of Augustus, 22 years, 6 months and 26 days. He reigned before Augustus died, 3 years, 6 months and 10 days. See Dr. Jarvis' Chronological Introduction to the History of the Church, pp. 259, 260, 266. From these facts, I am fully satisfied that Luke had reference to the 15th year of his associate reign; which would make the ministry of our Savior about ten years in duration, the general opinion to the contrary notwithstanding.

The supposition that the four Evangelists have recorded all the passovers that occurred during Christ's ministry, I am satisfied has not any real foundation. If they had all been unanimous in recording the four passovers, then there would have been some ground for such an opinion. But this is not the case, as perhaps nearly all are aware. In whatever light we view this question, I think the quotation from Elder Litch should satisfy all that our Savior was crucified soon after the death of Tiberius, and, therefore, 1817 years this side of that event will bring the promised "redemption."

I wait with unwavering faith in the truth of this position.

Debt and Grace.

The Universalist Quarterly for April notices Mr. Hudson's "Doctrine of the Future Life," as follows:

"Any thing short of an extended review must fail to do justice to this most extraordinary book—on the score of argumentative ability, among the greatest contributions that have been made to theological literature in America for many years. Of the personal history of the author we know nothing; but that he is henceforth to hold a most prominent place among the thinkers and writers of the country, we feel well assured. Differ as we may, and do, from his views; erroneous, and in some respects injurious, as we regard them, we must accord to him candor, scholarship, and reasoning powers of a high order. True, the profusion of references to authors, in the shape of foot notes, might raise a suspicion of pedantry, did not the facility and naturalness with which he makes use of his authors, give the highest internal evidence that he has mastered.

* * * We have only to say that whoever would give his mental powers a severe discipline, should make himself familiar with, and meet if he can, the contents of this work."

"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is."—"And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God."

In these Scriptures we learn,
That the will of Jesus is, that his people shall be with him.
[illegible] Paul affirms that that will shall be executed.
John in vision sees it accomplished.

Forever with the Lord!
Amen, so let it be;
Life for the dead is in that word;
'Tis immortality.

The World's Crisis.
BOSTON, MAY 12, 1858.

"Perplexity."

When our Savior was giving the signs of his second coming to this world, he mentions among the last,—"upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity." The present political aspect of the world is very threatening, and indicative of great revolutions. All classes are convinced that a new system of things is needed, and that a change is at hand; but they are not agreed as to the manner by which the new order of society is to be introduced. A very large portion of our race, as in the days of Noah, do not see the hand of the Lord in coming and passing events. They are endeavoring to remodel society by their own puny efforts, but every attempt is a failure, and will be till the great Emancipator comes to take the reins of government.

We are told that the spirits and Spiritualism will put the disordered world into harmony; but from that source, we only look for "confusion worse confounded." They are evidently doing their work as specified in Rev. 16: 14. "They are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." The church of Christ occupies a dangerous position at the present time, in view of the great onset about being made by spirits of devils, working their miracles. Now is the time for every child of the Lord to be clothed with the whole armor of God, that he may be able to stand against the "wiles of the Devil." O when will the church awake to a sense of her danger. She seems spell-bound, like the bird before the charming serpent. Instead, then, of looking for a reform of our moral, social and political evils, through Spiritualism, we look for something worse than we have yet seen. The demon monster just begins to show himself, and unfold his hideous form, preparing for the awful conflict. Where are the Calebs and Joshuas? Now is the time to show ourselves men of God, not half-hearted, feele minded, full of doubts, weak in faith, but strong in the Lord, trusting in his mighty strength to deliver. Christian, be firm, unmovable as the rock of Ages upon which you stand. No time to waver now. If we draw back, it is unto perdition. Let go of the world. Its friendship is at enmity with God. Give your affection to one worthy of your warmest love,—one who gave his life to obtain pardon for your sins. Believe and obey his word. The time is at hand when you must decide whether you will obey and live, or disobey and die. Will you take the broad, or narrow path?—the road to life or death? The Lord has promised, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth." This is a precious promise, and peculiarly adapted to these times. It will be noticed that the spirits of devils "go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole WORLD;" also, that "the hour of temptation ... shall come upon all the WORLD." It seems as though the former was the cause of the latter. Let all be upon their watch; blessed are those who are found watching when the Lord comes. That the expression, "distress of nations with perplexity," is particularly applicable to these times, it seems no one can doubt. There is scarcely any improvement in business matters. Money is heaped up in the banks, but trade and commerce are nearly stagnant. So far as we can learn, business is much poorer than it was one year since, when it was thought to be almost intolerable. It seems as though the Lord is weaning the hearts of his children from this world, and trying to persuade them to prepare for "the marriage supper of the Lamb" in the world to come. When the apostle James is describing the last days, he says, "your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." This shows that money is heaped up but not used. This is emphatically the case now? Why is this? Men are perplexed, and dare not go forward in business as in former years. All classes are impressed that an approaching crisis is at hand.

Says the Boston Herald, "The opinion of foreign correspondents seems to be decisive that Europe is upon the eve of a

"United Ministers' Meeting."

This is a meeting held every Monday, from 12 to 1 o'clock, at Mercantile Hall, Summer Street, Boston. Ministers of all denominations are invited to attend, and take part in the exercises. This looks more like the operations of the spirit of Christ, than any thing we have seen in this direction. If we are to be saved in the kingdom of God, we should be one in Christ Jesus before we assemble, at the marriage feast. There were about fifty clergymen present. The time was mostly spent in prayer. Christian kindness appeared to be felt towards all, and an anxiety for a deeper and purer religion. We hope to see much good come from these meetings.

Tracts.

We have an excellent assortment of tracts on hand which should be circulated at once, among those who are anxiously inquiring after the truth upon the very subjects explained in these little messengers. Now is the time to scatter them broadcast over the world, while the soil is prepared for their reception. A little money expended in this way may accomplish great good.

Let every church form a tract society, composed of members who may pay from one cent a week to any larger amount.—Come, let some one sit down and write:—

We whose names are subjoined, hereby pledge ourselves to pay weekly, or be responsible for the weekly payment of the sums annexed to our respective names, for the distribution of tracts in this place.

Set it going without delay. Do not despise "the day of small things." Great results often follow small beginnings. Enter at once into a plan of systematic benevolence for the good of your friends and neighbors. The people need the tracts, and Bro. Hastings, and others who write and publish them, need the money. Let every one do something.

For prices, &c., see published list on the third page.

The friends in the province of New Brunswick are informed, that Bro. Edwin Burnham thinks it doubtful if the door will open for him to come into the province this season.

The Great Controversy between God and Man—its Origin, Progress and End. From the American Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

"The Great Controversy is a rapid sketch of the controversy which has prevailed between God and fallen man from the days of the Patriarchs to our own times. The author brings out into bold relief the rebelliousness and vileness of our race, together with the judgments which this course of disobedience has brought upon the nations. He finds the history of man full of mourning and lamentation and woe. From the Old Testament prophecies he thinks that we should learn that the controversy will close with judgments of unparalleled severity, with destruction rather than reformation. This he thinks is also the teaching of the New Testament. At the close he sees the Conqueror on the white horse descending from the skies to destroy his enemies and to reign gloriously, (and personally if we understand him) on the earth."

The Revival.

So far as we can learn, the great work of awakening and converting sinners, and reclaiming backsliders, still goes on. Many professing christians are seeking for a deeper work of grace in their hearts, and more of the spirit of Christ. They are impressed with the necessity of entire consecration to the Lord, and as they sink more fully into Christ, they become more interested in his second coming. As christian love and communion advance, the sectarian walls disappear, and the way opens to proclaim the great truths of the Bible that have only partially emerged from the darkness of the dark ages. Many are still unwilling to give up their preconceived opinions, and mystical interpretations of the scripture, for the plain thus saith the Lord, but it is not so with all. Several of our brethren and sisters have recently remarked, "we have never found the people more ready and anxious to hear, than at the present time." This fact is one of encouragement, and every opportunity for doing good should be thankfully improved. Let us remember, we are at work for Christ, not for a particular sect, or party. Like our Master, we may be called friends of publicans and sinners, if we work outside of some particular sectarian pen, but let us never mind the scoffs nor the frowns of the cold-hearted and backslidden formalist, nor the hot-headed bigot who can see nothing good outside of his favorite few. While we may enjoy the possession of great truths committed to our trust, let us be faithful in letting our light shine out before all with whom we associate. Let no opportunity for doing good pass unimproved, but let us remember, "he that winneth souls is wise."

For the Crisis.

To the Waiting Ones.

My Dear Brn. and Srs.:—With a grateful heart do I read your articles from week to week. By them I have been wonderfully blest. I am so thankful there is a way by which the weary pilgrims can communicate to the little flock, and so do each other good. Perhaps there never was a time when communication to the point was more needed than now. Brothers and sisters, we have but a little while to work in, let us be faithful. How oft when I have been thinking of the many good seasons of prayer which I have enjoyed with the children of God, has the briny tear found its way unbidden down my cheek. How I have sighed over the low state of religion among us. But thanks be to God, there seems to be a coming up on higher ground.

A few of the Brn. and Srs. meet at our house twice a week and hold prayer-meetings. We also have female prayer-meetings once in the week. It has been a time of confessing, and I hope and pray that it will prove a time of forsaking. There seems to be a good feeling among us at this time. Not only a desire to be forgiven is manifest, but a willingness to forgive. We are a little company, despised by the world, and yet we are willing to suffer reproach if we can but win Christ. We are praying earnestly that God will revive his work here in our midst. Brn., pray for us. The most of us have children that we want to see converted to God. I believe that God will hear us pray. Yes, and he will answer our prayers if we pray in faith. O Lord, give us that faith which takes no denial.

Bro. S. W. Bishop and family spent a few weeks in this vicinity. We would be glad to welcome them here again. It was a dull time with us then. Yet the truth which he scattered we trust has found a lodgment in some honest hearts. Since then, Bro. Smith spent a few days with us. It does seem good to have our Brn. visit us, and hear from them about the soon coming Jesus. Our numbers are few, and it is but little that we can do for our Brn. when they come this way. It is when God's servants visit us, that I wish for more of this world's goods. Perhaps if I had them, I should be selfish. If this would be the case, O Lord, keep me poor. I ask not for treasures here in this life, but I do want an inheritance in the kingdom of God. I do not believe that we followed "cunningly devised fables" when we left all, even our good name among men, and went out to meet the Lord.

Brn. and Srs., keep at work. The Lord's work must be done. We shall have the true time yet; yes, glory be to God I feel the truth of it, for it shall be as in the days of Noah. If Noah knew when the flood would come, so the tried ones will know when Jesus will come. I believe it. I do praise the Lord that deliverance is near. I am bound for the kingdom. Let us keep our lamps burning that they may shine brighter and brighter every inch of the way; and as the time of our deliverance draws near, let us live holy lives and so be found spotless in that day when our King shall come.

Yours in hope,
Lydia M. Collins.

Bath, N. H.

P. S.—We will gladly welcome any of our brethren who may feel it to be their duty to come this way, and will do as far as we can for them. They will ever find a welcome home with us, as we intend to keep a pilgrim's tavern.

Did the Crucified Thief Die the Same Day that Our Lord Did?

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to answer the inquirer of April 28, concerning the reply of the Savior to the thief. His question is—"Did the thief, crucified with our Lord, and to whom the promise was made that he should be with him, die the same day that our Lord did?"

I answer No; and give for proof the following well known facts. "And the evening and the morning were the first day." And from the first even to the present time the Jews begin their days at evening, and their evening begins at sunset, and like the mode of all other nations, a day begins at the end of the preceding one. The Jews had no name to their days of the week, except the seventh, which was Sabbath; the others were numbered, first, second, third, &c, and each day was divided into four watches and twelve hours. The four watches occupied the time we call night, and the twelve hours the time we call day. With these facts before us we are to inquire at what absolute time, as we reckon time, our Lord died. This was at the ninth hour, Jewish time. See Matt. 27: 46, 50; Mark 15: 34, 37. Their sixth hour corresponds to our twelve o'clock noon, and three added to six make nine; which is our three o'clock, P. M. Therefore, three hours after the Lord died, the day ended on which he died. And now what happened three hours or more after he died, happened within twenty-four hours of our time.

The first thing to be noticed is, "When the even was come Joseph went to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus." Matt. 27: 57, 58. This EVEN was the beginning of the day after the Lord died, and it was the beginning of the "preparation day." See Mark 15: 42, and Luke 23: 50–54. Having established the fact that the "preparation day" was the day following the death of our Lord, it now remains to show that the two thieves were living on the "preparation day." See John 19: 31–34. Here the reader will perceive that soldiers broke the legs of the two thieves to hasten on their death; but when they came to Jesus they brake not his legs, because he was dead already. So the thieves lived in the preparation day, and the Savier died, at least three hours before that day began.

The reader should observe another fact. Mark (15: 25) says, "And it was the third hour, and they crucified him." This was our nine o'clock A. M.; but it was about the ninth hour (twelve o'clock noon) that Jesus answered the thief. See Luke 23: 43, 44. This was six hours before the day ended, and the thieves lived over this time into the next day, and for fear they might live also through the next day, their legs were broken.

What then could be the import of the Lord's language? The word translated to-day is not the Greeknoun "heemera," a day; but it is the Greek adverb usually translated now, and might have been so rendered in this text, and together with verily makes what we call an "Adverbial phrase," and qualifies "I say," both in the Greek and English, had not the printer misplaced the comma. So the true rendering of the text is—Now, verily I say unto thee, shalt thou be with me in paradise. This is the usual form to give intensity to an expression, and we have borrowed the Greek use of the same adverb. For instance;—if a brother tells me he thinks man has an immortal spirit; I say to him—now verily, you are in a great error; in which case I use the same Greek word found in the text, without the least regard to any particular day.

It should be borne in mind, too, that the thief made a good second advent prayer—"Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom;" and received an answer to his prayer; that is: when the Lord comes in his kingdom to reward every man according as his work shall be, he will then receive the penitent thief into Paradise. See Rev. 2: 7, 22: 2. Here the reader will perceive that Paradise restored will be in the New City and have the restored tree of life in it; and no such place existed in the days of the thief.

And now since we have the lens of truth in hand, suppose we converge the golden rays to a focus on a few other texts. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Here the true meaning depends on the true mode of transposing the Greek words, and this mode does not present itself so clearly in the original as not to leave room for a little ambiguity. If we translate every word as it is in the English text, but transpose them differently and yet in harmony with the law of language, we may read—For as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall be made alive. Now that is just it, and the Universalist has lost his strong hold.

There is one point more the reader should be apprized of, and that is, all languages have peculiar phrases that have only a phraseological meaning, a meaning which cannot be drawn from the individual words; thus we say a man is "on the fence;" when he is halting between two opinions; and that he is "three sheets in the wind," when he is drunk, &c. Now a literal translation of the words of these phrases would fail to give our meaning of them.

So among the Jews, they have a phrase to represent what we would call carnal natures, corrupt natures, or something similar, and when literally and truly translated in English it reads, "flesh and blood;" but literal flesh and literal blood is no more implied in the phrase than three and sheets and wind, are implied when we say a man drunk is "three sheets in the wind."

By a little attention the reader may see that where the term is used, it is used as antithetical to something holy. The Savior said to Peter, "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Paul uses the term in precisely the same sense he does, first man, earthy, corruptible, &c.

There are other portions of the word I should be glad to speak of, but this much must suffice for the present, and if it will do the scattered flock any good, the writer will consider himself well rewarded for his toil.

The Last Call of Mercy.

Bro. Grant:—There appears to be something remarkable in the present outpouring of the Spirit, unlike any thing we have ever heard of before. I have observed that those of all denominations who live nearest to God, seem to be impressed with the idea that this is the last call of mercy. Look out, sinner, and make your peace with God before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and you be obliged to say,—"The harvest is past, and I am not saved."

I was at the business men's meeting today at the Old South Chapel. A converted Jew was present, and stated he had just arrived from New York, where the interest in the revival is about the same as it has been in months past. He has come to Boston to spend a few weeks and labor with the sons of Abraham in this city. He is an assistant secretary of a society in the city of New York for the amelioration of the condition of the Jews. He says, in his official capacity, he has learned there has recently been a convention of Rabbis in Europe to consider the subject of christianity. They are expecting their Messiah soon, and they say that if he does not come within fifteen years they shall believe Christ is the Messiah, and receive him as their Savior. Truly—

"The sons of earth are waking
To penitential tears."

A Professor of some Seminary said,—the theology of the present revival is, Come to Jesus. Professor Pond, of Bangor Seminary, says, in the revival meetings in that place this is the principal burden; and in some of them most all that is said is, Come to Jesus. It seems that we have arrived at the period in the history of the church which John saw, when the spirit and the bride say, "come." I see in all the notices of meetings upon hand bills, &c., the word "come" is conspicuous. In one of the large Baptist Churches in this city there is the word "come" in large letters just above the clock in the vestry.

It seems the prophecy of Zechariah is being fulfilled, where it is said, they shall go from one city to another and say, let us go speedily to pray before the Lord.—This has been literally fulfilled in instances without number. Churches have sent out delegations to localities where there has been no special interest, and they have been the means of arousing the people, and a revival has followed. Truly the time draweth near when we shall be enabled to say,—

"Lo he comes with clouds descending,
Once for favored sinners slain;
Thousand, thousand saints attending,

Swell the triumph of his train:
Hallelujah!
Jesus comes on earth to reign."

Yours in hope,
D. N. Smith.

Boston, May 8th.

From Bro. H. L. Hastings.

Dear Brethren:—Having obtained help of God, I continue to this day witnessing to small and great the Gospel of God. My health is, I think, gaining slowly,—as fast as my numerous cares and labors will permit. I am trying to preach God's word. He sets before me open doors. May his grace and mercy attend the word. I have much that is cheering which I might record,—but each person who serves God has his own springs of consolation.

The harvest is great—laborers are few. I should like to see a dozen able men—men that can work for nothing and find themselves—men that can preach and pay their own expenses, and whose families are willing to endure hardness as good soldiers—men who leave a field in a better state than they found it—in this section of country. I suppose God would take care of a number of live men who travel on the principle, "Go where there is the least money and the most devil."

Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest to send forth laborers into his Harvest.

A word about books and tracts. The postage on these must always be prepaid. Persons who send word that they are poor and want tracts free, will please if able send enough to pay the postage on them, as it is a rather hard tax to give away the books and pay postage also. Still I will do it if persons are so very poor that they cannot pay postage. If they are stingy I will freely pay the postage and give them the books.

H. L. Hastings,
49 Arcade, Rochester, N. Y.

May 5th, 1858.

From Sr. M. C. Hart.

Bro. Grant:—It is about three months since I embraced this blessed hope. I lived nearly sixteen years in sin, serving satan, when I felt that I was a sinner in the sight of God, and must turn from my wicked ways and seek an interest in Christ, or be lost forever. As soon as I was willing to yield myself a servant to obey him, and leave the vain pleasures of this ungodly world, I felt the pardoning love of Jesus, and was soon made to rejoice in a Savior's love. I rejoice when I think how good the Lord has been to me. When I was in the way of iniquity, rebelling against a God so good and so holy, he took my feet out of the horrible pit of mire and clay and placed them on the rock Christ Jesus; put a new song into my mouth, even praise to the Most High. I thank the name of God for what he has done for me.

Brethren and sisters, let us put on the whole armor of God, and fight manfully the fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. We have afflictions here, but, thank the name of the Lord, in a few more days or months at most, if faithful, we shall be free from all care. There will be no more sickness, pain, or death, but joy and peace forever. I mean ever to be found faithful doing my Master's will, and at last partake of the joys of the new earth.

Your Sister in Christ,
M. C. Hart.

Newfield, Ct.

From Sr. C. E. Cole.

Bro. Grant:—Being aware of the awful doom that awaits those choosing rather to be influenced by their own evil passions and desires, than by the Holy Spirit, it creates in me a desire to write, hoping some portion of it may aid a little in softening some stony heart. To the unprepared I would say, your probation will soon be brought to a close. Your sentence will soon be—"Come, ye blessed;" or, "Depart ye cursed," &c. Therefore, do not sleep nor slumber until you find peace in believing and obeying. Do away with all the lusts of the flesh. "Now the works of the flesh are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murderers, drunkenness, revellings, and such like. They which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." I can only entreat you to take heed to that new commandment;—"Love one another." For all the law is fulfilled in one word even in this; "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Words cannot express that joy and consolation I have received since I learned and regarded this simple, yet great truth. This religion of love ensures our consolation in this life and gives us the blessed assurance of obtaining glory, honor and immortality—Eternal life, at the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

"Love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Thus shall ye be the children of your Father which is in heaven. Only see what a great and glorious promise! Truly, I can say, Thy yoke is easy and thy burden is light.

I rejoice to hear of so many conversions, far and near. Scores have been added to the churches at Marshall, and there are revivals also in the adjoining towns. I long to see Advent societies here. I feel as if we were nearly all perishing for lack of knowledge. Will not Bro. A. N. Seymour come this way again?

Dear brothers and sisters, let us have patience a little while longer, and He that is to come will come and will not tarry.

C. E. Cole.

Calhoun Co., Mich.

From Bro. B. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—At the present time in this place, there is great anxiety to have some advent preaching. Brother, come and preach the word. For the three years last past we, as Adventists, have been in a very low state. During this time we have had but little preaching and less of interest; when once was the time we numbered some thirty or forty living witnesses for the truth. Now there are but few. Still, those who have ever believed the doctrine of the Bible, remain firm, with few if any exceptions. At the present time, there appears to be an unusual inquiry among those who have had but little opportunity of hearing the glorious doctrine of the resurrection, and kindred subjects.

"We wish to know the truth," seems to be the desire of many. Shall we have it? The truth shall make us free. We want to build on the sure Foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. And to this end, in behalf of the brethren and friends in this vicinity, I make this earnest request, that some preaching brother, sound in doctrine, and who can not be gainsayed, who is able to answer any objection that may arise against the truth, would come over and help us. Bro. Edwin Burnham, or Bro. John Couch, is preferred; because we have been somewhat acquainted with these men. There are, no doubt, others who would give satisfaction. We want our call attended to as soon as possible. If an appointment is given, please state when and where we shall meet the brother on the way to convey him to this place; in Bucksport, or Bangor, Orrington, or Ellsworth.

We should expect a meeting to continue some three or four days. All necessary expense will be promptly paid by the brethren here.

In behalf of the brethren and friends of Surry,
Benj. Smith.

Surry, Me., May 1st, 1858.

Obituary.

Suddenly fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of the 17th, at half past 7 o'clock, Bro. Samuel F. Freeman, of Orrington, Me.

Bro. Freeman was baptized seven years ago last June, by Eld. D. Thompson of the M. E. church, very soon after his conversion to God. In his endeavors to grow in grace and knowledge, he searched the Scriptures, and the result was that he became convinced of the truth of the Advent near, and of no immortality out of Christ, and consequently of the need of a resurrection by the great Life Giver at his second coming. In this faith he lived, and with the undaunted hope of eternal life through Christ alone he sunk under his severe disease, declaring a firm belief that this last enemy would not hold him but a short time, believing the period near when he could exclaim, "O grave, where is thy victory!" "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

This dear brother was a worthy young man who was generally employed in the winter season in school teaching, in which he was very successful, having taught two schools the winter previous. On the sixth ult. he was attacked with a cold, which after some time terminated in the lung fever. He was, however, thought to be better, and was apparently recovering until the morning of life's termination. At 6 A. M. he was suddenly attacked by the heart complaint, when in spite of all care and the deepest solicitude, death conquered, and he is laid away with the dead, awaiting the sound of the last trump, to have part in the first resurrection.

In this afflicting dispensation a young and amiable widow is left to mourn the loss of a tender and affectionate husband; and a lovely child will no more hear the fervent prayer of a fond father. May God in his holy habitation be this widow's God, and a Father to the fatherless child.

It will be remembered by our Advent brethren that this afflicted widow is the daughter of our much loved Bro. H. M. Rich, whose house has for many years been a welcome home to the way-worn itinerant, who has been proclaiming the coming of the Lord with the mighty angels.

Deeply, very deeply, has this dear family been afflicted within a few years. Two beloved and promising sons have fallen within some four or five years, leaving widows and children, and now the dear daughter is deprived of the youth of her choice, leaving a family of widows to look to Bro. Rich for counsel in times of difficulty.

Those deeply afflicted ones may be assured of the sympathy of those who are acquainted with their circumstances, and have hearts to mourn with those who mourn. And from our heart we wish the oil of joy for mourning, and a garment of praise for their spirit of heaviness, and that all may shortly meet in that better world, where they will die no more—be equal to the angels, the children of God, even the children of the resurrection.

Thomas Smith.

Round Pond, Me., Apr. 17, 1858.

Died, at Hillsburgh, N. S., March 10th, 1858, Mary Sophia Rice, daughter of Israel and Susan Rice, aged 10 years and four months.

This dear child had a fall at school four years ago last June, which brought on a fever and fever sores in all her limbs and on her body. She suffered extremely for three years, during which time the Lord converted her soul; and being accustomed to hear about the coming of Christ, would say she would be made well when Jesus came, and always when asked said she would be glad to see the Lord. She recovered so far as to walk, sing, and talk; but she was finally taken with the scarlet fever, Feb. 17th, and on Monday, Mar. 10th, sweetly resigned, she fell asleep in Jesus.

And in that bright morning when the trumpet shall sound,
The voice of the Son shall enter the ground;
The sleepers in Jesus then called from the tomb,
In triumphs of glory ascend to the throne.

O hasten the morning, thou God of all praise,
O loosen the captives long bound in their graves;
Break the chains from their hands, thou Sovereign of all,
And make the dear sleepers respond to thy call.

O come, blessed Jesus, no longer delay!
O haste that blest morning! O bring that glad day!
Five children we've laid in the cold, dreary tomb,—
Our hearts will be saddened until thou return.

Yet with humble submission we yield to thy hand,
O give us thy grace the conflict to stand;
And let the large billow that over us rolls,
Purge the sin from our hearts and the dross from our souls.

And now to thy name we render all praise
May the hope of the future our confidence raise,
Till, with the redeemed in the land of the blest,
We join our dear children in a Sabbath of rest.

Domestic Summary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

Father Mason (city missionary,) stated in the morning prayer meeting to-day, May 3d, at the Old South Chapel, that twenty-six abandoned girls had been taken out of the sinks of iniquity at the North End. Last week, five were sent into the country. The meeting last night was one of great interest. Drunken men and profligate women were, together, seeking the Savior. The meetings are held daily at the hall, corner of North and Ferry streets, from 11 to 1 o'clock. A clergyman from Rhode Island said nearly all the towns in that State had been visited with the Holy Spirit. Men of business, intemperate men, lawyers, physicians, manufacturers, and others had been converted. In Central Falls, the work had been very powerful. One or two nests of gamblers had been broken up. One man who had been gambling upon the Sabbath went home convicted and was converted. Next Sabbath he took a Bible with him to the gambling house, read from it and talked to his associates. A number of them were converted and the whole nest was broken up. In another house, a gambler was convicted at the table. He rose and said, when one of his comrades asked him to drink, "I am done with strong drink and gambling houses forever, so help me God." He went home and found his wife under conviction and they both were converted. A man who has been within three months rescued from the lowest depths of infamy, rose with tearful eyes to testify of the love of Christ which he felt in his heart. He manifested great humility and earnestness, and his simple story affected nearly the whole audience to tears. The meeting was one of the most interesting that has ever been held in the city.

A gentleman from Detroit stated in the meeting in the Chapel this morning, that more than fifteen hundred persons have been converted recently in that city. Some prominent infidels and skeptics are among the number. In Chicago it was found necessary to suspend the business men's prayer meeting on account of the extent of the revival. The different churches had as much as they could do to attend to the wants of those who were seeking Christ among their own people. It was said that the revival in Charlestown was going on powerfully, though without any excitement. Numbers of firemen have been converted. In Bethel, Maine, it was said that a revival had been in progress for six months.

The prayer meeting from 9 to 10 o'clock in the evening at the rooms of the Christian Association, commenced in the small room, has increased so much as to make it necessary to open the large room. It is now crowded every evening.

The morning and noon meetings in the Old South Chapel in this city are still continued, and though they are not so crowded as they were some weeks ago, in point of deep interest they are fully up to any meetings which have been held. They are marked by a spirit of earnest prayer which gives promise of the continuance of the interest. At one of the meetings this week, Mr. Buss, a converted Jew, gave a very interesting account of his conversion. He had come to Boston to labor for a few weeks among the Jews here. He stated that he had recently received a letter from England, giving an account of a meeting of Rabbis in that country to discuss the question whether Christ was the true Messiah. They had agreed, if the Messiah did not come in fifteen years, to accept Christ as the true Messiah.—Traveller.

The Great Awakening.—In the fourth week of October, 1857, three Christian brethren met in the Reformed Dutch church in Fulton-street, New York, and established the first business men's noon prayer-meeting. From that feeble beginning the work has spread, new places for prayer being opened, till now there are about thirty daily gatherings for prayer in the city and vicinity. The example has also been followed in other places, till from all parts of the land we hear of similar assemblages for prayer. Prayer seems to be the great characteristic of this work. The Christian Mirror, referring to it, says, "There are no great crowds rallying about some centre of pulpit oratory, but the prayer-meetings in by-places are thronged. God has taken all opportunity away for the charge of calling it man's work. He has done it."

Boston, May 8th.

From Bro. H. L. Hastings.

Dear Brethren:—Having obtained help of God, I continue to this day witnessing to small and great the Gospel of God. My health is, I think, gaining slowly,—as fast as my numerous cares and labors will permit. I am trying to preach God's word. He sets before me open doors. May his grace and mercy attend the word. I have much that is cheering which I might record,—but each person who serves God has his own springs of consolation.

The harvest is great—laborers are few. I should like to see a dozen able men—men that can work for nothing and find themselves—men that can preach and pay their own expenses, and whose families are willing to endure hardness as good soldiers—men who leave a field in a better state than they found it—in this section of country. I suppose God would take care of a number of live men who travel on the principle, "Go where there is the least money and the most devil."

Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest to send forth laborers into his Harvest.

A word about books and tracts. The postage on these must always be prepaid. Persons who send word that they are poor and want tracts free, will please if able send enough to pay the postage on them, as it is a rather hard tax to give away the books and pay postage also. Still I will do it if persons are so very poor that they cannot pay postage. If they are stingy I will freely pay the postage and give them the books.

From Sr. M. C. Hart.

Bro. Grant:—It is about three months since I embraced this blessed hope. I lived nearly sixteen years in sin, serving satan, when I felt that I was a sinner in the sight of God, and must turn from my wicked ways and seek an interest in Christ, or be lost forever. As soon as I was willing to yield myself a servant to obey him, and leave the vain pleasures of this ungodly world, I felt the pardoning love of Jesus, and was soon made to rejoice in a Savior's love. I rejoice when I think how good the Lord has been to me. When I was in the way of iniquity, rebelling against a God so good and so holy, he took my feet out of the horrible pit of mire and clay and placed them on the rock Christ Jesus; put a new song into my mouth, even praise to the Most High. I thank the name of God for what he has done for me.

Brethren and sisters, let us put on the whole armor of God, and fight manfully the fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. We have afflictions here, but, thank the name of the Lord, in a few more days or months at most, if faithful, we shall be free from all care. There will be no more sickness, pain, or death, but joy and peace forever. I mean ever to be found faithful doing my Master's will, and at last partake of the joys of the new earth.

Your Sister in Christ,
M. C. Hart.

Newfield, Ct.

From Sr. C. E. Cole.

Bro. Grant:—Being aware of the awful doom that awaits those choosing rather to be influenced by their own evil passions and desires, than by the Holy Spirit, it creates in me a desire to write, hoping some portion of it may aid a little in softening some stony heart. To the unprepared I would say, your probation will soon be brought to a close. Your sentence will soon be—"Come, ye blessed;" or, "Depart ye cursed," &c. Therefore, do not sleep nor slumber until you find peace in believing and obeying. Do away with all the lusts of the flesh. "Now the works of the flesh are these: adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murderers, drunkenness, revellings, and such like. They which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." I can only entreat you to take heed to that new commandment;—"Love one another." For all the law is fulfilled in one word even in this; "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Words cannot express that joy and consolation I have received since I learned and regarded this simple, yet great truth. This religion of love ensures our consolation in this life and gives us the blessed assurance of obtaining glory, honor and immortality—Eternal life, at the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

"Love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you." Thus shall ye be the children of your Father which is in heaven. Only see what a great and glorious promise! Truly, I can say, Thy yoke is easy and thy burden is light.

I rejoice to hear of so many conversions, far and near. Scores have been added to the churches at Marshall, and there are revivals also in the adjoining towns. I long to see Advent societies here. I feel as if we were nearly all perishing for lack of knowledge. Will not Bro. A. N. Seymour come this way again?

Dear brothers and sisters, let us have patience a little while longer, and He that is to come will come and will not tarry.

C. E. Cole.

Calhoun Co., Mich.

From Bro. B. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—At the present time in this place, there is great anxiety to have some advent preaching. Brother, come and preach the word. For the three years last past we, as Adventists, have been in a very low state. During this time we have had but little preaching and less of interest; when once was the time we numbered some thirty or forty living witnesses for the truth. Now there are but few. Still, those who have ever believed the doctrine of the Bible, remain firm, with few if any exceptions. At the present time, there appears to be an unusual inquiry among those who have had, but little opportunity of hearing the glorious doctrine of the resurrection, and kindred subjects.

"We wish to know the truth," seems to be the desire of many. Shall we have it? The truth shall make us free. We want to build on the sure Foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. And to this end, in behalf of the brethren and friends in this vicinity, I make this earnest request, that some preaching brother, sound in doctrine, and who can not be gainsayed, who is able to answer any objection that may arise against the truth, would come over and help us. Bro. Edwin Burnham, or Bro. John Couch, is preferred; because we have been somewhat acquainted with these men. There are, no doubt, others who would give satisfaction. We want our call attended to as soon as possible. If an appointment is given, please state when and where we shall meet the brother on the way to convey him to this place; in Bucksport, or Bangor, Orrington, or Ellsworth.

We should expect a meeting to continue some three or four days. All necessary expense will be promptly paid by the brethren here.

In behalf of the brethren and friends of Surry,
Benj. Smith.

Obituary.

Suddenly fell asleep in Jesus on the morning of the 17th, at half past 7 o'clock, Bro. Samuel F. Freeman, of Orrington, Me.

Bro. Freeman was baptized seven years ago last June, by Eld. D. Thompson of the M. E. church, very soon after his conversion to God. In his endeavors to grow in grace and knowledge, he searched the Scriptures, and the result was that he became convinced of the truth of the Advent near, and of no immortality out of Christ, and consequently of the need of a resurrection by the great Life Giver at his second coming. In this faith he lived, and with the undaunted hope of eternal life through Christ alone he sunk under his severe disease, declaring a firm belief that this last enemy would not hold him but a short time, believing the period near when he could exclaim, "O grave, where is thy victory!" "Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

This dear brother was a worthy young man who was generally employed in the winter season in school teaching, in which he was very successful, having taught two schools the winter previous. On the sixth ult. he was attacked with a cold, which after some time terminated in the lung fever. He was, however, thought to be better, and was apparently recovering until the morning of life's termination. At 6 A. M. he was suddenly attacked by the heart complaint, when in spite of all care and the deepest solicitude, death conquered, and he is laid away with the dead, awaiting the sound of the last trump, to have part in the first resurrection.

In this afflicting dispensation a young and amiable widow is left to mourn the loss of a tender and affectionate husband; and a lovely child will no more hear the fervent prayer of a fond father. May God in his holy habitation be this widow's God, and a Father to the fatherless child.

It will be remembered by our Advent brethren that this afflicted widow is the daughter of our much loved Bro. H. M. Rich, whose house has for many years been a welcome home to the way-worn itinerant, who has been proclaiming the coming of the Lord with the mighty angels.

Deeply, very deeply, has this dear family been afflicted within a few years. Two beloved and promising sons have fallen within some four or five years, leaving widows and children, and now the dear daughter is deprived of the youth of her choice, leaving a family of widows to look to Bro. Rich for counsel in times of difficulty.

Those deeply afflicted ones may be assured of the sympathy of those who are acquainted with their circumstances, and have hearts to mourn with those who mourn. And from our heart we wish the oil of joy for mourning, and a garment of praise for their spirit of heaviness, and that all may shortly meet in that better world, where they will die no more—be equal to the angels, the children of God, even the children of the resurrection.

Thomas Smith.

Round Pond, Me., Apr. 17, 1858.

Died, at Hillsburgh, N. S., March 10th, 1858, Mary Sophia Rice, daughter of Israel and Susan Rice, aged 10 years and four months.

This dear child had a fall at school four years ago last June, which brought on a fever and fever sores in all her limbs and on her body. She suffered extremely for three years, during which time the Lord converted her soul; and being accustomed to hear about the coming of Christ, would say she would be made well when Jesus came, and always when asked said she would be glad to see the Lord. She recovered so far as to walk, sing, and talk; but she was finally taken with the scarlet fever, Feb. 17th, and on Monday, Mar. 10th, sweetly resigned, she fell asleep in Jesus.

And in that bright morning when the trumpet shall sound,
The voice of the Son shall enter the ground;
The sleepers in Jesus then called from the tomb,
In triumphs of glory ascend to the throne.

O hasten the morning, thou God of all praise,
O loosen the captives long bound in their graves;
Break the chains from their hands, thou Sovereign of all,
And make the dear sleepers respond to thy call.

O come, blessed Jesus, no longer delay!
O haste that blest morning! O bring that glad day!
Five children we've laid in the cold, dreary tomb,—
Our hearts will be saddened until thou return.

Yet with humble submission we yield to thy hand,
O give us thy grace the conflict to stand;
And let the large billow that over us rolls,
Purge the sin from our hearts and the dross from our souls.

And now to thy name we render all praise
May the hope of the future our confidence raise,
Till, with the redeemed in the land of the blest,
We join our dear children in a Sabbath of rest.

Israel Rice.

Domestic Summary.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

Father Mason (city missionary,) stated in the morning prayer meeting to-day, May 3d, at the Old South Chapel, that twenty-six abandoned girls had been taken out of the sinks of iniquity at the North End. Last week, five were sent into the country. The meeting last night was one of great interest. Drunken men and profligate women were, together, seeking the Savior. The meetings are held daily at the hall, corner of North and Ferry streets, from 11 to 1 o'clock. A clergyman from Rhode Island said nearly all the towns in that State had been visited with the Holy Spirit. Men of business, intemperate men, lawyers, physicians, manufacturers, and others had been converted. In Central Falls, the work had been very powerful. One or two nests of gamblers had been broken up. One man who had been gambling upon the Sabbath went home convicted and was converted. Next Sabbath he took a Bible with him to the gambling house, read from it and talked to his associates. A number of them were converted and the whole nest was broken up. In another house, a gambler was convicted at the table. He rose and said, when one of his comrades asked him to drink, "I am done with strong drink and gambling houses forever, so help me God." He went home and found his wife under conviction and they both were converted. A man who has been within three months rescued from the lowest depths of infamy, rose with tearful eyes to testify of the love of Christ which he felt in his heart. He manifested great humility and earnestness, and his simple story affected nearly the whole audience to tears. The meeting was one of the most interesting that has ever been held in the city.

A gentleman from Detroit stated in the meeting in the Chapel this morning, that more than fifteen hundred persons have been converted recently in that city. Some prominent infidels and skeptics are among the number. In Chicago it was found necessary to suspend the business men's prayer meeting on account of the extent of the revival. The different churches had as much as they could do to attend to the wants of those who were seeking Christ among their own people. It was said that the revival in Charlestown was going on powerfully, though without any excitement. Numbers of firemen have been converted. In Bethel, Maine, it was said that a revival had been in progress for six months.

The prayer meeting from 9 to 10 o'clock in the morning at the rooms of the Christian Association, commenced in the small room, has increased so much as to make it necessary to open the large room. It is now crowded every evening.

The morning and noon meetings in the Old South Chapel in this city are still continued, and though they are not so crowded as they were some weeks ago, in point of deep interest they are fully up to any meetings which have been held. They are marked by a spirit of earnest prayer which gives promise of the continuance of the interest. At one of the meetings this week, Mr. Buss, a converted Jew, gave a very interesting account of his conversion. He had come to Boston to labor for a few weeks among the Jews here. He stated that he had recently received a letter from England, giving an account of a meeting of Rabbis in that country to discuss the question whether Christ was the true Messiah. They had agreed, if the Messiah did not come in fifteen years, to accept Christ as the true Messiah.—Traveller.

The Great Awakening.—In the fourth week of October, 1857, three Christian brethren met in the Reformed Dutch church in Fulton-street, New York, and established the first business men's noon prayer-meeting. From that feeble beginning the work has spread, new places for prayer being opened, till now there are about thirty daily gatherings for prayer in the city and vicinity. The example has also been followed in other places, till from all parts of the land we hear of similar assemblages for prayer. Prayer seems to be the great characteristic of this work. The Christian Mirror, referring to it, says, "There are no great crowds rallying about some centre of pulpit oratory, but the prayer-meetings in by-places are thronged. God has taken all opportunity away for the charge of calling it man's work. He has done it."

Poetry.

For the Crisis.

O LOVE THE LORD.

O love the Lord, ye sons of men,
And call upon his name;
Prepare to meet him—lo! he comes
With all his heavenly train.

O love him now, that you may then
Among his saints be found,
And sing the song of victory,
And wear a radiant crown.

O love him now, and bear the cross,
Forsake the guilty throng;
Then you will greet that day with joy
And sing redemption's song.

O love him now, and do not fear
To tell the world the story,
That Christ is coming very soon
To take us home to glory.

Then we will range those blissful plains,
And follow Christ our Leader,
And eat the fruit from Life's fair tree,
And drink from Life's pure river.

O sinner, will you go with us?
We're going to Mount Zion;
With harp in hand we hope to stand,
And gain a heavenly mansion.

O come and fight, 't will not be long
That you will be a soldier,
Our King is coming very soon
To establish peace forever.

The time is near, that glorious day,
When in the clouds of heaven
The Lord our Savior will appear,
And take us to the Kingdom.

O sinner, you will see him too
Descend on that bright morning,
And hear that dreadful word Depart!
Unless you now take warning.

O be entreated now to leave
The world and all its pleasures,
And in the Kingdom you will reign,
And find a heavenly treasure.

The saints united all will meet,
Nor fear a separation;
With joy they'll bow at Jesus' feet
And praise the King of Heaven.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. D. Wellcome.

BRO. GRANT:—I have recently visited the place endeared to me by early and pleasant associations, and oh how my heart was made to rejoice in view of what God hath wrought in that city, especially in a neighborhood noted for its profanity, drunkenness and Sabbath breaking. In former times when residing in G——, my heart yearned over them, for they seemed like sheep having no shepherd; and with a bundle of tracts in my hand, I had gone from house to house, and scattered these silent messengers of the gospel, and by personal effort sought to win them to the Savior.

Shortly before leaving the place, I remarked to a friend, that if I were only a man, I would gather those lost sheep into the school house and preach to them Jesus. With what glad surprise did I rereceive the intelligence that their houses had become houses of prayer, and that many could testify that Jesus Christ hath power on earth to forgive sins. Learning that they had established prayer meetings every night, I embraced an early opportunity to be present. From lips that had often profaned the Savior's name, I now heard the language of Canaan. How happy they looked, and how eloquently those "unlearned and ignorant men" and women discoursed on the theme of redeeming grace and dying love. Though poor so far as respects worldly sustenance, they are "rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom." Though clad in mean and tattered garments, they gave evidence of being clothed with the robe of righteousness. Though ignorant in regard to worldly science, they were evidently taught of God; receiving from him that wisdom that cometh down from above.

They greeted me as an old friend, and in compliance with their request, I attended a conference meeting the following afternoon at the dwelling house of one of their number. It was good to be there. Women assembled with their babes, and although poor, and some of them in ragged garments, Jesus was not ashamed to meet with them and call them friends.—One woman who had been intemperate spoke of pardon and peace through Christ; and another, from whose lips the vile oath had often been heard, with a burning love, and eloquence truly astonishing, declared what great things the Lord had done for her soul; and her words pierced sinners and backsliders to the heart and drew forth the falling tears.

This gracious work was apparently one side from all outward efforts at salvation. They had not been attendants upon any of the various meetings in this city, but the work broke out in their midst,—the Spirit of God spoke directly to their consciences; they saw and bemoaned their sins, and fled for pardon to Christ. They seem to be entirely one side of the ordinary means of grace, and have their meetings among themselves, both on the week day evening and on the Sabbath. Several of the unconverted have gone to them probably from curiosity, and been so pierced in the heart, as to ask for prayers. You may deem it strange that while so many are turning to the Lord, I should dwell so long on this little company, and I cannot expect others to sympathise in my feelings when I say, that although I heard scores in other places testifying to what God had done for them, and saw scores of the impenitent rising for prayers, over none did my soul so fully rejoice, as over those of whom I have written.

My rejoicing perhaps is on the principle of that awakened by the intelligence that the heathen are embracing christianity. We feel a deeper interest in the tidings which reach us from the missionaries' field of labor of the conversion of an idolater, because they are surrounded by so much darkness and enjoy so few privileges.—Those of whom I speak are heathens in a gospel land. Their darkness, their degradation, awakened sympathies in my heart far deeper than those experienced for those who are blest with praying parents and gospel privileges. I feel a far greater interest for those who are shut out from the sympaties of the virtuous, excluded from the society of the moral, and destitute of the comforts enjoyed by those who move in the higher walks of life, than for any other class. I had rather speak a word of encouragement and love to such, than to meet in the assemblies of the more honorable.

Let the poor, the sinful, the vile, find in me a friend! I have learned this lesson at the feet of Jesus. It was one of the accusations brought against Christ—"He receiveth sinners and eateth with them," and I rejoice that he merited the charge. He told the self-righteous pharisees that the publicans and harlots would go into heaven before them. One striking characteristic of this great awakening is this—it reaches the lowest dens of iniquity.

At Augusta I heard scores testify of Jesus, redeeming grace, and by scores the awakened sinners arose and requested prayers. And the interest is increasing. From the highways and hedges, they are hastening to the marriage supper, and the wedding will be furnished with guests. Many of the converts express the conviction that this is the last call of mercy, and that the Lord is coming speedily.

Such a day of the outpouring of the Spirit I never expected to see. But I pray God to speed the work, and may all nations share in his salvation! We can well afford to wait the joyful day of redemption while sinners are thus being prepared to share its glories.

Some have recently told me that this is "the coming of the Lord"—that "Christ is now coming interiorly," but I reply that I never can be satisfied until I look upon him and behold him face to face. It is those to whom Christ has been inwardly revealed who love his appearing. His is ever in spirit with his people, but he is coming again the second time to receive them unto himself, that where he is, there they may so. O hasten, happy day!

Yours in Christian love,

MARY D. WELLCOME.

For the Crisis.

I LONG TO GO HOME.

I long to go home, where no sorrow or care
Invades those bright fields ever glorious there;
Where sighings and groanings are sounds all unknown,
While angels are singing sweet songs near the Throne.

I long to go home, for this world is a vale
Of wearisome darkness, where fierce winds assail;
The brightest of pleasures must fade at their birth,—
I'm weary of thee, O thou down-trodden Earth!

And Death boldly enters my dwelling-place here,
And robs me of friends,—no matter how dear;
He heeds not my prayers by night or by day,
But cruelly bears all my loved ones away.

There's pleasure unending in yon world of light;
The clouds ne'er are tinged by the dark hue of night;
The ransomed ones never in sorrow shall pine,—
I want to go home, for that blest world is mine.

From Bro. I. C. Welcome.

BRO. GRANT:—I spent last Lord's day, April 24th, at Yarmouth, with Bro. R. R. York and his people. The Lord has graciously revived his work there and raised up a happy, and prosperous company of believers under the labors of Bro. York. They have a beautiful place of worship, hired by Bro. York, a good congregation; plenty of opposition, and much to encourage them. The little time I spent with them was precious to me. I spoke three times to very attentive assemblies. Some twelve or fifteen are to put on the Lord by baptism next Lord's day.

Yours, still looking for the Lord,

I. C. WELLCOME.

Brunswick, Me., Apr. 30th.

From Sr. L. Bliss.

BRO. GRANT:—Feeling that I have the spirit of Christ in my heart, I would like to say a word of encouragement to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad. I am still striving to live a christian, and the only way I have to live is to cling close to Jesus. It is then he speaks peace to my troubled heart. I do rejoice in believing that Jesus lives. Yes, glory to God, we shall see him coming in the clouds of heaven. I hope I shall be found of him in peace, having on the robe of Christ's righteousness, and be permitted to enter through the gates into the city.

It is my heart's desire and prayer that I may gain an inheritance in the soon coming kingdom of our Savior.

Rejoice in hope, rejoice with me,
We shall from all our sins be free.

Yours in hope of eternal life,

LUCINA BLISS.

TRUST IN GOD.

To thee I turn
When sorrow droops the wing,
And winter has no spring,
And every stream is dry
That ran in gladness by:
To thee I turn.

To thee I turn,
When friends I love forsake,
And bends the heart to break,
And on each face I see
The smile of treachery:
To thee I turn.

To thee I turn,
In every hour of pain,
When help from man is vain,
And find a sweet relief,
While joy gives place to grief:
To thee I turn.

To thee I turn,
My Savior, turn to thee,
And love and kindness see,
When glory fills the skies—
When every pleasure dies—
To thee I turn.

Apollos;

Or, Directions to Young Christians.

The following is from an interesting little work, published by Gould & Lincoln, 59 Washington Street, Boston.

Do not be periodical christians. There are some who profess religion, who never seem to feel any interest on the subject except when every one else does. It is true, there are special seasons of revived religion in the hearts of all christians, but if it is only at such times that progress is made in divine life, and interest is manifested in the salvation of souls, there is great reason to fear that what is called religion is nothing but sympathy with the feelings of others.

Be sure that there exists a marked difference between your appearance and conduct, and that of those who are not christians. Remember that Christ has required this of you, and that even the world expects it.

Do not suppose you can recommend religion by appearing interested in every thing that interests those who have no better portion than this world. Remember that your deportment, your conversation, your interest in dress, in company and amusements, the manner in which you perform your religious duties, are all carefully noted and weighed by those around you, who do not love religion; and if they do not see a marked difference between you and themselves, they either conclude there is nothing in religion, or else that you are a hypocrite. The world expect that you will be very different from them, and despise you in their hearts if you do not. If you wish to recommend religion, let the world see it acted out according to the beautiful pattern laid down in the Bible; and do not suppose that you can improve this pattern by any addition or subtraction of your own. On one subject there are some who need instruction. There is a class of christians who appear taciturn, unsocial, and even sad. This appearance is altogether inconsistent with the spirit of religion. Christians ought to appear cheerful and happy; to appear to receive with pleasure and gratitude all the lawful enjoyments bestowed by their heavenly Father. Such a gloomy deportment as has been described, does not do honor to religion, and causes those whom we wish to win to the ways of pleasantness and peace, to feel that religion is a melancholy, unsocial and forbidding subject.

All professors of religion should endeavor to have such views of God, his love, his providence, his care, and should so live, as to be cheerful and happy, and to appear so.

On the contrary, there is a class of professed christians who indulge in frequent trifling and levity. This is quite as inconsistent and injurious as the former, and if any thing, it is more so. Let the christian, at least, learn to make a distinction between cheerfulness and levity. Remember, we are commanded to avoid foolish talking and jesting, and that it is possible to be happy, cheerful, affable and kind, without any trifling or levity.

Remember that your evidence of possessing religion ceases, when any thing else has the first place in your thoughts and interests.

Religion should not lessen our love for our friends, or our enjoyment of rational pleasures, but the desire to please God in all our ways should be the prevailing feeling of the mind. Our Savior says, we cannot have two masters; God and his service must be first in our thoughts and affections, or else the world and its pleasures are first. If then we would find whose servants we are, we must find who has the first place in our thoughts and affections.

Never for one day omit to read the Bible with prayer. This is a most important direction. It is of the utmost importance that you should never for once break over this habit. Prayer and the Bible are your anchor and your shield, which will hold you firmly in the path of duty and protect you from temptation. You had better give up one meal every day, if it is necessary, in order to secure time for this duty. You had better give up any thing else. Nothing is a duty, if the performance of it will interfere with this duty. Remember, this is the bread of your life, and the water of your salvation; and that you cannot live in health a single day without their strengthening and invigorating influence.

Be regulated by a principle of duty in little things. This is the way that common christians are to cause their light to shine. Few christians can expect to do any great things to show their love for the Savior, but all can "deny themselves, and thus daily take the cross and follow him." Religion should govern the temper and the tongue; should save us from indolence, from vanity, from pride, from foolishness, from levity, from moroseness, from selfishness, and all the little every-day foibles to which we are exposed. Religion should exemplify its gentleness in your kind and affable manners; its purity and propriety, in your conversation; its benevolence, in your conduct; and its consistency and heavenly tendency, in all your ways.

It is a most excellent method to go to some sincere and candid friend, and inquire what are our own defects in temper, character and every-day deportment; and when you have discovered these, make it the object of your prayers and efforts to correct them.

One thing ought to be strictly regulated by principle, and that is, the employment of time. Always feel that you are doing wrong when your time is passing unprofitably. Have some regularity and method on this subject. Endeavor to ascertain how much time should be devoted to your friends and to relaxation, and to let the remainder be all of it employed in the most useful manner you can devise. Never be satified with the manner in which you are spending your time, if you can think of any possible way in which it might be more usefully employed.

Remember that time is the precious talent for which you must account to God, and if you find yourselves indulging in listless inactivity, or tempted to engage in employments of no practical use, remember your account to God. Be in a habit of inquiring, when you commence any employment, "Is there any thing I can do more useful than this?" And do not be satisfied till you have settled the question, that you are doing all the good you can.

Attempt, by your efforts and example, to raise the standard of piety and activity. If all who are now commencing christian life should make this an object, and not fall into the temptation which professed christians so often set before the lambs of the flock, the church would indeed soon rise before the world, "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners."

Resolve to be an example to those who ought to be an example to you, and take the Bible, and the Bible only, for your guide in forming christian character.

Be active in promoting all benevolent objects. Make it an object to prepare to lead with propriety in all social devotional duties. At this period, when prayer and effort must unite in hastening the great day of the Lord, let every young christian learn to guide the devotions of others, as well as to lift up his own private supplication. There is nothing which so much promotes the "brotherly love" required in the Bible, and nothing which so much promotes union of effort and interest, as social prayer; and every one who commences religious life, should aim to be prepared to perform such duties with propriety, and should stimulate others to engage in them.

Do not hesitate in the performance of all the external duties of a christian, because you do not find satisfactory evidence that your feelings are right.

Religious duty consists of two parts—feeling and action; and because we find great deficiency in one respect, we surely ought not to neglect the whole. It is as unreasonable as it would be not to attempt to feel right till every external duty was perfectly performed.

If we are dissatisfied with our evidence, let us go on and do every thing that a christian should do, as the most hopeful way to produce right feelings. We surely cannot hope to bring our hearts right by neglecting our outward duties.

Go forward, then, and take a stand as an active christian, and if your hearts are not right with God, you may be sure you are in less danger in taking this course than in neglecting it.

"How shall I become a Christian?"

[Written for the Young Men's Christian Association.]

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," says the Bible. That is, give up your disobedience to God and your neglect of his Gospel, and, asking forgiveness for the past, take Christ as your Savior, and consecrate yourself to him entirely and forever.

Hence, in order to become a christian, it is not necessary that we have a given amount of emotion, or of excitement, whether in view of our sins, or of our eternal danger, or of the glorious hopes set before us in the Gospel. "One thing is needful," said the Redeemer—only one; and that is, to abandon our past neglect of him, and make him, henceforth, our Savior, our Master, our Teacher, our all. The Israelite, bitten by a fiery serpent, was to look at a serpent of brass lifted upon a pole; that alone was necessary. Till he did that, the greatest amount of pain or of fear availed him nothing. When he did that, his cure began. "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." He has been lifted up, and whosoever "looks" shall live.

And nothing but this will do. No amount of feeling will do. No good works will do. No effort to make oneself better will do. Any attempt to make conviction of sin, or any thing of our own, take the place of THE GRACE OF GOD IN CHRIST, is but a form of self-righteousness; that is, a form of that very selfishness which is to be given up. In becoming christians, then, we make Christ all our salvation.

And we give up our all to Christ; not only our property, our talents and our time, but our desires, our feelings, our aims, our aspirations, our plans of life—yes, all. And because we give up all, we give up self-dependence for perseverance in the christian course; and, with self-dependence, we resign self-confidence on the one hand, and unbelieving fears on the other. He has said, for our admonition, "Without me ye can go nothing;" and again, for our encouragement, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for my strength is made perfect in weakness." We believe these declarations, and rely on the Holy Spirit, sent by him in answer to prayer, for strength to overcome the world, our great adversary, and ourselves.

Reader, do you know yourself to be a sinner? Then you may come to Christ, and may come NOW. You believe that you need a Savior, and that Christ is the Savior you need; act on your belief by making him your Savior. The wayward little child, who has stood obstinately refusing his father's call to come to him, finds it a very simple thing at last to give up his obstinacy and fall into his father's arms. So simple is it to cease refusing the Savior's invitation, and humbly, penitently, trustingly, to accept it. Will you not do so? And, as you close this tract, will you not, with prayer for Divine forgiveness and praise for Divine mercies, say—

"A guilty, weak, and helpless worm,
On thy kind arms I fall;
Be thou my strength and righteousness,
My Savior, and my all."

How Rain is Formed.

To understand the philosophy of this phenomenon, essential to the very existence of plants and animals, a few facts, derived from observation and a long train of experiments, must be remembered. Were the atmosphere everywhere, at all times, at a uniform temperature, we should never have rain, hail or snow. The water absorbed by it in evaporation from the sea and the earth's surface would descend in an imperceptible vapor, or cease to be absorbed by the air, when it was once fully saturated. The absorbing power of the atmosphere, and consequently its capability to retain humidity, is proportionably greater in warm than in cold air. The air near the surface of the earth is warmer than it is in the region of the clouds. The higher we ascend from the earth, the colder we find the atmosphere. Hence the perpetual snow on very high mountains, in the hottest climates. Now, when from continued evaporation the air is highly saturated with vapor—though it be invisible—if its temperature is suddenly reduced by cold currents descending from above, or rushing from a higher to a lower latitude, its capacity to retain moisture is diminished, clouds are formed, and the result is rain. Air condenses as it cools, and, like a sponge filled with water and compressed, pours out the water which its diminished capacity cannot hold. How singular, yet how simple, is such an arrangement for watering the earth.—Scientific American.

Stephen Allen's Pocket Piece.

In the pocket book of Hon. Stephen Allen, who was drowned from on board the Henry Clay, was found a printed slip, apparently cut from a newspaper, of which the following is a copy:

"Keep good company, or none. Never be idle. If your hands can't be usefully employed, attend to the cultivation of your mind. Always speak the truth. Make few promises. Live up to your engagements. Keep your own secrets, if you have any. When you speak to a person, look him in the face. Good company and good conversation are the very sinews of virtue. Good character is above all things else. Your character cannot be essentially injured, except by your own acts. If any one speaks evil of you, let your life be so that no one will believe him. Drink no kind of intoxicating liquors. Ever live (misfortune excepted) within your income. When you retire to bed, think over what you have been doing during the day. Make no haste to be rich if you would prosper. Small and steady gains give competency, with tranquillity of mind. Never play at any game of chance. Avoid temptation, though you fear you may not withstand it. Earn money before you spend it. Never run into debt unless you see a way to get out of it. Never borrow if you can possibly avoid it. Do not marry until you are able to support a wife. Never speak evil of any one. Be just before you are generous. Keep yourself innocent if you would be happy. Save when you are young, that you may spend when you are old. Read over the above maxims at least once a week."

THE GREAT DESERT.—A recent number of the North British Review recounts facts respecting the African desert not generally known. It is stated that not a blade of grass or a particle of verdure can be found on the whole sandy expanse; that the palms and tamarinds of the oases spring from the burning sands, and that, instead of an unbroken level surface, the desert contains the most picturesque scenery, in the numerous ridges of hills, rising in some locations into high mountains, and containing rocks of formidable magnitude.

IT is said of Melancthon, that when he made an appointment, he expected not only the hour but the minute to be fixed, that no time might be wasted in the idleness of suspense;—and also of Washington, that when his Secretary, being repeat in his edly late attendance, laid the blame to his watch, he said, "You must either get another watch, or I another Secretary."

A REMARKABLE CASE OF LONGEVITY WITHOUT THE AID OF FOOD OR NOURISHMENT.—The following particulars have been related to us by Mr. George Cronkhite, of this village, a gentleman of well known veracity and candor, who has visited, in his professional capacity of County Superintendent of the Poor, the lady whose remarkable tenacity to life, without the aid of food or any stimulus to support nature, we give to our readers. It appears that about a year ago the invalid (Mrs. Simeon Hays, residing at Horicon, in this county,) was attacked by a disease known as epileptic fits, and that one of these paroxysms was of such a violent nature that it lasted eighteen days, and that during the past ELEVEN MONTHS not a particle of any kind of nourishment has passed her lips excepting a small quantity of water and apple sauce, administered to her by her husband; and he is of the opinion that even this did not remain in her stomach, as she seems to have an uncontrollable aversion to any kind of aliment whatever. During the period of her sickness she has shown no signs of intelligence or recognition of her friends, and all the natural functions of her body have ceased their operations. Mr. Cronkhite (our informant,) who conversed with the husband and gleaned these most astounding particulars, is of the opinion that she is now failing rapidly, and that but a short time will intervene before the sands of life will run out. In our opinion, it is the most remarkable case of endurace without food on record, and deserves more than a passing notice by the medical profession.—Glenn Falls Republican.

A war between England and France is predicted within sixty days. It is thought to be the settled policy of the Emperor. He is strengthening every arm of the service and has ordered a new conscription.

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited to contribute to the fund whethe hey are subscribers or not.

SPEAK NO ILL.

Nay, speak no ill—a kindly word
Can never leave a sting behind;
And O! to breathe each tale we've heard
Is far below a noble mind.

Full oft a better seed is sown,
By choosing thus the kinder plan;
For if but little good be known,
Still let us speak the best we can.

Give me the heart that fain would hide—
Would fain another's faults efface;
How can it pleasure human pride
To prove humanity but base?

No; let us reach a higher mood,
A nobler estimate of man;
Be earnest in the search for good,
And speak of all the best we can.

Then speak no ill—but lenient be
To other's failings as your own;
If you're the first a fault to see,
Be not the first to make it known.

For life is but a passing day,
No lip can tell how brief its span;
Then O! the little time we stay,
Let's speak of all the best we can!

Born of God.

No. II.

(Concluded.)

1. Notice, the will is the great power by which the word is taken and retained.

2. The will is the great leader in the whole condition of the moral man.

3. The will may be seduced from its position by temptation.

4. To sin, or present a life of sin, the will must be made to occupy another position.

5. Sin is an act which embraces—especially in the life which is sinful—the affections and passions; or the whole moral man.

The word being the security against sin; and the will being the power to retain or lose it—because it is the power of Christ—the question is, can the will remove its position, and sin not be committed, or a sinful condition secured?

I shall defend the affirmative. As soon as the affectional nature has been brought into action, which will soon follow the chain of the will—in the new position, sin will exist, and not till then. For the mind does not at first choose to commit sin. It chooses a position distinct from the word, and, upon the first powerful influence to transgress, yields, because it has no power to resist. The steps taken by the will, then, are preparatory, but not final and absolute. There might be retraction and a return to the safe position, if the reverse steps are taken in season, and while the agency to support us is not removed; for the Spirit will still support the word, and call us to maintain the duteous position.

To illustrate, before going further. The great Example when under temptation, as in every thing else—who kept the word of God in him, was the word of God—presented his will as an impassable barrier to the temptation to sin—and sinned not—his will being supported by the word of God, which he constantly used. When the will was attacked, He said it is written, "Thou shalt not live by bread alone." "All this will I give thee if thou WILT fall down and worship me." Ah! you "get behind me, satan!" "It is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." And finally, the devil seeing the power of the word of God to keep his will, and so keep him from sinning, in a bungling and garbled manner, quoted scripture. But Jesus, who knew the scriptures and the power of God, said, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

My proposition is, that the will may be influenced to take a position so far separate from the word, as to expose the individual to sin, or a sinful life, and still no act of sin be committed; because this requires the operation of the affections or passions, or both.

Now, it requires the act, or a life to present sin in the sense of the text; hence, whatever the wrong be of this dereliction on the part of the will, it does not place the man in the Devil's family.

We can all see that a man may choose to remove to another place, without having decided to commit the acts which characterize the people of that place; while, if he were to remain there, there would be a moral, perhaps, physical impossibility of remaining pure. He might return. He may stay and lose his former relations.

So I find men have done in respect to moral position. The first sinners did not sin till after they had chosen to depart from the word of God. Then the act which the word calls sin was, at once, accomplished. And I discover the same principle throughout the Scriptures. The experience of all christians confirms the position. Laws, human and divine, are constructed in direct reference to this position. As man did "lapse" before he sinned, and men have; so men will, if they are the children of God, "lapse" by departing from the word. Hence, in old theological phrase, I should be "supralapsaria." This is, therefore, the true idea. He sinneth not, and cannot sin, because the word of God prevents him. He cannot be a sinner and a righteous man at once. But he may forsake the word—allow it to pass from his mind—it will then have no force with him. He can sin, and will sin.

Gleanings.

BY M. D. W.

I have been gleaning some choice thoughts from Spurgeon in his work entitled "The Saint and his Savior." He says,—"Let the self-conceited Pharisee boast that he was born free—we see on our wrists the red marks of the iron; let him glory that he was never blind—our eyes can yet remember the darkness of Egypt, in which we discerned not the morning star. Others may desire the honor of a merited salvation—we know that our highest ambition can only hope for pardon and acceptance by grace alone, and well we remember the hour when the only channel of that grace was despised or neglected by us."

"I am a companion of all them that fear Thee."

"All hail, thou leader of the host! we boldly own that from the moment when we first loved thy person, all thy followers have been dear to us. There is not a lamb amongst thy flock we would disdain to feed; thy servants may be mocked with contempt, persecuted by cruelty, branded with infamy, oppressed by power, humbled by poverty, and forgotten by fame; but to us they are the 'excellent of the earth,' and we are not ashamed to call them brother."

"The cross can have but little power where pride conceals the necessity of a pardon; a sacrifice is little valued when we are unconscious of our need thereof. In our own opinion we were once most noble creatures; the Pharisee's oration would have sincerely enough emanated from us. A few little trifles there might be which were not quite correct, but in the main we thought ourselves 'rich and increased in goods,' and even when under the powerful voice of the law we were made to discern our poverty, we yet hoped by future obedience to reverse the sentence, and were utterly unwilling to accept a salvation which required a renunciation of all merit and simple trust in the crucified Redeemer. Never, until all the work of our hands had been unravelled, and our fingers themselves had become powerless, would we cease from our own labor, and leaving the spider's web of man's doings, array ourselves in the garment of her justification. No man will ever think much of Christ until he thinks little of himself. The lower our own views of ourselves become, the higher will our thoughts of Jesus be raised; and only when self-annihilation is complete will the Son of God be our 'all in all.'

Vain glory and self-esteem are fruitful parents of evil. Chrysostom calls self-love one of the devil's three great nets; and Bernard styles it an 'arrow which pierceth the soul through, and slays it; a sly, invisible enemy, not perceived.' But when self-confidence is removed—when the soul is stripped by conviction—when the light of the Spirit reveals the loathsome state of the heart—when the power of the creature fails, how precious is Jesus! As the drowning mariner clutches the floating spar; as the dying man looks to some great physician; as the criminal values his pardon, so do we esteem the deliverer of our souls as the Prince of the Kings of the earth. Self-loathing begets an ardent passion for the gracious 'lover of our souls,' but self-complacency hides his glories from us."

CHRIST.

"The person of Christ strikes eloquence dumb, when it would describe him; it palsies the artist's arm when with fair colors he would portray him; it would o'ermatch the sculptor to carve his image even were it possible to chisel it in a massive block of diamond. There is nought in nature comparable to him. Before his radiance the brilliancy of the sun is dimmed; yea, nothing can compete with him, and heaven itself blushes at its own plainness of countenance when his 'altogether lovely' person is beheld. Ah, ye who pass by him without regard, it is well said by Rutherford, 'Oh! if you but knew him, and saw his beauty, your love, your heart, your desires, would close with him, and cleave to him. Love, by nature, when it seeth, cannot but cast out its spirit and strength upon amiable objects and good things, and things love worthy; and what fairer thing is there than Christ?'

"Sad were those hours when the morning star shone not, when the cross had no charms, and the glorious Redeemer no esteem. Could tears obliterate them from the annals of the past, our eyes should empty their cisterns ere our cheeks should be dry—could prayers recall them, we would besiege the throne with incessant supplications. They are gone, alas! beyond the arm even of omnipotence to restore them; but we rejoice to see their iniquity blotted out, and their sin entirely covered."

How long was Christ's Ministry?

This question is more difficult to answer than is supposed. For the beginning of Christ's ministry much stress is laid on the words of Luke in the 3d chapter, 2d verse. "And Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age." This text by no means proves that he was thirty when he was baptized, even if our translation be correct, which is extremely doubtful. Luke gives us the history of John the Baptist, and the baptism of Christ, and then gives us the genealogy of Christ without reference to his baptism, as a critical examination of the text will show. Dr. Jarvis, in his introduction to the Church, says,—The author of a "Critical Examination of the Holy Gospel," &c., published in 1738, thinks that the original signifies the same as in chapter 2: 51, which reads thus; "And he went down with them and came to Nazareth and was subject unto them." Heglyn, and after him Campbell, adopted this suggestion, the one rendering the passage in question, "Jesus himself had lived in subjection about thirty years;" the other, "Now Jesus was himself about thirty years in subjection."

Why do the translators translate the word subject or governed in one place, and give us an entirely different meaning in another place? If the original is allowed to speak, the difficulty is at once removed. As for the length of Christ's ministry the time assigned to it varies from one year to twenty. Dr. Jarvis says, "It seems to have been the opinion of Irenæus that after our Lord's baptism, to which he came when he was thirty years old, he must have passed a number of years in retirement, for he adds, that he came to Jerusalem when he had obtained the perfect age of a master. This perfect age Irenæus supposes to be between the fortieth and fiftieth year of a man's life; for thirty years is the first age of the youthful constitution, and it extends, as every one will admit, to the fortieth year; but from the fortieth and fiftieth year it declines into the age of seniority.' Then, on the authority of certain presbyters, who said they had it from St. John, and others who said they had learned the same thing from the other Apostles, and also from the expression of the Jews, 'Thou art not yet fifty years old, and hast thou seen Abraham?' Irenæus concludes, that our Lord, when he taught, had passed his fortieth and had not attained his fiftieth year. 'To him who was but thirty they would have said, Thou art not yet forty years old.' 'For it is altogether unreasonable to suppose that they would falsely have added twenty years, in their wish to make him younger than the times of Abraham.' Hence Iranæus concludes that he was not much short of fifty, and consequently that he neither preached one year only, nor suffered in the twelfth month of that year. 'For the time from thirty to fifty years (he sarcastically adds) would never be reckoned as one year, unless among the Æons their great years are so counted.' From this last expression one might infer, that Irenæus supposed our Lord's ministry to have continued for nearly twenty years."

According to this testimony, if Christ was born four years before our common era, it must have been A. D. 36, before he began his ministry, three years beyond the set time of the crucifixion. Iranæus was associated with those that lived in the Apostles' day, and no doubt had the truth on this point.

Some have attempted to establish the length of Christ's ministry by the passovers that are recorded by the Evangelists, which do not exceed four; but it is evident all the passovers are not recorded, for John says, (chap. 21: 25,) "And there are also many other things which Jesus did, the which, if they should be written every one, I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written." The least we can make of John's expression is, that a very small portion indeed of Christ's ministry is left on record, and of course the passovers are only recorded in connection with the events recorded by the Apostles. We cannot fix the time of the crucifixion to a certainty by chronologists, as they differ twelve years in the space of two hundred, from the death of Tiberius Cæsar to the death of Maximini. Eutropius, in giving the reigns of Emperors, commences with Caius Cæsar Caligula, and ends with the two Maximini, which added up gives 199 years, 7 months and 21 days. Sextus Aurelius Victor gives 201 years, 9 months and 2 days. Cassidorus gives 201 years, 6 months and 28 days. The Chronicon Paschale gives 189 years and 8 months. Thus we see our best chronologists differ twelve years, as I have before stated.

It is useless to add more on this point, but we would say with a celebrated Historian and Chronologist, "We cannot but lament that the influence of great names has established it almost an axiom of modern times, that the date of our Savior's birth is a subject of mere conjecture."

There is one more line of argument which is used to establish the crucifixion; that is, the going forth of the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. Dan. 9: 25. Professor Fredet in his Ancient History says,—"The 20th year of Artaxerxes is commonly assigned as the beginning of the 70 weeks (of years) spoken of by the prophet Daniel which were to elapse till the death of Christ for the redemption of mankind."

Again, Whiston in a note (Josephus' Antiquities, book 11, chap. 5, sec. 8) says, It may not be improper to remark here, with what an unusual accuracy Josephus determines these years of Xerxes, in which the walls of Jerusalem were built, viz., that Nehemiah came with his commission in the 25th of Xerxes; that the walls were two years, four months in building; and that they were finished in the 28th of Xerxes." Sect. 7, 8. It may also be remarked further, that Josephus hardly ever mentions more than one infallible astronomical character. I mean an eclipse of the moon, and this a little before the death of Herod the Great. B. 17, chap. 6, sect. 4. Now on these two chronological characters in a great measure depend some of the most important points belonging to Christianity, viz., explication of Daniel's 70 weeks, and the duration of our Savior's ministry, and the time of his death, in correspondence to those 70 weeks. The 20th of Artaxerxes is commonly assigned for the commencement of the 70 weeks and is so placed in the margin of our Bibles. (Dan. 9: 25.) Whiston lays great stress on the correctness of these dates, to establish Christianity. The majority of chronologists place the 20th of Artaxerxes in the 4269 Julian Period, or 444 B. C. Add 490 years to 4269 and you have 4759 of the Julian Period, or A. D. 46 for the death of Christ. Yet we are told by these same writers that Christ was crucified A. D. 33, thirteen years prior to their ending. "If the blind lead the blind, they will both fall in the ditch." Consistency is a jewel. We are accused of having a sliding scale that will move back and forward to suit the fancy of every "Charlatan" or "ignorant pretender of history." Let the term quack be applied to whom it belongs.

Some historians begin the 70 weeks 440 B. C., which would end A. D. 50. Is it certain that 444 B. C. is the true date? May it not have commenced a year later? which would make the 69 weeks or 483 years end A. D. 41. Christ, the testator, was undoubtedly crucified at the end of the 69 weeks; for the covenant was to be "confirmed one week," and it could not be confirmed while the testator lived. "For," says Paul, "where a testament is there must also of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead, otherwise it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth." Heb. 9: 16, 17. Professor Whiting, lecturing on the "Canon of Ptolemy," in 1844, asserted that it was based on eclipses, which were God's time pieces, which could not lie.

Let some one who is learned sift the arguments that have been presented to show when Augustus Cæsar died, which are based on the same infallible time keeper, and let the chaff be blown away. For the want of a true knowledge of this subject many have cast away their confidence and have no faith in the exposition given of the 2300 days, and boldly assert that the 70 weeks are no part of that period. If the 70 weeks are not cut off from the 2300 years, let us know what they are cut off from.

I have presented some of the difficulties in ascertaining the length of time of Christ's ministry, and the inconsistency of the common belief that our Savior was crucified in A. D. 33, from their own dates, which they have given for a starting point for the 70 weeks; which, when extended to the true time of their ending, completely harmonizes with the testimony of Irenæus, who obtained his knowledge from the most reliable source.

No. III.

TO UNCLE FRED;—Not so fast, not so fast, Uncle Fred! I suppose you think that you have fairly caught me with hook and line, but I think that I can swim clear yet. You seize upon my last citation, and exultingly ask, "How can Christ gather out of his kingdom them which do iniquity, if he has no kingdom until after he comes the second time?"

True, all very true; but come now, take your Bible, and let us talk a little. When does Christ purge his kingdom from evil workers?

"Why in the end of the world, to be sure."

Very well; now turn to Rev. 11: 15. How does it read?

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."

When do the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord?

"Why when the seventh angel sounds of course."

How many angels were to sound?"

"Seven."

No more?

"No, no more."

Then the seventh angel is the last one?

"Yes, the last."

Now turn to 1 Cor. 15: 52, and read. "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed."

When are the dead raised?"

"At the last trump."

Then it it the seventh, is it not?

"Yes, it must be."

Then at the seventh and last trump, the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord, and the righteous dead are raised, and the righteous living changed, are they not?

"Yes."

Well, the kingdoms of this world did not become Christ's until then, did they?

"No, I suppose not."

Then, after they become his, he has a right to destroy out of them all workers of iniquity, has he not?

"Yes, certainly."

Please turn again to Rev. 11, and read the 18th verse.

"And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to all that fear thy name, both small and great, and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth."

That will do. Now mark a few points, and see the perfect harmony of the passages under consideration, and one or two others I will name. The events brought to view under the sounding of the "seventh," or "last trump." The kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of Christ, and he shall—not has—reign forever and ever. "The nations were angry," not christianized then. "Thy wrath is come," not salvation. "And the time of the dead that they should be judged." The resurrection brought to view, harmonizing with 1 Cor. 15: 52. The judgment also, harmonizing with 2 Tim. 4: 1. "I charge thee before God, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing AND KINGDOM." "Give reward to thy servants the prophets, and to all that fear thy name;" harmonizing with Rev. 22: 12. "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me," &c. What is the reward? Matt. 25: 54. "Come ye blessed, inherit the kingdom." "Destroy them which destroy, or corrupt the earth." Harmonizing with Matt. 13: 41–42. "The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire." "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

Have I not now answered your question, and proved conclusively that Christ has no kingdom on earth, until the sounding of the seventh and last trump, and thereby strengthened my position? I am glad that you asked the question, as it draws forth more light.

I was intending to give you the testimony of the apostles respecting the kingdom, but have space for but a small portion on this sheet. I have already referred you to Paul's language to Timothy, connecting the judgment with the establishment of the kingdom, and you will find upon examination, that the coming of Jesus Christ, the judgment, and the kingdom, are in various texts connected together, and there is no scripture that teaches the reign of Christ until prior to the former.

Paul exhorted the disciples at Lystra and

Iconium, that it was through much tribulation that they would enter the kingdom of God. They had not, then, already become participators thereof.

Again, this same apostle affirms "that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," thereby plainly teaching that it pertains not to this mortal state. In his second epistle to the Thessalonians, Paul refers to their patience and faith in all their persecutions and tribulations as affording "a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God," that they might "be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which" he says, "ye also suffer."

James, in his epistle to the "twelve tribes," uses this emphatic language. "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" An heir is not a possessor, but one who holds a title to an inheritance yet in reserve. The saints are promised a crown when the chief Shepherd shall appear. "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him." When Christ takes to himself his great power, and reigns; then those who are heirs with him reign also

I was to show in the fourth place, from chronology, that the kingdom of Christ is yet future. This I will reserve for my next letter, and in the mean time ask any questions, or offer any objections you please, and I will notice them as best I can.

Yours, as ever,

KATE.

From Bro. B. Newton.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in the Lord:—Your communications and exhortations which appear in the Crisis from week to week, do me good. I am glad there are some who mean to keep their garments white. Such will not be ashamed before Him at his coming. I pray God that every soul that loves Jesus may overcome all things and endure unto the end.

I think it our privilege to be jealous over each other with godly jealousy, lest by some means we should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ; even as the serpent beguiled Eve, through his subtlety.

"Speak often to each other,
To cheer the fainting mind;
And often be our voices
In pure devotion joined."

My heart responds to Bro. Campbell's suggestion to pray for the poor saints, that they may be satisfied in time of famine. I believe they will be, if they put their trust in the living God, whose are the cattle on a thousand hills. He has promised and will perform. I believe the time of trouble foretold in the 12th chap. of Daniel has commenced, and I feel deeply the importance of watching and praying, lest coming suddenly my Lord should find me unprepared. "Lord, increase my faith," is my daily prayer. I think we shall need Elijah's faith, in order that we may be delivered out of the time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation. A faith which works by love, purifies the heart, and overcomes the world. I want a heart filled with purity, with holiness, and with perfect love that casts out all fear. My heart pants after God. the living God. When shall I come and appear before him? O glory to God, I believe the time is near even at the door. Soon I hope to see the blood-washed throng coming up from their dusty beds, clothed with immortal glory and beauty, such as mortals never saw. They will be all pure and honest hearted. There will be no deceit nor guile found in their mouth. They will follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth.

I feel desirous, while time lingers, of doing some good to my fellow-men. Dear brethren and sisters, are we doing all we can for the salvation of our children?—Great is the responsibility resting upon us. Great is our accountability to God for the manner in which we train them. One of the apostles exhorts us to train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. And the wise man has said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Let us believe and obey. Let us not be discouraged at their waywardness and unbelief. Let us follow them with our prayers, our tears, and our reproof; and continually carry them in the arms of our faith to a sin-pardoning and sin-forgiving God; and in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Glory to God!

Yours in hope, believing we are now witnessing the distress of nations with perplexity which Christ forewarned us should precede his coming.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 19, 1858.

The Revival.

The religious interest still continues, and is reaching some of the most hardened cases of humanity. Let none be discouraged in their efforts, but be kind and persevering, and the result may meet your most sanguine expectations. The manifestation of God's Holy Spirit is seen in a wonderful manner, in uniting christians of all denominations in the great work of bringing sinners to Christ. As they ceased their opposition to each other, they have become warmer friends to those who are out of the ark of safety. While they have labored in harmony to save others, the Lord has blessed them still more with his sweet peace and love, and thus the work goes on. Doors are still opening to hear the great truths we love so well, and which have called us out from the world, and when they are received and believed, new energy and joy are imparted to the christian pilgrim. Let us hold up the light in the meekness and gentleness of Christ. How much effort intended for good, has produced but little salutary effect, because it was not accompanied by a spirit of kindness. The christian religion can be advanced in no other way, than by the principle of love. All harshness, reproach or unkindness in any form, is only calculated to drive people away from Christ. "A soft tongue breaketh the bow." "Speak gently to the erring," if you would win them from the paths of vice and folly, into the way of holiness.

Hard Times.

We hear but one statement relative to business matters, i. e. "very dull." People have been fondly hoping for better times, but they are apparently receding instead of approaching. The bright future for this world is no where in sight of the anxious expectant. It seems as if the Lord was trying to wean the hearts of the people from this vain world, and get them to look at the glories of the one to come. Like Lot's wife, many look back with anxious desire after the filthy lucre and vanities of this world. O when will people be persuaded that an eternal life is of more consequence than one of threescore years and ten; and an "eternal weight of glory" of more value than the few baubles of honor that continue but for a day? It is strange that people cling so fast to that which is working their eternal destruction.

In speaking of business matters, the Boston Traveller says:

"We are gratified to be able to announce that at the last accounts from Calcutta, not a single ship was leading for Boston, nor for any port in the United States! Some five or six ships are now on the way to this port, and will arrive within three months, but none are now looked for. We trust to be able to announce that there are none on the way soon. Our stock of goods here are amply sufficient for the trade for many months to come, even with good business, and we hope that for six months at least our merchants will stop all importations of India goods.

As a general thing there is no life to trade in this city, in large operations. In shipping matters, nothing can be more unfavorable than the present aspect. Vessels, as a general thing, are not paying their way. This year we see a great falling off in the shipping at this port, not much more than one-half of last year. For several months to come, the decline will be more marked, as the India and New Orleans ships have now nearly all arrived."

Question.

"Can a person be saved without being baptized?" EDWIN MILLER.

We would answer this question by asking another,—will the thief be saved, to whom the Savior said, "thou shalt be with me in Paradise?" It is very evident he was not baptized. As a general thing, we have not attached sufficient importance to the ordinance of Baptism, but to say no one will be saved who has not received this rite, is more than we feel at liberty to declare. We have no doubt but that many will be lost for refusing to obey the command relative to baptism. Our readers are aware that, as a people, we believe that immersion is the only mode of baptism; but we do not believe every Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Congregationalist, and Methodist, who have not been "buried with Christ in baptism," will be lost. At the same time, we can find no proof that sprinkling is baptism, neither do we think they have obeyed the command which enjoins this ordinance, till they have been wholly immersed in water. Luther, Wesley, Whitefield, Fletcher, and many more devoted christians might be named, who have been shining lights in the church of Christ, and yet were never baptized. Had they seen the truth on this subject as clearly as it appears to us, and then refused to obey, certain condemnation would have followed. We are acquainted with those who have been sprinkled, supposing it was baptism, who have since seen the light, but refuse to walk in it, who are groping their way in darkness, numbered with unfeeling backsliders. We see no hope for such. In such a case, baptism would be essential to salvation.

Take another view of the subject. A southern slave is converted, who cannot read a word. The minister tells him he must be baptized. The sincere man says, "what do you mean by baptism?" He is informed that it signifies that water should be sprinkled on his head, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. The young soldier of the cross readily submits to any thing that he thinks Jesus requires. He would be just as ready to be baptized as to be sprinkled. Can we for one moment suppose that on this account the Lord will reject him, and shut him out of the kingdom? Such an idea is preposterous. The Lord is not unreasonable and unmerciful.

I was sprinkled a short time after my conversion, by Eld. Washburn, a very good man, and went on my way rejoicing for some time, enjoying a clear witness that I was the Lord's child, supposing I had obeyed the command to be baptized; but when the light came, I saw my mistake, was baptized, and received additional joy and peace. My motive in both instances was the same; i. e., to obey the Lord. Had I refused to be baptized when I saw that sprinkling was only a popish ceremony, I should have been in darkness and condemnation to this day, and been justly rejected at last, for disobedience. No one can be free in Christ unless he lives up to all the light he sees, and is continually actuated by the motive of doing all to the glory of God. We have recently baptized some who were sprinkled years since, and were satisfied with that substitute for baptism, till within a short period. They have been known as living christians, but now enjoy a brighter evidence, and greater peace and joy.

There are some who anathematize all who have not been baptized, and yet will themselves pay little, or no regard to the commandments,—"Speak evil of no man;" indulge not in "foolish talking nor jesting;" "be not conformed to this world:" "recompense to no man evil for evil;" "husbands love your wives;" "fathers provoke not your children to wrath;" "judge not;" "tell him his fault between thee and him alone," and many more equally important requirements. Let us be consistent, and try to please the Lord in all things. It is too late to be half-hearted in the service of the Lord, and high time to make an entire consecration—to sanctify ourselves wholly, if we would be safe from the coming storm. If any who read our paper have not been baptized, we hope they will embrace the earliest opportunity, and enjoy the attendant blessing. "To obey is better than sacrifice."

Jesting.

The Bible instructs us to avoid "foolish talking" and "jesting." "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." "If any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." Hear Jesus. "I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment: for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

My brother in Christ, do you practice joking? What! when the Bible says, "let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints?" and still profess to be a Bible christian? Have you not wondered why you did not grow faster in divine life? It is no marvel, if you are in the habit of jesting. Did our Savior indulge in this foolish habit? No one would dare charge such a practice upon him. But we are taught "to walk even as he walked." Again we read, "as he is, so are we in this world." Was he a wag? Shall we go to him to learn the art of joking? Is he pleased when he hears it from the lips of his professed children? Would the world learn the ways of Jesus from our example? Are we imitating Christ, or the world? Do we realize that when we talk, the Lord is a listener? Should you happen to be in the company of Jesus, would you attempt to joke with him? When professed christians begin to joke, it is sure evidence they have begun to backslide. We felt no disposition to indulge in this foolish practice the day after our conversion; indeed we were shocked when we heard the first joke come from the lips of a professed follower of Christ. The Holy Spirit of God gave us no inclination for jesting, but we desired to be "holy in all manner of conversation." "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him." Did you receive him joking? Nay, verily.

If we have indulged in this forbidden habit, it is high time to stop, if we wish to please our dear Savior. Let us remember that by our words we shall be justified or condemned. Put a bridle on the tongue at once. Let not another idle word escape. The judgment is at hand!

The Voice of the Church.

[From the Advent Herald, May 5, 1855.]

"This book of 400 pages contains in a comparatively small space a large amount of valuable historical evidence respecting the opinions of distinguished names in the church on the interesting subjects of the Millennium and Kingdom. We can speak with confidence of its merits. There may be some things in it which we might criticise, but we pass them over, in view of the need there was for a work of this kind, and of the valuable acquisition it is to this department of literature."

Debt and Grace;

OR, THE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.

BY C. F. HUDSON.

In spite of all the superficiality of this age and the shallow-deep publications that leap by thousands from the press; this one volume affords refreshing evidence that the race of thinkers is not enirely extinct, and that there are still men living who are competent to institute and accomplish the most varied and extended researches after that antiquated yet valuable element called Truth.

The doctrine of a future life is one, the importance of which is duly indicated by its prominence in all the speculations of mankind from the beginning down to the present day, and by the fact that the object of our Savior's mission to this world was that men "might have life, and have it more abundantly." But though Christ has "brought life and immortality to light in the gospel," yet thousands of the professed believers in Christ are not yet extricated from the meshes of a false philosophy, and consequently derive their doctrine of a future life more from Socrates than from Jesus—more from Plato than from Paul.

Hence their faith ignores or depreciates the great fact of a resurrection from the dead as the basis of all proper permanent and perfected future existence; and of a life which is "hid with Christ in God," so that "when Christ who is our life shall appear we also shall appear with him in glory."

The object of Mr. Hudson's volume is to represent the varied doctrines of a future life, and search out from the superincumbent rubbish of many generations the great and primary elements of simple truth, holy justice, and everlasting mercy which are presented in the word of God, and which receive the assent of the enlightened understanding.

To do this he has chased Truth through a period of some twenty centuries,—ever meeting with error in its protean forms and subtle guises, and striving constantly to exhibit the consistency of Truth and the fallacy of error in all its multiform aspects.

His doctrine is that the only way in which fallen and mortal man can escape the malady that sin has induced, is by turning to him who is "The Life," and that life "more abundantly" can only be attained by faith through Jesus Christ;—that eternal life is neither the natural possession nor the necessary heritage of man, but it is the gift of God. Those who refuse the law of the giver cut themselves off from the gift, and having misimproved a short life, are counted unworthy of an eternal existence. God is under no kind of obligation to preserve forever men who fail to answer the end of their creation, but whose only return for his upholding power would be a torment of unceasing blasphemy—a never-ebbing tide of sin and guilt.

The wages of sin, therefore, is death. Not a mere temporary dissolution of the body, not a mere process of torture, either corrective or exemplary, but a blotting out forever in the untold agonies of the second death in the lake of fire and brimstone, of the being who deliberately and persistently cleaves to iniquity—turns from righteousness and refuses to obey the Ruler of the universe.

Whoever wishes to see how much can be said upon this subject, will do well to devote his attention to the study of the principles evolved in this volume. He will find here the history, in brief, of all the various theories upon this subject, sketched with acknowledged impartiality, and he will have a broader view of the whole question than most men are accustomed to entertain.

We trust it will have a wide circulation among ministers and people. Let all obtain it and read it with care. There are doubtless ideas in the volume with which many may not agree, but all who are competent to judge will agree that the work is the powerful production of a well trained mind, presenting the results of an amount of research concerning this doctrine we believe entirely unparalleled in the history of its discussion.

For the Criss.

"The Devil" Mistaken.

It has become the fashion, seemingly at least, for a class of adventurous expositors to seek honor or something within the gift of poor mortals, by denying or evasively explaining away the Bible doctrine of "the Devil."

The Bible embraces the Devil as really as "the Messiah"—let who dare deny or ignore the fact.

The class or classes referred to will indeed allow of something obscure, something political, or something evil in person or principle, that has been "called"—but mis-called—"the Devil." It may, says one, be considered Rome. But it may not be Rome, says another, for Russia may attain that sad pre-eminence.

Again, it is neither Rome nor Russia, but only "the adversary" that may happen to fill the imagination of the "great I" who feels himself able to argue out and off the word of God! There is a bold face put on, and all "the word" that lies in their way can be argued against, and thus "warned off!" Finally,—

"THE DEVIL" is the humble, honest-hearted believer, who happens to look into a glass! The bold expounder says, "If you want to see the Devil, just look into the glass and you'll see as big a devil as you ever will see."

THE WORD or wisdom of the Lord, once renounced even in part, the expositor of whatever class is "given up—to dishonor" his own intelligence. Rom. 1: 21–26.

Let us note the proof of this.

I. "THE DEVIL was a murderer and a liar from the beginning. He abode not in the truth. When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own, for he is a liar and the father of it." John 8: 44. "Thus saith the Holy Ghost." Now is this Bible record fulfilled in poor me (or you) when I "look into the glass?" Can it be that every man who looks into the glass is any how a "murderer and a liar?" Nay, would not this test of demonism make the erring author of this monstrous dogma, on using his mirror, himself the Devil?

Could Rome, the fourth and last in the series of earthly kingdoms, (Dan. 1 and 7,) have been the liar from the beginning?

Could Russia, a modern power, (whose supposed supremacy is still in the future, and not in the fourfold series of Zech. 1: 18,) have been the murderer—from the beginning!

Did Russia, Rome, or the man looking in the glass tempt Jesus? No, no; all such views are gross delusions.

II. "He that committeth sin is of the Devil; for the Devil sinneth from the beginning. 1 John 3. Thus we see that even a little light suffices to show that the Devil never was, nor can be, so confounded with modern political organizations,—much less the vapering mortal who tells his believing brother to find "the Devil in his looking-glass."

THE TEMPTER of Jesus, over eighteen hundred years ago, was the liar to Adam six thousand years ago—"from the beginning."

THE FIRST lie was told by him—"the father of lies,"—to seduce man to sin and so to murder him. Hence, as the father is older than his offspring, the Devil is older than his "lie," and must have been before and distinct from Adam.

"THE ENEMY that sowed them (the tares) is the Devil." His seductive and successful "lie," occasioned the curse on woman, and this curse was the origin of the evil progeny; and that did organize Rome! It rules over Rome and Russia, too! Nay, this curse caused the "fair daughters of men," and sons of men, who specially admire to "look into the glass!" "The wicked one" is not "his children."

SUCH TEACHING is simply ridiculous. It ignores all history, all logic, and the word of God! Those who follow these pernicious ways can have no faith in the matters embraced, save that which stands in "the wisdom of th is world—that is foolishness with God."

III. "The world, the flesh, and the Devil" cannot be construed into "the world, the flesh," and a figure of speech! Nor into "world, flesh," and Rome or Russia! No, indeed. The flesh fills and rules Rome. Russia, Rome, and their subordinates so far constitute "the world— which "lieth in the wicked one." The absurdity that confounds this evil trio, makes the world to lie only in itself! Nay, it annuls all proper distinction between carnal men—the "children of the wicked one,"—and their "father the Devil!" Such folly should stand rebuked. Amen.

For the Crisis.

"Take Heed How Ye Hear."

LUKE 8: 18.

Jesus Christ teaches us that there are four classes of hearers of the Gospel of salvation; one only of which will be saved. This is a solemn truth, demanding our faithful and impartial consideration.

In the parable of the sower, (Matt. 13,) the seed sown by the way-side represents those whose carnal disposition prevents a spiritual understanding of the word, and willingly yield to the temptations of Satan to postpone a decided attention to their eternal interests, or to pervert the truth to their everlasting destruction. The second class are in some degree convicted of their sinfulness, and "receive the word with joy," but have no root of holiness in their hearts. All their sorrow and subsequent joy is purely selfish. He who searcheth the heart, sees no regard there for his glory. Neither the hour of temptation nor of final judgment will they endure.

The third class are also convinced of the truth of the Gospel, and of the reasonable claims of their Creator and Benefactor to their supreme affection and service; they may make a public profession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; attend to all the forms of godliness, while the love of the present world predominates, reigning with soul-destroying influence and power in their hearts. Thus "the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word and it becometh unfruitful." It produces no true holiness. All their religion is a mockery in the view of Him who saith, "My son, give me thine heart."

The fourth class, who are blessed forever, are those who "hear the word and understand it." By "the renewing of the Holy Spirit" they receive the saving truth into good and honest hearts. Titus 3: 6; Luke 8: 15. By the grace of God, then, faith overcomes a carnal world, and they bring forth the fruits of godly sorrow for sin, looking for acceptance with God only "in the Beloved;" finding their highest delight in sincere obedience to all the known commandments of the Lord, both in respect to their Father in heaven and their fellow men on earth." These holy fruits they bring forth habitually "with patience," (Luke 8: 15) amid all those temptations which infinite wisdom and love appoint as needful for their final and eternal salvation. By their faithful stewardship, in benevolence to their suffering brethren, and humble imitation of their divine Master who "went about doing good," they prove their vital union to the true Vine and consequent qualification to be soon transplanted into the Paradise of God. Their "fruit (is) unto holiness and their end (is) everlasting life."

To which of these classes does the

Iconium, that it was through much tribulation that they would enter the kingdom of God. They had not, then, already become participators thereof.

Again, this same apostle affirms "that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," thereby plainly teaching that it pertains not to this mortal state. In his second epistle to the Thessalonians, Paul refers to their patience and faith in all their persecutions and tribulations as affording "a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God," that they might "be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which" he says, "ye also suffer."

James, in his epistle to the "twelve tribes," uses this emphatic language. "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" An heir is not a possessor, but one who holds a title to an inheritance yet in reserve. The saints are promised a crown when the chief Shepherd shall appear. "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him." When Christ takes to himself his great power, and reigns; then those who are heirs with him reign also.

I was to show in the fourth place, from chronology, that the kingdom of Christ is yet future. This I will reserve for my next letter, and in the mean time ask any questions, or offer any objections you please, and I will notice them as best I can.

Yours, as ever,

KATE.

From Bro. B. Newton.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in the Lord: —Your communications and exhortations which appear in the Crisis from week to week, do me good. I am glad there are some who mean to keep their garments white. Such will not be ashamed before Him at his coming. I pray God that every soul that loves Jesus may overcome all things and endure unto the end.

I think it our privilege to be jealous over each other with godly jealousy, lest by some means we should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ; even as the serpent beguiled Eve, through his subtlety.

"Speak often to each other,
To cheer the fainting mind;
And often be our voices
In pure devotion joined."

My heart responds to Bro. Campbell's suggestion to pray for the poor saints, that they may be satisfied in time of famine. I believe they will be, if they put their trust in the living God, whose are the cattle on a thousand hills. He has promised and will perform. I believe the time of trouble foretold in the 12th chap. of Daniel has commenced, and I feel deeply the importance of watching and praying, lest coming suddenly my Lord should find me unprepared. "Lord, increase my faith," is my daily prayer. I think we shall need Elijah's faith, in order that we may be delivered out of the time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation. A faith which works by love, purifies the heart, and overcomes the world. I want a heart filled with purity, with holiness, and with perfect love that casts out all fear. My heart pants after God, the living God. When shall I come and appear before him? O glory to God, I believe the time is near even at the door. Soon I hope to see the blood-washed throng coming up from their dusty beds, clothed with immortal glory and beauty, such as mortals never saw. They will be all pure and honest hearted. There will be no deceit nor guile found in their mouth. They will follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth.

I feel desirous, while time lingers, of doing some good to my fellow-men. Dear brethren and sisters, are we doing all we can for the salvation of our children?—Great is the responsibility resting upon us. Great is our accountability to God for the manner in which we train them. One of the apostles exhorts us to train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. And the wise man has said, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." Let us believe and obey. Let us not be discouraged at their waywardness and unbelief. Let us follow them with our prayers, our tears, and our reproof; and continually carry them in the arms of our faith to a sin-pardoning and sin-forgiving God; and in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Glory to God!

Yours in hope, believing we are now witnessing the distress of nations with perplexity which Christ forewarned us should precede his coming.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 19, 1858.

The Revival.

The religious interest still continues, and is reaching some of the most hardened cases of humanity. Let none be discouraged in their efforts, but be kind and persevering, and the result may meet your most sanguine expectations. The manifestation of God's Holy Spirit is seen in a wonderful manner, in uniting christians of all denominations in the great work of bringing sinners to Christ. As they ceased their opposition to each other, they have become warmer friends to those who are out of the ark of safety. While they have labored in harmony to save others, the Lord has blessed them still more with his sweet peace and love, and thus the work goes on. Doors are still opening to hear the great truths we love so well, and which have called us out from the world, and when they are received and believed, new energy and joy are imparted to the christian pilgrim. Let us hold up the light in the meekness and gentleness of Christ. How much effort intended for good, has produced but little salutary effect, because it was not accompanied by a spirit of kindness. The christian religion can be advanced in no other way, than by the principle of love. All harshness, reproach or unkindness in any form, is only calculated to drive people away from Christ. "A soft tongue breaketh the bow." "Speak gently to the erring," if you would win them from the paths of vice and folly, into the way of holiness.

Hard Times.

We hear but one statement relative to business matters, i. e. "very dull." People have been fondly hoping for better times, but they are apparently receding instead of approaching. The bright future for this world is no where in sight of the anxious expectant. It seems as if the Lord was trying to wean the hearts of the people from this vain world, and get them to look at the glories of the one to come. Like Lot's wife, many look back with anxious desire after the filthy lucre and vanities of this world. O when will people be persuaded that an eternal life is of more consequence than one of threescore years and ten; and an "eternal weight of glory" of more value than the few baubles of honor that continue but for a day? It is strange that people cling so fast to that which is working their eternal destruction.

In speaking of business matters, the Boston Traveller says:

"We are gratified to be able to announce that at the last accounts from Calcutta, not a single ship was leading for Boston, nor for any port in the United States! Some five or six ships are now on the way to this port, and will arrive within three months, but none are now looked for. We trust to be able to announce that there are none on the way soon. Our stock of goods here are amply sufficient for the trade for many months to come, even with good business, and we hope that for six mouths at least our merchants will stop all importations of India goods.

As a general thing there is no life to trade in this city, in large operations. In shipping matters, nothing can be more unfavorable than the present aspect. Vessels, as a general thing, are not paying their way. This year we see a great falling off in the shipping at this port, not much more than one-half of last year. For several months to come, the decline will be more marked, as the India and New Orleans ships have now nearly all arrived."

Question.

"Can a person be saved without being baptized?" EDWIN MILLER.

We would answer this question by asking another,—will the thief be saved, to whom the Savior said, "thou shalt be with me in Paradise?" It is very evident he was not baptized. As a general thing, we have not attached sufficient importance to the ordinance of Baptism, but to say no one will be saved who has not received this rite, is more than we feel at liberty to declare. We have no doubt but that many will be lost for refusing to obey the command relative to baptism. Our readers are aware that, as a people, we believe that immersion is the only mode of baptism; but we do not believe every Presbyterian, Episcopalian, Congregationalist, and Methodist, who have not been "buried with Christ in baptism," will be lost. At the same time, we can find no proof that sprinkling is baptism, neither do we think they have obeyed the command which enjoins this ordinance, till they have been wholly immersed in water. Luther, Wesley, Whitefield, Fletcher, and many more devoted christians might be named, who have been shining lights in the church of Christ, and yet were never baptized. Had they seen the truth on this subject as clearly as it appears to us, and then refused to obey, certain condemnation would have followed. We are acquainted with those who have been sprinkled, supposing it was baptism, who have since seen the light, but refuse to walk in it, who are groping their way in darkness, numbered with unfeeling backsliders. We see no hope for such. In such a case, baptism would be essential to salvation.

Take another view of the subject. A southern slave is converted, who cannot read a word. The minister tells him he must be baptized. The sincere man says, "what do you mean by baptism?" He is informed that it signifies that water should be sprinkled on his head, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. The young soldier of the cross readily submits to any thing that he thinks Jesus requires. He would be just as ready to be baptized as to be sprinkled. Can we for one moment suppose that on this account the Lord will reject him, and shut him out of the kingdom? Such an idea is preposterous. The Lord is not unreasonable and unmerciful.

I was sprinkled a short time after my conversion, by Eld. Washburn, a very good man, and went on my way rejoicing for some time, enjoying a clear witness that I was the Lord's child, supposing I had obeyed the command to be baptized; but when the light came, I saw my mistake, was baptized, and received additional joy and peace. My motive in both instances was the same; i. e., to obey the Lord. Had I refused to be baptized when I saw that sprinkling was only a popish ceremony, I should have been in darkness and condemnation to this day, and been justly rejected at last, for disobedience. No one can be free in Christ unless he lives up to all the light he sees, and is continually actuated by the motive of doing all to the glory of God. We have recently baptized some who were sprinkled years since, and were satisfied with that substitute for baptism, till within a short period. They have been known as living christians, but now enjoy a brighter evidence, and greater peace and joy.

There are some who anathematize all who have not been baptized, and yet will themselves pay little, or no regard to the commandments,—"Speak evil of no man;" indulge not in "foolish talking nor jesting;" "be not conformed to this world:" "recompense to no man evil for evil;" "husbands love your wives;" "fathers provoke not your children to wrath;" "judge not;" "tell him his fault between thee and him alone," and many more equally important requirements. Let us be consistent, and try to please the Lord in all things. It is too late to be half-hearted in the service of the Lord, and high time to make an entire consecration—to sanctify ourselves wholly, if we would be safe from the coming storm. If any who read our paper have not been baptized, we hope they will embrace the earliest opportunity, and enjoy the attendant blessing. "To obey is better than sacrifice."

Jesting.

The Bible instructs us to avoid "foolish talking" and "jesting." "As he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation." "If any man offend not in word the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." Hear Jesus. "I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment: for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

My brother in Christ, do you practice joking? What! when the Bible says, "let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints?" and still profess to be a Bible christian? Have you not wondered why you did not grow faster in divine life? It is no marvel, if you are in the habit of jesting. Did our Savior indulge in this foolish habit? No one would dare charge such a practice upon him. But we are taught "to walk even as he walked." Again we read, "as he is, so are we in this world." Was he a wag? Shall we go to him to learn the art of joking? Is he pleased when he hears it from the lips of his professed children? Would the world learn the ways of Jesus from our example? Are we imitating Christ, or the world? Do we realize that when we talk, the Lord is a listener? Should you happen to be in the company of Jesus, would you attempt to joke with him?

When professed christians begin to joke, it is sure evidence they have begun to backslide. We felt no disposition to indulge in this foolish practice the day after our conversion; indeed we were shocked when we heard the first joke come from the lips of a professed follower of Christ. The Holy Spirit of God gave us no inclination for jesting, but we desired to be "holy in all manner of conversation." "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him." Did you receive him joking? Nay, verily.

If we have indulged in this forbidden habit, it is high time to stop, if we wish to please our dear Savior. Let us remember that by our words we shall be justified or condemned. Put a bridle on the tongue at once. Let not another idle word escape. The judgment is at hand!

"This book of 400 pages contains in a comparatively small space a large amount of valuable historical evidence respecting the opinions of distinguished names in the church on the interesting subjects of the Millennium and Kingdom. We can speak with confidence of its merits. There may be some things in it which we might criticise, but we pass them over, in view of the need there was for a work of this kind, and of the valuable acquisition it is to this department of literature."

Debt and Grace;

OR, THE DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.

BY C. F. HUDSON.

In spite of all the superficiality of this age and the shallow-deep publications that leap by thousands from the press; this one volume affords refreshing evidence that the race of thinkers is not enirely extinct, and that there are still men living who are competent to institute and accomplish the most varied and extended researches after that antiquated yet valuable element called Truth.

The doctrine of a future life is one, the importance of which is duly indicated by its prominence in all the speculations of mankind from the beginning down to the present day, and by the fact that the object of our Savior's mission to this world was that men "might have life, and have it more abundantly." But though Christ has "brought life and immortality to light in the gospel," yet thousands of the professed believers in Christ are not yet extricated from the meshes of a false philosophy, and consequently derive their doctrine of a future life more from Socrates than from Jesus—more from Plato than from Paul.

Hence their faith ignores or depreciates the great fact of a resurrection from the dead as the basis of all proper permanent and perfected future existence; and of a life which is "hid with Christ in God," so that "when Christ who is our life shall appear we also shall appear with him in glory."

The object of Mr. Hudson's volume is to represent the varied doctrines of a future life, and search out from the superincumbent rubbish of many generations the great and primary elements of simple truth, holy justice, and everlasting mercy which are presented in the word of God, and which receive the assent of the enlightened understanding.

To do this he has chased Truth through a period of some twenty centuries,—ever meeting with error in its protean forms and subtle guises, and striving constantly to exhibit the consistency of Truth and the fallacy of error in all its multiform aspects.

His doctrine is that the only way in which fallen and mortal man can escape the malady that sin has induced, is by turning to him who is "The Life," and that life "more abundantly" can only be attained by faith through Jesus Christ;—that eternal life is neither the natural possession nor the necessary heritage of man, but it is the gift of God. Those who refuse the law of the giver cut themselves off from the gift, and having misimproved a short life, are counted unworthy of an eternal existence. God is under no kind of obligation to preserve forever men who fail to answer the end of their creation, but whose only return for his upholding power would be a torment of unceasing blasphemy—a never-ebbing tide of sin and guilt.

The wages of sin, therefore, is death. Not a mere temporary dissolution of the body, not a mere process of torture, either corrective or exemplary, but a blotting out forever in the untold agonies of the second death in the lake of fire and brimstone, of the being who deliberately and persistently cleaves to iniquity—turns from righteousness and refuses to obey the Ruler of the universe.

Whoever wishes to see how much can be said upon this subject, will do well to devote his attention to the study of the principles evolved in this volume. He will find here the history, in brief, of all the various theories upon this subject, sketched with acknowledged impartiality, and he will have a broader view of the whole question than most men are accustomed to entertain.

We trust it will have a wide circulation among ministers and people. Let all obtain it and read it with care. There are doubtless ideas in the volume with which many may not agree, but all who are competent to judge will agree that the work is the powerful production of a well trained mind, presenting the results of an amount of research concerning this doctrine we believe entirely unparalleled in the history of its discussion.

For the Criss.

"The Devil" Mistaken.

It has become the fashion, seemingly at least, for a class of adventurous expositors to seek honor or something within the gift of poor mortals, by denying or evasively explaining away the Bible doctrine of "the Devil."

The Bible embraces the Devil as really as "the Messiah"—let who dare deny or ignore the fact.

The class or classes referred to will indeed allow of something obscure, something political, or something evil in person or principle, that has been "called"—but mis-called—"the Devil." It may, says one, be considered Rome. But it may not be Rome, says another, for Russia may attain that sad pre-eminence.

Again, it is neither Rome nor Russia, but only "the adversary" that may happen to fill the imagination of the "great I" who feels himself able to argue out and off the word of God! There is a bold face put on, and all "the word" that lies in their way can be argued against, and thus "warned off!" Finally,—

"THE DEVIL" is the humble, honest-hearted believer, who happens to look into a glass! The bold expounder says, "If you want to see the Devil, just look into the glass and you'll see as big a devil as you ever will see."

THE WORD or wisdom of the Lord, once renounced even in part, the expositor of whatever class is "given up—to dishonor" his own intelligence. Rom. 1: 21–26.

Let us note the proof of this.

I. "THE DEVIL was a murderer and a liar from the beginning. He abode not in the truth. When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own, for he is a liar and the father of it." John 8: 44. "Thus saith the Holy Ghost." Now is this Bible record fulfilled in poor me (or you) when I "look into the glass?" Can it be that every man who looks into the glass is any how a "murderer and a liar?" Nay, would not this test of demonism make the erring author of this monstrous dogma, on using his mirror, himself the Devil?

Could Rome, the fourth and last in the series of earthly kingdoms, (Dan. 1 and 7,) have been the liar from the beginning?

Could Russia, a modern power, (whose supposed supremacy is still in the future, and not in the fourfold series of Zech. 1: 18,) have been the murderer—from the beginning!

Did Russia, Rome, or the man looking in the glass tempt Jesus? No, no; all such views are gross delusions.

II. "He that committeth sin is of the Devil; for the Devil sinneth from the beginning. 1 John 3. Thus we see that even a little light suffices to show that the Devil never was, nor can be, so confounded with modern political organizations,—much less the vaporing mortal who tells his believing brother to find "the Devil in his looking-glass."

THE TEMPTER of Jesus, over eighteen hundred years ago, was the liar to Adam six thousand years ago—"from the beginning."

THE FIRST lie was told by him—"the father of lies,"—to seduce man to sin and so to murder him. Hence, as the father is older than his offspring, the Devil is older than his "lie," and must have been before and distinct from Adam.

"THE ENEMY that sowed them (the tares) is the Devil." His seductive and successful "lie," occasioned the curse on woman, and this curse was the origin of the evil progeny; and that did organize Rome! It rules over Rome and Russia, too! Nay, this curse caused the "fair daughters of men," and sons of men, who specially admire to "look into the glass!" "The wicked one" is not "his children."

SUCH TEACHING is simply ridiculous. It ignores all history, all logic, and the word of God! Those who follow these pernicious ways can have no faith in the matters embraced, save that which stands in "the wisdom of th is world—that is foolishness with God."

III. "The world, the flesh, and the Devil" cannot be construed into "the world, the flesh," and a figure of speech! Nor into "world, flesh," and Rome or Russia! No, indeed. The flesh fills and rules Rome. Russia, Rome, and their subordinates so far constitute "the world— which "lieth in the wicked one." The absurdity that confounds this evil trio, makes the world to lie only in itself! Nay, it annuls all proper distinction between carnal men—the "children of the wicked one,"—and their "father the Devil!" Such folly should stand rebuked. Amen.

For the Crisis.

"Take Heed How Ye Hear."

LUKE 8: 18.

Jesus Christ teaches us that there are four classes of hearers of the Gospel of salvation; one only of which will be saved. This is a solemn truth, demanding our faithful and impartial consideration.

In the parable of the sower, (Matt. 13,) the seed sown by the way-side represents those whose carnal disposition prevents a spiritual understanding of the word, and willingly yield to the temptations of Satan to postpone a decided attention to their eternal interests, or to pervert the truth to their everlasting destruction. The second class are in some degree convicted of their sinfulness, and "receive the word with joy," but have no root of holiness in their hearts. All their sorrow and subsequent joy is purely selfish. He who searcheth the heart, sees no regard there for his glory. Neither the hour of temptation nor of final judgment will they endure.

The third class are also convinced of the truth of the Gospel, and of the reasonable claims of their Creator and Benefactor to their supreme affection and service; they may make a public profession of their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; attend to all the forms of godliness, while the love of the present world predominates, reigning with soul-destroying influence and power in their hearts. Thus "the cares of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word and it becometh unfruitful." It produces no true holiness. All their religion is a mockery in the view of Him who saith, "My son, give me thine heart."

The fourth class, who are blessed forever, are those who "hear the word and understand it." By "the renewing of the Holy Spirit" they receive the saving truth into good and honest hearts. Titus 3: 6; Luke 8: 15. By the grace of God, then, faith overcomes a carnal world, and they bring forth the fruits of godly sorrow for sin, looking for acceptance with God only "in the Beloved;" finding their highest delight in sincere obedience to all the known commandments of the Lord, both in respect to their Father in heaven and their fellow men on earth." These holy fruits they bring forth habitually "with patience," (Luke 8: 15) amid all those temptations which infinite wisdom and love appoint as needful for their final and eternal salvation. By their faithful stewardship, in benevolence to their suffering brethren, and humble imitation of their divine Master who "went about doing good," they prove their vital union to the true Vine and consequent qualification to be soon transplanted into the Paradise of God. Their "fruit (is) unto holiness and their end (is) everlasting life."

To which of these classes does the Searcher of hearts see that we belong? Adoring the blessed Giver of that precious Word which is able to make wise unto eternal salvation, let us so hear, believe, love and practice it, that when our dear Lord shall come "we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him."

HENRY GREW.

Philadelphia, May, 1858.

From Bro. T. S. Canfield.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to call special attention to the article of H. L. Hastings, of last week—"Shall the Work Stop?"

Dear reader, have you read the article referred to? If not, read and reflect, and duly estimate the labors of Bro. H., and then compare them with your feeble efforts to do good. Then ask yourselves if you have not the means of doing much greater service to the cause of truth than you have been doing. Do we realize that we are living out the last moments of time, when God by his Spirit is influencing multitudes to seek after the truth? And will not those who have the means embrace every opportunity to place the truth in the reach of those who are in want of it?

How many there are who might purchase one or more books, or as many tracts, to lend or distribute among their acquaintance, and by so doing get the truth before many minds that cannot be reached by preaching. For there are many that would read a book, who, through prejudice, would abstain from hearing the same truths preached. I have practiced in this way, to some extent, and find it productive of good.

I have also engaged in the sale and distribution of Bro. Hastings' works, hoping to serve the cause of Christ by so doing. And as the way may open, by the grace of God, offer words of comfort and encouragement to the little flock and induce sinners to come to Christ.

I wish to say to the brethren in Connecticut, who may wish to purchase books or tracts, it will afford me pleasure in paying prompt attention to your orders, either by mail or personal delivery, as the case may be.

Dear brethren, I ask your co-operation in the werk of the Lord, and the prayers of the faithful that I may not shrink from duty, but be sustained by the grace of God in complying with the convictions of duty.

Truly, we may say, the fields are all white for the harvest. And soon, very soon, may we expect to see the angels of the Lord sent forth to gather the elect.—And shall we be there to engage with that angelic throng in the praises of him who has redeemed us out of every nation, kindred and tongue? If so, let us remember that it must be said of us,—in as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. Amen. Praise the Lord.

T. S. CANFIELD.

South Farms, Conn.

From L. P. Hastings.

BRO. GRANT:—It is with satisfaction that I peruse the little sheet of which you have the oversight. But I would see more from those who used to furnish much for the comfort and edification of the children of God. We are removed from any of like faith and hope, and oh! how cheering to read the communications of those who are steadfast in the Lord, looking for and loving the appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. I do believe the Lord has been in this work. Yes, those who have held the faithful word through these years of trial and temptation, will yet find they have not hoped, believed and prayed in vain. I do believe there is a reward and their expectation shall not be cut off.—Whatever we may see in the world calculated to draw us away from our hope, and shake our confidence in the near approach of the soon coming Jesus, let us hold on to the "sure word of prophecy." We may expect to see much that will have a tendency to ensnare us, but let us beware of the many snares that may be set thick for our feet as we near our journey's end.

I do feel more of late like taking the whole armor, that I may be able to stand. To stand when the glory and majesty of the Lord of lords and King of kings shall be revealed, will require nothing less than "clean hands and a pure heart," and without these we are not prepared to live, either in this world or the world to come.

How often do I look around upon those who have much of this world's goods, and think how poor! Although they may have a sort of comfort and pleasure in those gratifications which are afforded by affluence, yet it is not a satisfying portion. When sickness and disease prostrate their bodies, or when friends are borne away by the hand of the fell Destroyer, or in some other way their earthly prospects are blighted; ah, then how dreary and comfortless does every thing appear! Then it is that there is felt a longing for something satisfying, enduring, abiding. Other hopes may cheer and animate for a time, but nothing short of the hope of eternal life will support and comfort in poverty, sickness, disappointment or death.

The hope of glory and the assurance that we have a Father in heaven, will enable us to endure trial with courage, knowing that our light affliction will but increase the glory in reserve for us.

Yours in hope of life,

Longing for the Conversion of Others.

It is recorded of the devoted John Welch, that he used to keep a plaid upon his bed that he might wrap himself in it when he rose during the night for prayer. Sometimes his wife found him on the ground weeping. When she complained, he would say, "O woman! I have the souls of three thousand to answer for, and I know not how it is with many of them." Possessed with such a sense of responsibility to God, and to the people of his charge, how can any true minister of the cross withhold himself from an earnest devotion to his work of arousing souls, and pointing them to Christ?—Select.

HOW TO CHOOSE A BARREL OF FLOUR.—It must pack into a ball and not fall in powder, when a portion is pressed together in the hands. When a portion is thrown against a smooth perpendicular surface, it must stick in a lump, or at least not scatter in a fine powder. When a little of it is wet and kneaded, it should work dry and elastic, not soft and sticky. It should be of pure white, without a bluish tint. No minute black specks should be found on a close examination. A slight yellow or straw color is not a bad "sign."

HOW TO CONSUME COAL.—No stove should ever contain, on a fair average, a greater layer than four inches of coal—less in a majority of cases will answer. A beautiful red heat is then generated, the cool parts with all its inflammable elements, and deposits its earthy matter in fine particles in the receiver. Try the experiment, and see the results.

CAUTION TO WINE AND BRANDY DRINKERS.—Dr. Hiram Cox, chemical inspector of alcoholic liquors in Cincinnati, Ohio, states, in an address to his fellow citizens, that during two years he has made two hundred and forty-nine inspections of various kinds of liquors and has found more than nine tenths of them poisonous concoctions. Of brandy he does not believe there is one gallon of pure in a hundred gallons, the imitations having corn whiskey for a basis, and various poisonous acids for the condiments. Of wines not a gallon in a thousand, purporting to be sherry port, sweet Malaga, &c., is pure, but they are made of water, sulphuric acid, alum, Guinea pepper, horse-radish, &c., and many of them without a single drop of alcoholic spirit. Dr. Cox warrants there are not ten gallons of genuine port wine in Cincinnati. In his inspections of whiskey he has found only from 17 to 20 per cent. of alcoholic spirit, when it should have been 45 to 50, and some of it contains sulphuric acid enough in a quart to eat a hole through a man's stomach.

MANY are not aware that sneezing is caused by a convulsion of the diaphragm, and if the air which is inhaled when you feel inclined to sneeze is suddenly breathed out the sneeze will be arrested.

BEDBUGS AND ROACHES.—Experiments have established the fact that the plant known to botanists as Polygonum punctatum, usually known as waterpepper or smartweed, which may be found in abundance along the ditches, roads, lanes, and barn-yards, is an effectual and certain destroyer of the bedbug. A strong decoction is made of the herb, and the places infested with the insect well washed with it. The plant may also, with much advantage, be stuffed in the cracks and corners of the room. Elderberry leaves, laid upon the shelves of a safe or cupboard, will also drive away ants and roaches.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Addison, Vt., on the 20th of March, 1858, Sister Olive Carpenter, wife of Gideon Carpenter, aged 74 years.

She obtained a hope of having a part in the first resurrurrection, and on the day she was thirteen years of age she exhibited her faith in the same by being baptised into Christ, thereby having put him on. She arose to walk in newness of life, and from the time she first believed to the hour of her death she maintained a Christian walk and godly conversation, such as convinced all beholders that she was walking with God. And being led by the Spirit, she had the abiding evidence that her ways pleased God, and she died as she had lived, in the triumphs of faith.

She embraced the doctrine of the second advent of the Messiah to this earth, under the preaching of Bro. Wm. Miller, in 1843, which proved a great comfort to her to the end of her days. She has left a large number of relatives to mourn her loss, and I pray God the church may ever be followers of her as she was of Christ.

Agreeably to her request, I preached the funeral sermon from the 14th and 15th verses of the 14th chapter of Job, to a large and attentive audience, and may God bless the word spoken to the lasting comfort of those that mourned on the occasion.

D. T. ROSS.

Fell asleep in Jesus at Alton, N. H., on the 28th of March, Sarah Bickford, wife of John Bickford, aged 58 years.

Her disease was consumption. The last two years, and especially the few months and weeks of her life, she was a great sufferer. She experienced religion some more than twenty years since and united with the F. W. Baptist church at Alton, where she remained a member until her death. The state of her mind was such that she bore the sufferings o her last days with Christian fortitude.

A few days before she expired, she prayed fervently to her Heavenly Father that his blessing and protection might ever be upon her surviving family. We mourn not for our mother as those that have no hope; for we trust that when Christ shall come to gather his jewels, she will be gathered with them, and we meet her again, where sickness and death no more shall come.

S. S. MOONEY.

Gilmanton, N. H., Apr. 22, 1858.

—Adv. Herald.

Died, in Portland, Me., April 14, very suddenly, of congestion of the lungs, Bro. Benjamin Haines, aged 45 years, 9 months.

Bro. H. was a lover of Jesus and his truth. The hope of the gospel cheered his heart, and his last effort to commend that hope to others was at a prayer meeting held at his own house, a few hours previous to his death.—Although called to close his eyes so unexpectedly upon earth's scenes, we mourn not as those who have no hope, for we trust that soon he will awake to immortality.

May the deeply afflicted widow and children find in this hour of trial that God is the widow's God, and a Father to the fatherless; and may they, together with all the mourning ones, be prepared to gain that land

"Where no tears shall ever fall
Nor heart be sad."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

The New York Independent contains a communication from Harriet Beecher Stowe, on the subject of the present religious movement, from which we extract the following paragraphs:

"The voice of this revival comes to every Christian as the midnight cry of old, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh. A new era is struggling for birth—Christ is moving to reorganize the world; and that he may do it, he must first "purify the sons of Levi." The first impulse of Christians is often, at such a time as this, to begin to talk to every one on the subject of their soul's salvation; but is this all—is this even the first thing? Should there not be first a deep heart-scrutiny, a looking through one's whole life to see how it harmonizes with the spirit of Jesus? He who finds his views low, his feelings earthly, must not stop to talk himself out of this state by preaching to the impenitent, nor to pray himself out in public meetings. No; a deeper work than this must be done. Alone with his God and Savior, he must take his daily life and course, item by item, and see if it has been conformed to Christ."

PRAYER MEETINGS IN ENGLAND.

The Philadelphia Inquirer records the following:

A gentleman who takes a deep interest in the religious awakening of the times, which is spreading like flame, and with electric celerity through the land, called on me yesterday and stated that a similar movement is on foot in England. Even before it commenced a number of barristers and other distinguished laymen went into the byways and alleys of the great metropolis, assembled the poor, and even hundreds of persons, of both sexes and of doubtful reputation, taught them the sublime truths and consolations of the gospel, and induced them to unite in meetings for general and fervent prayer. Their ministrations were attended with success that both St. Paul's Cathedral and Westminster Abbey were opened fer services, and also for sermons that are especially intended for the attendance of the industrial as well as the idle and vagrant classes, while the gatherings at Exeter Hall are thronged by thousands, many of whom confess their previous neglect of religion and the Scriptures.

REVIVAL FACTS.

At the Noon-day Prayer Meetings in this city, interesting facts are occasionally related by persons belonging here or in other places. We give a few.

A strong minded, but worldly and irreligious man, had two daughters at a distant town, attending school. A revival was prevailing at the place. The father, hearing of it, sent a person with peremptory orders to bring his daughters home, to prevent them from being interested in religion; but the Holy Spirit had gone before him, and when the messenger arrived, he learned that both of the young women had been converted. They wished to remain, but no, the orders were positive, and they must return. On arriving at home, they consulted as to their duty, and resolved, in the fear of God, to act out the principles they had imbibed. When night came they said, "Father, will you not have family worship to-night?" "What! exclaimed he, "family prayer! No. I have been keeping house twenty years without prayer, and shall not begin now. I shall do no such thing." They then asked him if he would allow them to pray. He consented. They set out a small table and placed the family Bible upon it. One of the daughters read a portion of Scripture, and the other offered prayer. At first, the father would not kneel; but as his daughter preceeded, his feelings were touched, and presently he dropped on his knees. As she went on, he was more and more moved, until in agony of soul he prostrated himself on the floor. The Spirit of God had humbled his proud heart in the dust, and from that night he became a new man.

—It is said that eighty tongues are used in business and social intercourse among the inhabitants of New York city.

—At last accounts the grasshoppers were committing serious ravages in Western Texas.

—A person at Hawleyville, Iowa, writes that the grasshoppers or locusts have again made their appearance in countless millions, and commenced destroying our spring wheat. Fears are entertained that they will destroy every thing in their way this season.

Foreign News.

ONE WEEK LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE PERSIA.

SANDY HOOK, May 11, 7.30, A. M.

Steamship Persia, from Liverpool 1st inst., has just arrived off this port.

RUSSIA.

Russia has decided to construct three lines of railway between the Black and Caspian Seas.

INDIA.

The Calcutta mail of the 24th March had reached England, and the papers publish graphic accounts of the capture of Lucknow.

LATER.

Telegraph advices of the Bombay mail had reached London, but the dates are not given.

Sir Hugh Rose laid seige to Jhansi on the 27th of March. On the 1st of April 25,000 rebels, with 18 guns, called the army of Peshawco, endeavored to raise the seige, but were defeated with the slaughter of 1500 men. The town fortifications were captured. On the 5th, the garrison escaped in the night, were pursued, and 3000 cut up. Six British officers were killed.

Another account says—On the fourth of April, after a severe struggle, in which the British loss was heavy, the town was stormed and taken, and on the 6th the fort was occupied.

At Rajpootana the rebels had made a desperate but ineffectual attack on the palace of the Rajah of Kotah. Subsequently General Roberts carried the position of the rebels by assault, and occupied the town of Kotah. The rebels fled, and great slaughter took place in the pursuit.

Col. Milman was compelled to retire from Aginsen, with a detachment of the 37th Regiment, with the loss of baggage. They were cut up at Azimghur. Strong reliefs were on their way from Lucknow.

Some disturbances had occurred at Goojerat on the Island of Beyt, and an attempt to dislodge the rebels were repulsed. The island was afterwards evacuated by the rebels.

THE CHURCH'S CALL.

Ye needy sinners, oft oppress'd,
Oh come and find in Jesus' rest!
Why will ye still refuse to come,
While Jesus cries, there yet is room.

Ye search the earth from pole to pole
In vain for peace unto your soul;
Ye frequent pleasure's magic hall,
But oh! there's emptiness in all.

A gracious Savior waits to hear
One prayer, or see one falling tear;
He pleads with you to hear his voice
And make eternal bliss your choice!

The Spirit bids you come and live,
While we a hearty welcome give,—
Give us the hand, give Christ your heart,
Now for th' eternal kingdom start.

Soon will the last loud trumpet call,
And Satan must in bondage fall,
While saints shall rise to live for aye
In joys that ne'er shall pass away.

By all that glorious King can give,
We pray thee, turn to God and live!
Turn, turn, for soon, probation past,
In life or death your lot is cast.

Why madly rush to that abyss
Where neither light nor pleasure is?
Why scorn the crown of glory bright—
A home in yonder world of light—

While in your Father's house remains
Enough for all? where mortal pains
Are never feared! O sinner, come,
And enter Zion—happy home!

For the Crisis.

A Short Sermon.

"There is away which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Solomon.

I. The existence of sects dates back to remote times. Before the Christian era there were sects among the Jews—there were sects even among the heathen philosophers; but that is not of much consequence to us. As strange however as it might appear, sects are found at quite an early period in the christian institution. The Jews did much to secure this condition of things. But people soon began to divide, and one said, "I am for Paul;" and another, "I am for Apollos." "I am for Cephas;" says another. "Ye are carnal and walk as men," said Paul; "I am afraid I have labored in vain."

Instead of Scriptural names being retained, which might be a redeeming feature, or the names of distinguished apostles, which were more excusable than the names men have adopted; I whould ask, who would judge, having only read the gospel—though he might have read it attentively—by the names, which are used by different sects, that any claim is made to the gospel, as to the foundation of their faith or institution. In most cases the name does not indicate the relation of the class of people to the New Testament at all.

The number of sects is vast, and doubtless a vast number of Christians are scattered among them. The "name is legion;" but I hope some of the devils are cast out. The great objection to them is, that the names and orders of them indicate a separation of the people of God into small bodies, in different communions, which is a vast hindrance to the progress of truth. Each man will labor to promote the interest of his own order or institution, and hence sometmes interfere with the welfare of others, if he does not directly pull down others. It is palpable that the most of them as bodies, will strive for their own advancement, whether they advance christianity or not. More or less, there is a great sectartan warfare, which takes more time and effort than is put forth in the spread of the truth.

I conclude, then, that the whole category, without a single name being mentioned, seem right to themselves; but some have an amazing blind eye, or things would seem differently.

The Jewish sects could crucify Christ; because they all said, "we have a law, and by the law he ought to die." But the liberal, who did not belong to them, said, "he is a man of God."

II. The influences which produce them.

It might be mentioned in the outset, a peculiarity in the preacher caused him to be followed more fully than another, and so of another.

Again: one might have dwelt upon some particular features of the gospel, another upon other features; thus an influence arose continually which gathered a kind of persons. These began to feel sympathy. Soon a common interest—soon after enterprise to advance, and in order to this, to defend the position taken. The compulsory conversion of subordinates soon follows. Then power obtains and converts are multiplied. But not to look back to the overgrown and tyrannical hierarchies of other days—the abominable usurpation of power in the name of the church; but to consider modern christendom. One method is to instruct children in the doctrines of the sect, to which the parents belong. It is well to teach them the truths of the Bible; but often the children and the men know more of the Creed and of the Catechism than of the Bible. The boy—minister's boy—who stole his mother's cake, gives proper illustration.

"My son," said the mother, 'do you not know the commandments?"

"Yes!"

"Do you know that the commandments say, 'Thou sh lt not steal?'"

"Yes! And I know too, that since the fall of man, no man can keep them 'perfectly, but continually doth break them in thought, word, and deed.'"

The catechism was Calvinism; the Bible is gospel.

It results again from the selfishness of man, which will lead him to secure the greater number, if possible, to the communion to which he belongs. Hence, proselytism prevails, and however sincere some may be in their endeavors to get men converted, there will always be persons ready to begin to hold out particular tenets, by which to gather a few into the church, or into the water—no matter if it stops the revival. "Better an hundred remain in the world, who if converted would join the other church, than we should lose ten to ours, whom we shall get now if we strike while the iron is hot." That's the motto.

The building up of different sects has resulted from human pride, selfishness, love of power, seeking the praise of men more than the praise of God. It is a worldly influence, and not a divine one. At the present time, it cannot be materially remidied. The only remedy is to come out, and this soon exhibits the germ of another sect; but while the process is going on, some relief is found from the pressure.

One of the influences which by its perversion has resulted in sects is the unwillingness to submit to the dogmas and usages of other times. Upon the whole, since there must be some—the more the better. The trouble is, that churchianity is the major; christianity the minor. "It seemeth right" to thousands. It is deadly error. 'Tis worldly wisdom—earthly, sensual, devilish.

Church Order.

As this subject is occupying the minds of the brethren at present, I wisn to communicate a few thoughts respecting it. I need not spend time to prove its importance or scriptural authority. I think that any careful reader of the New Testament must be convinced that Christ and his apostles did institute church order for the government of his followers, and no doubt intended it to be perpetuated till he comes again.

It is often said that God has order in all his wonderful works, and we know that hardly any thing can be done successfully in the great transactions of men, without some system It appears to me there is no work man can do, in which it is so important to have perfect order, as in matters relating to the church, and yet many of the brethren are very indifferent respecting it, and some openly opposed. Some take the position that we are so near the end, that church organization is unnecessary, or impracticable.

But discord or confusion have more or less prevailed when a door has been left open so wide. Satan will always have his representatives.

It seems to me that if there ever was a time in the history of the church, when it was necessary to have order and harmony, and christian counsel and watch-care, it is in these days of peril; and more especially when new converts are being multiplied. If they have not the nursing of the church, they will most certainly fall away. What should we say of the Master of a vessel, who, when he comes in sight of land, should say all hands may now have their own way, or go to sleep, and let her drift; we are so near the harbor that we are sure to get in? Shipwreck would inevitably be the consequence, or if they succeeded in reaching the port, they would be crippled and in a state of mutiny, and probably be handed over to the officers of justice. Brethren, let us awake to this subject, and have the vessel in perfect trim, with the banner of salvation all colored with the blood of Christ, at mast-head; then we may have a cordial welcome home.

Aged father, thou art lonely
Since thy daughter's gone to rest;
But be patient, soon you'll meet her,
And we hope among the blest.

But methinks your thoughts must center
At the waking of the dead,
Where you hope ere long to meet her;
Where no longer tears are shed;

And in ages of the future,
Glorify the God of truth,
By your anthems sweetly blended,
Sweeter than in days of youth.

Then be patient yet a moment,
Till thy years are wholly filled;
And be ready for the summons
To a future, better world.

To Carrie.

Weeks and months have passed away since your requests were made known to the people of God. Since that time their prayers have ascended to heaven in your behalf. Many hearts, warm with christian love and affection, often inquire, "have you heard nothing from that stranger yet?" Echo answers—nothing. While I grieve that I can give them no information, I still hope to see thee, and mingle my prayers and sympathies with thine.

Often have we, when knelt around the family altar, borne your case before the throne, pleading that God would make you a co-worker in the great work of saving the lost.

The Lord is at hand. We have no time to lose. What we do must be done quickly. Christ came to seek those that are lost. This should be the work of his followers. There is something for every child of God to do. No idlers will ever go into the Kingdom. Be careful you do not hide the one talent. We must work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, and be willing to make ourselves of no reputation. Cast off the world with its lusts, the gold, the costly apparel, the vain show of dress, and every thing contrary to scripture.

My soul longeth for pure friendship. Friends that are not tainted with this world. Friends that are independent of the opinions of others, and that will not be moved by every wind that blows, and who will stand firm at their post. Such are Jesus' friends, and such will stand the fires of the last day.

Is your mind made up, sister, to take such a stand? Then the winds may blow, the storms howl,—your house cannot fall; it is built upon a rock. But are you still in doubt, and almost discouraged? You know the Bible is full of precious promises, and God is waiting to be gracious. Come, let us know of your whereabouts, that we may speak words of comfort to your aching heart. Call and see us on Union St., east side, first house north of Monroe; or drop a line directed to "Hattie," box 1256, Rochester P. O. God forbid we should be strangers in the same city long. Your sister praying for your redemption when Jesus comes,

"HATTIE."

From Bro. H. Grew.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—The good work of divine mercy continues in our city. Our daily prayer meetings are still well attended and information given of hopeful conversions. Truly, in view of the Lord's marvellous goodness throughout the land, with adoring gratitude we may exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" Often simple means are blest to show more clearly that "the excellency of the power is of God and not of us." However, in all cases, whether Paul plants or Apollos waters, "it is God who giveth the increase." "Not unto us, not unto us, O Lord, but to thy Name be the glory."

How forcibly should the holy commandment, "Go, work in my vineyard," now press the conscience of every individual christian!" What encouragement for faithful effort for the salvation of perishing men is now given us by a gracious God. O for divine grace to improve it. One word of kind warning, of affectionate entreaty, may win a soul to Jesus. "He that winneth souls is wise." "Let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins." James 5: 20.

One blessed effect of the good work, is an increasing love and union among those who love our Lord Jesus in sincerity, of different denominations. Our meetings are a happy prelude to our perfect union and fellowship in that blessed state where no discordant note shall mar the harmony of our everlasting song.

Yours in holy love,
HENRY GREW.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—In anticipation of what those are to enjoy who continue in the reign of peace and righteousness, in the kingdom of God, I thought to write a few lines to the Crisis for the consideration of my friends. The gospel of the Son of God shines more brightly than the noon day's sun, in its meridian brightness and splendor. Oh, for the joys of the world to come!

"How bright the vision!
Oh how long will that glad hour delay?"

Let the prophet answer,—To the end of the 335 days.

Dear brethren and friends, as I have often said, and still say, I came from Paradise Lost, and am a pilgrim and stranger in the earth, looking for the blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ. Travelling to Mount Zion, to the city of the living God, which is free, and is the mother of us all. And in hope of the literal resurrection of the dead, am I often called in question. Yet I hope to be able to give a reason for the hope that is within me, in meekness and in fear. Which hope we have as an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, and hath entered into that within the vail whitner the forerunner hath for us entered, even Jesus. If we have faith in the word of God, strong enough to hold us, we are sure, and shall "soon reach the shore." We shall reach the vail, and be born again into immortality.

May that, dear reader, be our happy lot. Finally, brethren, pray for the church in B——, that our hope may be firmly grounded, and we in it, that when Jesus comes, we may be saved in God's eternal kingdom.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit a wayward, erring brother to once more address the little flock through the Crisis. I have now been in this State three years, and during that time have been continually praying to my heavenly Father to send some one here to proclaim the truth, and raise up a church that will be free from sectarianism, prepared to meet the bridegroom when he comes, which I hope and believe will be very soon.

And I wish to say to the preaching brethren, "Come over and help us." I am poor in the things of this world, but I will share what I have with any brother or sister whom the Lord may send on an errand of mercy to this people. I heard last fall there were some persons in Warren, Ill., who were preaching the second coming of Christ, and traveled all the way there on foot (eighteen miles) in hope of meeting them. But they had gone. Now I wish to say to the little flock, if there is any one within fifty miles of Monroe, Wis., if you cannot come here, write to me and give me your address, and if I live and time continues, I will try to visit you.

THE DAY OF CHRIST.

The glorious day is drawing near,
When Christ the Lord will come,
In all the glory of his power,
To reign on David's throne.

He'll gather some from every tongue
And nation far and near,
And take them to Jerusalem,
Before him to appear.

The sleeping saints his voice will hear
And from their tombs arise,
And crowns of glory they will wear
When they meet him in the skies.

When on Mount Zion they shall stand
And view the new earth o'er,
They'll then possess the promised land
For ever, ever more.

THE CROCUS.

BY MRS. H. B. STOWE.

Beneath the sunny autumn sky,
With gold leaves drooping round,
We sought, my little friend and I,
The consecrated ground,
Where calm beneath the holy cross,
O'ershadowed by sweet skies,
Sleeps tranquilly that youthful form,
Those blue, unclouded eyes.

Around the soft, green swelling mound
We scooped the earth away,
And buried deep the crocus bulbs
Against a coming day.
"These roots are dry, and brown, and sere,
Why plant them here?" he said,
"To leave them all the winter long
So desolate and dead."

"Dear child, within each sere dead form
There sleeps a living flower,
And angel-like shall he arise
In spring's returning hour."
Ah, deeper down—cold, dark and chill,
We buried our heart's flower,
But angel-like shall he arise
In spring's immortal hour.

In blue and yellow from its grave
Springs up the crocus fair,
And God shall raise those bright blue eyes,
Those sunny waves of hair.
Not for a fading summer's morn,
Not for a fleeting hour,
But for an endless age of bliss,
Shall rise our heart's dear flower.

The Religious Awakening.

None can doubt that God is working mightily in our land, as a God of grace and mercy. Whether this reviving is soon to pass away, leaving the church, though somewhat strengthened and encouraged, much as it found her, or whether it is but the gentle shower of divine grace before the mighty reign of righteousness, filling the earth with the glory and love of God, we will not venture to predict. There are some aspects of the work as at present developed, well worthy of note and record.

First, its spontaneousness impresses all. Most evidently it is God's work. No unusual means have been employed. The revival was not "got up." It came down. Without preparation, and beyond the faith of God's people, it appears in hundreds of places about the same time and with the same power.

Second, it is wide-spread, all-pervading. Over our whole land, and in thousands of churches the Spirit is poured out from on high. In manufactories, counting-rooms, jobbing-houses, and business firms of all kinds, prayer-meetings are established and souls are converted. New churches are springing up and old ones are strengthened. The substance of nearly every letter received from our colporteurs, and from every State of our Union, is revivals, glorious and wide-spread revivals! In one of our western States, where houses of worship are few, we hear of the day-schools being suspended, and teacheers, scholars, and parents, occupying the school-houses daily for worship. Nor is this gracious work confined to our land. Ships in-coming from other lands are freighted with souls seeking Christ, or rejoicing in the love of a Savior found precious out upon the wide ocean. All this is wonderful. God be praised by every pious heart for this his mercy.

Third, great sobriety has charaterized the work thus far. We have heard of no wild and fanatical excitements as yet to mar the beautiful and blessed work of the Spirit. Thus may it continue under the guiding hand of him whose work it is.—Thus should it ever be. The majesty of a just God overshadows the cross, and though the way to that cross is open and free, it is a solemn way for the guilty sinner to tread.

Fourth, we note another characteristic of the work, so far as we have been able to observe it—that sinners seem readily to find peace in Christ. Those deep, long-continued, despairing convictions of sin which arise from a profound view of the holiness of God's law and the strictness of his claims upon us, are not prominent in this work. The love of Christ seems the constraining power. Almost before they called he has answered. In this there is great encouragement to the sinner to seek a present Savior now in the accepted time, for now he waits to be gracious. There is also special encouragement for Christians to labor in the vineyard of the Lord. This is a harvest-time of souls.—Amer. Messenger.

Family Prayer---Anecdote of a Good Wife.

It is no uncommon thing for Christian people, under the pressure of worldly business, to neglect family prayer. The Christian Herald states that many years ago, when the country about Cincinnati was new, a Christian who had employed a number of hands to aid him in clearing his lands, took it into his head that he would not have family prayers in the morning, because the time he would spend on so many hands was more, he thought, than he could afford to lose. He had made up his mind to get rich in haste, and determined that religion should bend to business. When he informed his pious wife of his purpose, she expostulated with him, but in vain. Morning came and the workmen were hurried to breakfast, and hurried out to work without a breath of prayer.

The next morning the farmer and his men went out, as usual, to their work. The sun began to climb up the sky, but no breakfast horn was heard. They grew angry, and looked anxiously toward the house; they listened, but still the expected summons did not come. After waiting an hour or two beyond the usual time, they went to the house. No table was set, no coffee was boiling on the fire, no food was cooking over or before it. The good wife was knitting quietly, with the big Bible open on her lap.

"What does this mean?" cried her husband. "Why isn't our breakfast ready?"

"I thought you were in such a hurry about your work that you could not have time to eat it."

"Have time to eat it! Do you think we can live without eating?"

"You can live without eating as well as without praying. The spirit needs the bread of heaven as much as the body needs the bread of earth."

"Well, well," said the farmer, "get us some breakfast, and we will have prayers again every morning; no matter how busy we are, or how many workmen I have."

She got the breakfast and he kept his word. The lesson was a good one, and was never forgotten.

Individual Responsibility.

The commanding officer of the little garrison of British heroes at Lucknow ascribes their salvation from destruction by the infuriated Sepoys, during that fearful seige of three long months, to the fact that owing to the extreme paucity of their numbers, "each man was taught to feel that on his own individual efforts depended in no small measure the safety of their entire position;" and so thoroughly did this consciousness incite every officer, soldier and man, to discharge his whole duty, that the overwhelming force of the enemy could never succeed in gaining an inch within the bounds of their feebly fortified quarters. Were every member of the church of Christ impressed with a like sense of the results depending on his own individual efforts to save souls from the power of the great adversary, what victories would be achieved to the glory of his great name.

It is not the prestige of an army, or the reputation of its officers that insures the victory; that is the result of the persistent, unflinching discharge of his duty by each officer and man in the face of danger and death. "England expects every man to do his duty," was the inspiring charge of her greatest naval hero on the eve of one of the bloodiest engagements; and well he knew that, were that realized, he would be triumphant.

So each individual Christian has a work to do, and a work which no one else can do as effectively and as well. There is some soul to be reached, some ignorant mind to be enlightened, some wanderer to be reclaimed, some prodigal around whom we can throw the arms of Christian sympathy and love to win him back to his Father's house. This work, if done, he must do. It can not be delegated to others. Let each Christian seek diligently to know what he can do in his own peculiar sphere, and labor to accomplish it with all faithfulness, as if fully impressed with the conviction that it depended alone on his efforts under God, and the active aggressive power of the church would be largely increased, and by his blessing multitudes be rescued from eternal death.—Ex.

A Leaf from Whitefield's Experience.

"My mind being now more enlarged, I began to read the holy Scriptures upon my knees, laying aside all other books, and praying over, if possible, every line and word. This proved meat indeed, and drink indeed, to my soul. I daily received fresh life, light, and power from above. I got more true knowledge from reading the book of God in one month, than I could ever have acquired from all the writings of men. In one word, I found it profitable for reproof, for correction, for instruction; every way sufficient to make the man of God perfect, thoroughly furnished for every good work and word. About this time God was pleased to enlighten my soul, and bring me into the knowledge of his free grace, and the necessity of being justified in his sight only. Burkett's and Henry's Expositions were of admirable use, to lead me into this and all other gospel truths."

To these habits of reading, Whitefield added much secret prayer. "Oh, what sweet communion have I daily vouchsafed with God in prayer! How often have I been carried out beyond myself when meditating in the fields! How assuredly I felt that Christ dwelt in me and I in him, and how daily did I walk in the comforts of the Holy Ghost, and was edified and refreshed in the multitude of peace!"

IT is a characteristic of narrow-minded men, that they grasp the few ideas which lie within the limited circle of their comprehension with a clearness which often deceives us in our estimate of their intellect. They are like beggars, who know the stamp and date of every penny in their pocket.—Ex.

THE LIGHT OF HOME.

To pilgrims on this desert waste,
Opprest with storm and gloom,
How brightly on their dreary path
Breaks in the light of home;
The light that glances from above,
From Salem's festal Halls,
That beams from yon pure fount of love
Within the jasper walls.

O Thou, my Father and my Friend,
While here on earth I roam,
To my sad heart thy Spirit send
To cheer me through the gloom;
And when the toilsome way is past,
O'er which the saved must come,
O grant that I may share at last
With thee the light of home!

SECOND SERIES.

No. IV.

To UNCLE FRED;—I am very glad, dear uncle, to have you present your difficulties, and ask my opinion respecting sundry texts which stand in the way of my cherished belief. With all deference to your age and experience, I will endeavor with meekness to reply. And first, in regard to Christ's commission to his disciples,—"Go preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

"If there was no kingdom at hand, if Christ's kingdom was not then about to be established, but was to be delayed for many centuries, even until his second coming; how could this announcement be truthfully made?"

I am aware, dear uncle, that at first sight there seems to be difficulty here; but upon a careful study of connecting circumstances, the difficulty is ended; it is so, at least, in my own mind, and I will give you the result of my investigation on this point. That Christ was born a King, that he claimed by his birthright and heirship the throne of David, that the inscription upon the cross—"Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews"—was truth, we do not for a moment question.

The angel announced to Mary, that unto her son the Lord God would give throne of his father David; and that he should reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there should be no end. His kingly authority is here positively affirmed, and the character of his kingdom plainly described. Question.—Did he take the throne of David? Did he reign over the house of Jacob?

John the Baptist preached the kingdom of heaven at hand. Christ sent forth his disciples with the same message, confining their announcement of it to the Jewish nation only. "Go not," said he, "into the way of the Gentiles; and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

By every evidence presented in the prophets, he confirmed the truth of his being the promised Messiah. Did the Jewish nation, his chosen people, believe the message and receive him for their King? See him, as he rides into the capitol in the manner predicted by the prophet Zachariah,—"lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt, the foal of an ass." Before him has gone the proclamation, "Shout, O daughter of Jerusalem, behold thy King cometh unto thee!" The attendant multitudes cry out, saying, "Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the highest!" Was it a farce? Nay, verily! By John had the kingdom been announced.

By a visible token from heaven had Messiah the Prince been manifested to the Jewish nation. By wondrous signs had the disciples confirmed their announcement—"the kingdom of heaven is at hand." By the miraculous birth, by the predicted star, by the angelic host on Judea's plains, by the revelation to Anna and Simeon, by the sixty-nine weeks of Daniel, by the miracles of Jesus Christ, had the divinity of his mission and his title to the throne of David been clearly demonstrated. With the rightfulness of his claim thus fully manifested, "he came unto his own, and his own received him not." He offered to the Jewish nation the kingdom—he offered himself as their King, but they turned away with scorn at the despised Nazarene, and contemptuously said, "We will not have this man to reign over us." What then said Jesus? "The kingdom shall be taken from you and given to a nation that shall bring forth the fruits thereof."—"From henceforth your house is left unto you desolate."

No longer are the disciples commissioned to proclaim the kingdom as being at hand—no longer are they limited to the house of Israel, but the word now is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." The doctrine of the kingdom formed a very essential part of this gospel, but it was from henceforth to be proclaimed yet future, and the time of its establishment was identical with the second coming of Christ. The prayer must be for centuries breathed into the ear of Jehovah, "Thy kingdom come;" and like holy incense it has been ascending up before the throne, and now the signs that were to betoken its proximity indicate unmistakably to the eye of the watcher, that it is even now right at hand, and about to be established in everlasting perpetuity.

Again the proclamation has gone forth, "Rejoice, O daughter of Zion; behold thy king cometh unto thee!" He comes, he comes! Not riding "upon the foal of an ass," as once in lowliness he came; but the clouds of heaven are his chariot; angels in countless throngs are his attendants; glory, far outshining the sun in its meridian brightness, beams forth from his person; and, rising from their dusty beds, the sleeping saints, now immortalized and glorified, ascend with that happy host, who with burning lamps and girded loins, have watched, and waited, and longed for the coming of their Lord and King! It is no longer the hosannas of a few of Judah's sons that ring on the air, but the shout of a great multitude, which no man can number; for they are as the sands upon the seashore, innumerable.

Pardon this digression, Uncle Fred; my heart became so animated with the thoughts connected with the reign of Christ, that I have given utterance to them, and now have not room for further objections. Will reply soon.

Till then, adieu.

Man Shall Live by Every Word.

Thus all God's word is necessary. There is not a word written in vain. In the day of religious prosperity men seem to get along with a little of it, but in the day of declension and trial more is needed. It has been the case for a few months past. But we shall need the present, crowning truth of Revelation soon. The hurricane comes after the calm, and certainly clouds are gathering for a storm. The cry of "peace and safety" has gained ground fast of late, and let us be careful that we are not overtaken in the storm.

Shall we disband? has been a question with some. No, no. When we turn this point of land we shall near the light house. Let us keep the light burning and keep up the watch, for we are nearing the end of all things. Let us take heed lest we be led away with the error of the wicked, and so fall from our own steadfastness. Christ is not divided; he is not at war with his own predictions; neither is Christ and Baal united. There are many spirits gone out into the world. Let us try the spirits, and try them by the word. That is the only standard; and they that are not willing to come to the light, or word, are not of God. "Sanctify them through the truth, thy word is truth." Amen.

I would not give up my position, as far as truth is concerned, for all this world, nor deny God in my experience for fifteen years past. He has not shown us these things to destroy us. Let us not in conformity to our faith. God has blessed his own word. This past winter, I have seen God in truth. I have seen stout hearts bend, and have often been refreshed while hearing the young converts express their joy, and old saints bless God for the truth of the kingdom. I long to be there.

Temperance Pledge.

I heartily and cheerfully sign my name to that pledge. Yes, tea, coffee and tobacco flee from me forever. I believe in keeping the temple of the Holy Ghost undefiled. I ask, can we do this when our bodies are filled with tobacco, snuff, and many other things that tend to destroy our reason and cause us many times to say and do those things that grieve away the Holy Spirit? If those things cause us to grieve away the Holy Spirit, is it right for us to use them? The question will be answered in the negative by every mind that is not so far destroyed by their use that they cannot discern good from evil. Then why will you still persist in their use?

You take a quid of tobacco from your mouth and bow before the Lord and ask him to help you to retain your reason and your memory, and arise from your knees and put another quid of that poison in your mouth that is fast destroying both reason and memory. Do you think God will be mocked in that way? I tell you, he will not. If you want God to help you to retain them, arise and cast that poison from your mouth forever, and I will guarantee that God will answer your prayer. You preach self-denial, and you yourselves are slaves to such passions and lusts. Can sinners have confidence in you? Many times we see the preacher as soon as he has finished his sermon, and while he is waiting to hear his brethren speak of the goodness of God, and exhort sinners to deny themselves and take up their cross and follow Jesus, take from his pocket a box, and from thence a quid. Is it right?

Well, I hear you say that you have got in such a habit of it that you can't break off. "Where there's a will, there's a way." Then don't try to have a person that is in the habit of swearing stop it, for with the same propriety could he say that he was so in the habit of it that he could not stop. You say you don't believe in learning "old dogs new tricks." Then don't exhort that old person who is in the habit of loving and serving Satan, to love and serve the Lord; for, according to your doctrine, you must not learn "old dogs new tricks."

You love the Crisis, and think you cannot part with it, but if Bro. Grant knew how much you spent for tea, coffee, tobacco and snuff, which are killing you so fast, I fear that he would not send it to you free, or wait so long for his pay as he does. Come, now, be men, be women, be christians in very deed. Practice as well as preach. Sign the "temperance pledge," and "abstain from every appearance of evil," and you will enjoy better health and be better christians. Promise the God of heaven that you will never again grieve the Holy Spirit by using tea, coffee, tobacco, or snuff; and may God help you to keep your promise.

Information Obtained.

BRO. GRANT:—Some time ago, you recollect that your humble correspondent and a certain excellent Bro. "J. P., Jr." were slightly befogged as to the opinion held by certain Adventists, concerning the nature and destiny of man. After repeated calls for "information," I was referred to the lucubrations of a Congregational brother, and the fortifications of a learned professor, and given to understand that, if they could'nt convince or inform me, my case was a hopeless one, as far at least as Bro. P.'s efforts were concerned.

Well, so I was as blind as ever in the pursuit of knowledge under difficulties, trying to find out just what this important opinion was. I had nearly despaired of obtaining any information on the point until now. But "Eureka!"—"I have found it!" and now you shall have it. I have before me a most valuable and instructive little work of about sixteen 18 mo. pages, entitled, "Principles of Divine Truth believed and maintained by the Advent Church of Philadelphia.—Basis of Church Union and Church Order. Wm. S. Young Printer, 52 N. Sixth St. 1858."

There is no author's name appended, but as Eld. J. Litch is a resident there, and was once pastor of this church, it is probable that this document is sanctioned by very good authority. It contains some sixteen different heads of faith, and about nine or ten more of rules and directions. It is a very instructive summary of truth and duty in the main.

From this important and authentic summary, I proceed to quote as follows:—

"OF MAN."

"God made man holy and immortal, composed of a body made of dust; a soul, the life or living principle, produced by the Divine being when he breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life; and a spirit, the conscious principle, formed within him. Mortality or death is the fruit of sin, the penalty of the law of God. It consists in a disseverance of the spiritual and physical nature of man, so that the dust returns to the earth as it was, and the spirit to God who gave it. In this intermediate state, between death and the resurrection, the righteous enter into peace, and are comforted; but the wicked in hades—that is, the invisible world—are tormented. But the righteous do not receive their crowns nor inheritance till after the general judgment, the second advent of Christ, and the resurrection of their bodies; nor do the wicked receive their punishment till the same epoch."

There are other important statements in thss little work, but here is enough for the present; and this gives a part of the desired information. Still as to the precise state and condition of man in death, there is still some obscurity; and until this is made more perfectly clear, I must still, in all sincerity and charity, remain

Presumption.

To induce dying men to presume on the mercy of God, is one of the most subtle and successful devices of the great Adversary. By exhibiting to the human mind the mercy of the Almighty in a false light, and in a manner totally incompatible with his justice, he maintains his first lie, and persuades thousands to believe that they "shall not surely die." Thus he takes them captive, holding them in the chain of a false security; insensible of the necessity of that holiness, "without which no man shall see the Lord." Heb. 12: 14.

Our eternal well being demands our serious consideration of the following facts. May God grant us an understanding of them before it is too late to remedy a fatal mistake. The same Word of eternal truth which reveals Jehovah as the Father of mercies, reveals him as "a consuming fire." Heb. 11: 29. The very same testimony that assures us he is "the Savior," to prevent our despair, assures us that he is "the just God," to prevent our presumption. Isa. 45: 21. The same sacred volume which presents to the penitent believer "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," presents to the impenitent "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation which shall devour the adversaries." Heb. 10: 27. The merciful and compassionate Savior himself, when he graciously assures us that "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved;" at the same time assures us, that 'he that believeth not shall be condemned." Mark 16: 16. Verily, if the reader of God's word is not wilfully blind, he may clearly see that threatenings to one class of the human race run parallel with promises to the other; faithfully warning the rejectors of divine truth, that "it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God!" Heb. 10: 31.

Alas! what a demonstration do some men present of the blinding and hardening nature of sin! Infinite love, combined with infinite wisdom; the long-suffering of a God of holiness and purity, it is presumed, may be despised and rejected with impunity! Men preferring their idols of riches or honor, or carnal pleasure, to the reasonable service of the God of their being and mercies, flatter and deceive themselves with the vain expectation that the Almighty Judge of all the earth will justify his threatenings to the ungodly, which his holy and immutable perfections bind him to fulfil equally with his promises to the righteous. Thus a deceived heart turns dying man aside from the holy truth, so "that he cannot deliver his soul nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand?" Isa. 44: 20.

Let the solemn truth influence all our hearts and lives: "God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. 6: 7, 8.

BRO. GRANT:—During the past two months I have been among the brethren in Eastern Iowa, and in some places in this State. I have labored some in the truth and am still at it. I find a great call for laborers. All the brethren in the State could not attend to the calls from new fields. Every effort of a few weeks arouses a call from several places to attend the "regions beyond." Which calls have to be left unheeded, or young churches left to their own strength. May the Lord send more laborers into his vineyard, while there is "an ear to hear."

If we are to regard Christ's words, "My sheep hear my voice," how few are there in his flock among the many who professedly acknowledge him. "A stranger," says Christ, "they will not hear;" but it is too true that most of those who profess to be of his flock, have "heaped to themselves teachers, having itching ears." And we can abundantly testify that they have turned their ears "from the truth, and are turned unto fables."

While at Wilton, Iowa, I heard the Methodist minister of that place preach a funeral discourse on the death of a leading member of his church. She was also a prominent member of a secret society in the place, which attended the funeral in uniform. He assured his hearers that she was in heaven, dwelling with God; and encouraged them with a hope that she was still watching over the interests of the church.

What a fearful endorsement of Spiritualism is this. And all under the garb of christian theology. Here is Spiritualism complete. He urged that she had gone to heaven, that she was probably engaged in instructing others, that she had watchful care over the friends whom she had left behind, and that she would probably come back and communicate with her earthly friends.

In reading the Oberlin Evangelist, published in the Spring of '55, I observed the fruits of the improved theology of the day. A priest of Siam asked a christian missionary there, who begat the sacred God? He was answered, "God was without beginning and without end; he has neither birth, nor age, nor death." Was Christ God? "Yes." Was he born of woman? "Yes." When? "About the commencement of the Christian era." Then Moses, if he were living, would be older than your God? Say, teacher, (i. e. Missionary) where is heaven? "Heaven is where the holy dwell with God." Tell me which way; point with your finger. "The Bible does not tell us just where in the universe heaven is." Ha! ha! a wise teacher truly; around asking folks to go to heaven and be happy; and cannot tell them where it is; wise, truly. The christian asked the priest,— You say some after death go to the region of the Towadas; where is this country? "There I am caught," said the priest. A wag standing by, said, "I can tell you, Teacher; it is close by your heaven; just this side of it."

The Methodist minister above alluded to, in preaching the funeral sermon, quoted from Dr. Dick's Astronomy to inform us where heaven was, but brought no testimony from the Bible in determining the matter.

I frequently hear testimony from our opponents that is encouraging to us. We often observe when our brethren begin to labor in a new field, how almost every one begin to study their Bibles to see whether these things are so. Many have said that [illegible] more studying of the Bible [illegible]

THE LIGHT OF HOME.

To pilgrims on this desert waste,
Opprest with storm and gloom,
How brightly on their dreary path
Breaks in the light of home;
The light that glances from above,
From Salem's festal Halls,
That beams from yon pure fount of love
Within the jasper walls.

O Thou, my Father and my Friend,
While here on earth I roam,
To my sad heart thy Spirit send
To cheer me through the gloom;
And when the toilsome way is past,
O'er which the saved must come,
O grant that I may share at last
With thee the light of home!

SECOND SERIES.

No. IV.

To Uncle Fred;—I am very glad, dear uncle, to have you present your difficulties, and ask my opinion respecting sundry texts which stand in the way of my cherished belief. With all deference to your age and experience, I will endeavor with meekness to reply. And first, in regard to Christ's commission to his disciples,—"Go preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

"If there was no kingdom at hand, if Christ's kingdom was not then about to be established, but was to be delayed for many centuries, even until his second coming; how could this announcement be truthfully made?"

I am aware, dear uncle, that at first sight there seems to be difficulty here; but upon a careful study of connecting circumstances, the difficulty is ended; it is so, at least, in my own mind, and I will give you the result of my investigation on this point. That Christ was born a King, that he claimed by his birthright and heirship the throne of David, that the inscription upon the cross—"Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews"—was truth, we do not for a moment question.

The angel announced to Mary, that unto her son the Lord God would give throne of his father David; and that he should reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there should be no end. His kingly authority is here positively affirmed, and the character of his kingdom plainly described. Question.—Did he take the throne of David? Did he reign over the house of Jacob?

John the Baptist preached the kingdom of heaven at hand. Christ sent forth his disciples with the same message, confining their announcement of it to the Jewish nation only. "Go not," said he, "into the way of the Gentiles; and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not; but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel."

By every evidence presented in the prophets, he confirmed the truth of his being the promised Messiah. Did the Jewish nation, his chosen people, believe the message and receive him for their King? See him, as he rides into the capitol in the manner predicted by the prophet Zachariah,—"lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt, the foal of an ass." Before him has gone the proclamation, "Shout, O daughter of Jerusalem, behold thy King cometh unto thee!" The attendant multitudes cry out, saying, "Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord! Hosanna in the highest!" Was it a farce? Nay, verily! By John had the kingdom been announced.

By a visible token from heaven had Messiah the Prince been manifested to the Jewish nation. By wondrous signs had the disciples confirmed their announcement—"the kingdom of heaven is at hand." By the miraculous birth, by the predicted star, by the angelic host on Judea's plains, by the revelation to Anna and Simeon, by the sixty-nine weeks of Daniel, by the miracles of Jesus Christ, had the divinity of his mission and his title to the throne of David been clearly demonstrated. With the rightfulness of his claim thus fully manifested, "he came unto his own, and his own received him not." He offered to the Jewish nation the kingdom—he offered himself as their King, but they turned away with scorn at the despised Nazarene, and contemptuously said, "We will not have this man to reign over us." What then said Jesus? "The kingdom shall be taken from you and given to a nation that shall bring forth the fruits thereof."—"From henceforth your house is left unto you desolate."

No longer are the disciples commissioned to proclaim the kingdom as being at hand—no longer are they limited to the house of Israel, but the word now is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creture. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." The doctrine of the kingdom formed a very essential part of this gospel, but it was from henceforth to be proclaimed yet future, and the time of its establishment was identical with the second coming of Christ. The prayer must be for centuries breathed into the ear of Jehovah, "Thy kingdom come;" and like holy incense it has been ascending up before the throne, and now the signs that were to betoken its proximity indicate unmistakably to the eye of the watcher, that it is even now right at hand, and about to be established in everlasting perpetuity.

Again the proclamation has gone forth, "Rejoice, O daughter of Zion; behold thy king cometh unto thee!" He comes, he comes! Not riding "upon the foal of an ass," as once in lowliness he came; but the clouds of heaven are his chariot; angels in countless throngs are his attendants; glory, far outshining the sun in its meridian brightness, beams forth from his person; and, rising from their dusty beds, the sleeping saints, now immortalized and glorified, ascend with that happy host, who with burning lamps and girded loins, have watched, and waited, and longed for the coming of their Lord and King! It is no longer the hosannas of a few of Judah's sons that ring on the air, but the shout of a great multitude, which no man can number; for they are as the sands upon the seashore, innumerable.

Pardon this digression, Uncle Fred; my heart became so animated with the thoughts connected with the reign of Christ, that I have given utterance to them, and now have not room for further objections. Will reply soon.

Till then, adieu.

Kate.

For the Crisis.

Man Shall Live by Every Word.

Thus all God's word is necessary. There is not a word written in vain. In the day of religious prosperity men seem to get along with a little of it, but in the day of declension and trial more is needed. It has been the case for a few months past. But we shall need the present, crowning truth of Revelation soon. The hurricane comes after the calm, and certainly clouds are gathering for a storm. The cry of "peace and safety" has gained ground fast of late, and let us be careful that we are not overtaken in the storm.

Shall we disband? has been a question with some. No, no. When we turn this point of land we shall near the light house. Let us keep the light burning and keep up the watch, for we are nearing the end of all things. Let us take heed lest we be led away with the error of the wicked, and so fall from our own steadfastness. Christ is not divided; he is not at war with his own predictions; neither is Christ and Baal united. There are many spirits gone out into the world. Let us try the spirits, and try them by the word. That is the only standard; and they that are not willing to come to the light, or word, are not of God. "Sanctify them, through the truth, thy word is truth." Amen.

I would not give up my position, as far as truth is concerned, for all this world, nor deny God in my experience for fifteen years past. He has not shown us these things to destroy us. Let us act in conformity to our faith. God has blessed his own word. This past winter, I have seen God in truth. I have seen stout hearts bend, and have often been refreshed while hearing the young converts express their joy, and old saints bless God for the truth of the kingdom. I long to be there.

Temperance Pledge.

I heartily and cheerfully sign my name to that pledge. Yes, tea, coffee and tobacco flee from me forever. I believe in keeping the temple of the Holy Ghost undefiled. I ask, can we do this when our bodies are filled with tobacco, snuff, and many other things that tend to destroy our reason and cause us many times to say and do those things that grieve away the Holy Spirit? If those things cause us to grieve away the Holy Spirit, is it right for us to use them? The question will be answered in the negative by every mind that is not so far destroyed by their use that they cannot discern good from evil. Then why will you still persist in their use?

You take a quid of tobacco from your mouth and bow before the Lord and ask him to help you to retain your reason and your memory, and arise from your knees and put another quid of that poison in your mouth that is fast destroying both reason and memory. Do you think God will be mocked in that way? I tell you, he will not. If you want God to help you to retain them, arise and cast that poison from your mouth forever, and I will guarantee that God will answer your prayer. You preach self-denial, and you yourselves are slaves to such passions and lusts. Can sinners have confidence in you? Many times we see the preacher as soon as he has finished his sermon, and while he is waiting to hear his brethren speak of the goodness of God, and exhort sinners to deny themselves and take up their cross and follow Jesus, take from his pocket a box, and from thence a quid. Is it right?

Well, I hear you say that you have got in such a habit of it that you can't break off. "Where there's a will, there's a way." Then don't try to have a person that is in the habit of swearing stop it, for with the same propriety could he say that he was so in the habit of it that he could not stop. You say you don't believe in learning "old dogs new tricks." Then don't exhort that old person who is in the habit of loving and serving Satan, to love and serve the Lord; for, according to your doctrine, you must not learn "old dogs new tricks."

You love the Crisis, and think you cannot part with it, but if Bro. Grant knew how much you spent for tea, coffee, tobacco and snuff, which are killing you so fast, I fear that he would not send it to you free, or wait so long for his pay as he does. Come, now, be men, be women, be christians in very deed. Practice as well as preach. Sign the "temperance pledge," and "abstain from every appearance of evil," and you will enjoy better health and be better christians. Promise the God of heaven that you will never again grieve the Holy Spirit by using tea, coffee, tobacco, or snuff; and may God help you to keep your promise.

Information Obtained.

Bro. Grant:—Some time ago, you recollect that your humble correspondent and a certain excellent Bro. "J. P., Jr." were slightly befogged as to the opinion held by certain Adventists, concerning the nature and destiny of man. After repeated calls for "information," I was referred to the lucubrations of a Congregational brother, and the fortifications of a learned professor, and given to understand that, if they could'nt convince or inform me, my case was a hopeless one, as far at least as Bro. P.'s efforts were concerned.

Well, so I was as blind as ever in the pursuit of knowledge under difficulties, trying to find out just what this important opinion was. I had nearly despaired of obtaining any information on the point until now. But "Eureka!"—"I have found it!" and now you shall have it. I have before me a most valuable and instructive little work of about sixteen 18 mo. pages, entitled, "Principles of Divine Truth believed and maintained by the Advent Church of Philadelphia.—Basis of Church Union and Church Order. Wm. S. Young Printer, 52 N. Sixth St. 1858."

There is no author's name appended, but as Eld. J. Litch is a resident there, and was once pastor of this church, it is probable that this document is sanctioned by very good authority. It contains some sixteen different heads of faith, and about nine or ten more of rules and directions. It is a very instructive summary of truth and duty in the main.

"Of Man."

Ha! ha! a wise teacher truly; around asking folks to go to heaven and be happy; and cannot tell them where it is; wise, truly. The christian asked the priest,—You say some after death go to the region of the Towadas; where is this country? "There I am caught," said the priest. A wag standing by, said, "I can tell you, Teacher; it is close by your heaven; just this side of it."

The Methodist minister above alluded to, in preaching the funeral sermon, quoted from Dr. Dick's Astronomy to inform us where heaven was, but brought no testimony from the Bible in determining the matter.

I frequently hear testimony from our opponents that is encouraging to us. We often observe when our brethren begin to labor in a new field, how almost every one begin to study their Bibles, to see whether these things are so. Many have said that there has been more studying of the Bible here during the few weeks [illegible] of our brethren, [illegible] years before. A man who has embraced a part of the doctrines we hold, and is investigating the rest (a physician) says, that he "thought the doctrine seemed like blasphemy at first, but when he observed that we relied upon the Scriptures in support of our views, and that we manifested a much better spirit than our opponents, he was led to investigate our position, and has, as far as he has investigated, found it scriptural and reasonable.

Let us use the truth as not abusing it. Let us not "hold the truth in unrighteousness," but as "it is in Jesus."

A Child's Logic.

In the vicinity of D———, lived a poor, but industrious man, depending for support upon his daily labor. His wife fell sick, and not being able to confine himself to hire a nurse, he was obliged to confine himself to the sick bed and family. His means of support being thus cut off, he soon found himself in need. Having a wealthy neighbor near, he determined to go and ask for two bushels of wheat with a promise to pay as soon as his wife became well enough to leave, so that he could return to his work. Accordingly, he took his bag, went to his neighbor's and arrived there while they were at family prayers.

As he sat on the door-stone, he heard the man pray very earnestly that God would clothe the naked, feed the hungry, relieve the needy, and comfort all that mourn. The prayer concluded, the poor man stepped in and made known his business, promising to pay with the avails of his first labors. The farmer was very sorry he could not accommodate him, but he had promised to lend a large sum of money, and had depended upon his wheat to make it out; but he presumed neighbor A——— would let him have it.

With a tearful eye and a sad heart the poor man turned away. As soon as he left the house the farmer's little son stepped up and said,

"Father, did you not pray that God would clothe the naked, feed the hungry, relieve the distressed, and comfort the mourners?"

"Yes, why?"

"Because, father, if I had your wheat I would answer that prayer."

It is needless to add that the christian father called back the suffering neighbor, and gave him as much as he needed.—Hartford Religious Herald.

For the Crisis.

"Christian Union."

EDITOR OF THE CRISIS:—Dear Bro.,—I was much pleased with the article on "Christian Union," by "Ho Tis," published in your issue of the 17th inst. A divided church can never convert the world. The union prayer meetings everywhere prevalent at the present time, crowned so largely with the Divine blessing, are an admission on the part of the denominationalists of the weakness of division and the strength of union.

Out of this glorious truth so forcibly stated grows up naturally and beautifully the local acting church. I shall wait with interest for the next article.

In the mean time will you have the goodness to give the enclosed declaration of sentiment a place in the Crisis, and much oblige,

Your brother in Christ,

D———s.

Martinsburgh, March 26th, '58.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

At a meeting of christians residing in Martinsburgh and vicinity, held in the Court House on the 24th day of October, 1857, the following declarations were unanimously adopted:

1st. Christ is the door of the Church; [Jno. 10, 9, and 14, 6 Acts 2, 47] the evidence of membership being found in the spirit manifested, [Rom. 8, 9 and 14] the fruit borne, [Luke 6, 44; Rom. 14, 17 and 18.] Hence to be a christian, is to be in the visible Church. We know of no invisible Church on earth.

2d. The Church in any given locality embraces all the christians in said locality. [Rom. 1: 7 and 12, 4 to 5; 1 Cor. 1: 2 and 12, 13; Eph. 1: 1.]

3d. The word of God, as contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, is a sufficient rule of faith, practice, and discipline. [2 Tim. 3: 16 to 17.] Acting in accordance with the truth as above set forth, we discard all divisional arrangements that exist among the christians of Martinsburgh, and recognize in every child of God, a member of the Church, between whom and us there subsists all the mutual obligations of love, fellowship, and watch-care, which the Gospel enjoins. [Matt. 18: 15 to 17; Jno. 13, 34 and 35, and 15, 12; Rom. 12: 5, and 14: 1, also 15: 1; and 1 Cor. 12: 25 to 27; Eph. 4: 1 to 3; Thess. 4: 9 and 10.]

Committing ourselves to the keeping and guidance of our Covenant God, we extend the hand of impartial fellowship to all the lovers of Christ, and affectionately call upon them to aid in restoring the Church to that oneness for which the Savior prayed, [Jno. 17: 20 to 23] and which the Apostle enjoins, [1 Cor. 1: 10 to 13, and 3: 3 to 4] that the world may believe that Christ was sent of the Father, his kingdom be built up, and God glorified.

A meeting to elect the officers of the Church of Martinsburgh, and transact such other business as may claim attention, will be held at the Court House, on Saturday, the seventh day of November, at 1 o'clock, P. M. All the christians of Martinsburgh and vicinity are solicited to be present.

On Sabbath P. M., the dying of the Lord Jesus will be commemorated.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 26, 1858.

Danielsonville.

This is a very pleasant village on the Norwich and Worcester R. R., in the town of West Killingly, Ct. Lord's day, May 16th, was pleasantly spent in this place among a happy company of the followers of Christ. They have just completed a neat chapel, thirty feet wide and fifty long, which was dedicated to the Lord, free from debt. They have seats for three hundred persons. Many were unable to get into the house during the day. At noon seven were buried with Christ in baptism, and others are now waiting an opportunity. These make forty-six that we have baptized in this place during the last few months. In the evening between fifty and sixty sat down to the table of the Lord to commemorate his death and sufferings. It was a solemn and interesting season. We know of no church more prosperous than the one in Danielsonville. Dr. Huntington, from Brooklyn, who preaches a part of the time in this place, was present, and assisted in the services of the day. The prospect for the church in Danielsonville is very encouraging. They are taking measures to have a Sabbath School and Bible class. We have seldom found more self-sacrificing brethren and sisters than in this place. Their prayer meetings are well attended, and the time interestingly improved.

By the way, we would urge upon all of our readers the importance of sustaining their prayer meetings at this season. More backslide in the Spring and fore part of Summer than in any other part of the year. Do not let your seat be vacant at the house of prayer, nor your voice silent when there. Better to stay away from the preaching, if you cannot go to both.

Revival in California.

We learn that the great revival has begun with deep interest in almost every town in California, and is also spreading with power in Europe. It seems that this wave of mercy is passing over all lands where the gospel is preached, giving all nations an invitation to come to the marriage supper of the Lamb. A sad scene awaits the man or woman who refuses to accept the great offer of life through Jesus alone. Truly we can say to the people, "whoever will," "let him . . . come." Why will not men and women obey the Lord and be saved? Oh! what madness! what folly! Soon it will be too late to obtain mercy.

What should we think of the criminal upon the scaffold, who would refuse the governor's pardon? But his pardon would only add a few more weary days to this short life; but the Lord's pardon secures eternal life, where all are forever free from pain and sorrow; and yet our foolish race hesitate about accepting the mercy offered. Sinner, backslider, come to Christ and live. Decide now—this day, before you lay this aside. Let us meet in Paradise.

To-Day.

It is a fact, not known perhaps to all of our readers, that the word seemeron, rendered "to-day," in Luke 23: 43, may be rendered now, according to ancient Greek usage; but it is not so rendered, either in the Septuagint of the Old Testament, neither is it once thus rendered in the New Testament. The word is found 212 times in the Old, and 41 times in the New Testament; and is rendered, "this day," and "to-day," in every passage.

Prayer.

"What knowest thou, O wife, whether thou shalt save thy husband."—1 Cor. 7: 16.

Most of the children of the family had become hopefully pious. But the father, at the age of 65, was yet without God and without hope in the world. He was a moral man, and seemed near the kingdom of heaven, but still did not enter it. He had seen prosperity and adversity—had passed through several revivals of religion. And all this time his conversion had been a subject of much solicitude and prayer to his wife; but with no visible effect.

At length she proposed to the children, at home and abroad, to unite with her in prayer for him, at a certain hour of the day. This family concert was observed, and still no visible effects. The faith of some of the children began to fail; but not so the mother's. Her faith grew stronger and more importunate. Her spirit had no rest. One night after they had retired, she expressed in a few words her concern for him. He gave but an indifferent answer, and fell asleep. She arose in the fulness of an anxious heart, and returning to the sitting-room, raked open a bed of coals, and spent the night in prayer. It was in the month of February. As the morning approached she fell into the following train of reflections: "I have borne this burthen forty years; I can carry it no farther: it is too heavy for me. I must roll it off on God. I feel that I have done! I cannot change his heart. I can't convert him, however much I distress myself. Perhaps I have sinned in distressing myself as I have. God may have seen in me the want of a simple reliance on him, or the want of a true and absolute submission to his will. He may have seen me unwilling or afraid to commit the matter of my husband's salvation entirely to him. But I feel that I must and do thus commit it to him now. I will afflict myself no more. I shall still pray for him, and use such means as may seem advisable; but, saved or lost, I leave the result with God."

In the morning, after breakfast, finding him alone, she addressed him in a few kind but earnest words, respecting the prospect of their speedy and eternal separation, and closed by saying—"And now I have this one request to make—devote this day to the concerns of the soul—devote it to reflection and prayer. If you cannot do it for your own sake, do it to oblige me." Struck with her decisive manner, he said, decisively, "I will." She saw no more of him till quite night, when he returned sad and thoughtful. The next day he again disappeared, and was gone till evening. He returned thoughtful, but calm and serene. "I do not know," said he, "what has ailed me to-day; my feelings have been unusual, and, indeed, very strange. It has seemed to me this afternoon as if every thing was changed. Every thing appeared to speak of God. The trees, the hills, the skies—every thing seemed to praise him. And I felt that I loved everybody. If there is any one that I have hated, it is Mr. G———; but I have felt to-day that I loved him like a brother!"

His heart seemed overflowing with emotions of this kind, as new and strange to him as the expression of them was to his astonished and rejoicing, yet trembling wife.

Who will go and do likewise? Are there not many wives with unbelieving partners, who may be encouraged and quickened to effort by such an example? Who knows but that they may save their husbands instrumentally?—Power of Grace.

For the Crisis.

Watch!

"Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame;" for our blessed Savior has told us that he would come as a thief in the night; but not upon the righteous, my brethren, for if we are of that class he will not come as a thief to us. For such will exclaim, "This is our God; we have waited for him." And we shall rejoice in him, and be exceeding glad. If our hope was ever bright it is now.

My brethren and sisters, if those words were ever realized it is now, where the Apostle Paul says, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." We need not wonder at all when we see these things take place. I feel for one that God's word is true, and through his grace I will go on to the end.

When shall love freely flow,
Pure as life river;
When shall sweet friendship glow,
Changeless forever?"

My dear brethren and sisters, let us love the Lord with pure hearts fervently, and he will save us when he comes.

Your Brother in the Lord,

G. H. SAMPSON.

Extracts from Letters.

SR. L. HILL writes:—"I wish to say that I am refreshed by the communications through the Crisis. We do need to encourage each other's hearts at this peculiar time of temptation and trial. We certainly need to have on the whole armor of God, that we may stand against the wiles of the Devil and be ready to meet the Lord when he comes. My cry is, Lord, help thine unworthy child to resist temptation, to overcome evil with good, evil within and without. O make my heart pure so as to reflect thine own image! Hasten the time when thy children shall have quiet habitations, and sure resting places, and the Lord become King over all the earth! We need some one to come and preach to us. We are looking for Bro. Pratt. May the Lord open the way and prepare him for the work."

——:o:——

BRO. J. P. BABCOCK writes from River Point, R. I.:—"There are some of the preaching Brn. who have fed us here on the pure meat of the word of God who would like to hear from us. I will say that one or two Advent brothers hired the Odd Fellow's Hall here, to commence a series of meetings which continued four weeks with much interest. We had much opposition all around us, by two sects, with a number of ministers preaching against us. They would not meet us on the word. Elders Champlain and Bellows did their duty well. We organized an Advent church, April 6, 1858. We number about sixty members now, and more yet to join. It keeps me in memory of the goodness and willingness of God to save us if we trust in him. Pray for us, that we may live meek and lowly as becomes a people looking and expecting our Lord soon coming."

For the Crisis.

The Cause still onward at River Point.

Our meetings at River Point continued four weeks. Bro. Champlin baptized in all, 29. Some have joined other churches. A church has been organized, numbering, I believe, about 40 members, adopting the creed published in the Crisis. The church of Fishville is about to unite with them, and form one body. The prospect is good before them for accomplishing much for the cause of God.

After the close of the meetings at the Point, we commenced a protracted effort at Fishville, which has resulted in good. Bro. Champlin preached two evenings. I came on Wednesday evening. Bro. Champlin left for the Baltic Mills, to hold a series of meetings. This is a new field of labor, and the prospect is good to raise up a church in this place. Our Bro. preached to crowded houses until his strength failed him, and was obliged to leave for home to rest a few days. He is now able to be in the field again.

I have continued at Fishville three weeks; baptized 16; others are to go forward. Yesterday I was sent for to go into a new place called Central Village, Coventry. Some had been converted. Last evening 7 came forward for prayers. This is a new place. Meetings are held in a large hall that will seat nearly one thousand people. Hope to have it filled. In Natick village there were between 30 and 40 converted last week, in the Advent meetings, without any preaching. The Advent people this way are laboring to save sinners. In one of the meetings at Natick last week, they had 70 exhortations in one hour, almost a heaven below. In all these meetings the old fabled notion of going to heaven at death, and eternal misery, has been shown to be unscriptural, without any foundation in the Bible; and it has been the means of reaching men that nothing else could. The rum shops at Natick have lost nearly all their custom. This is more effectual than the Maine law. Praise the Lord for this great work. May it continue.

Exposition of Isaiah 65: 20.

BY DR. N. HOMES, 1653.

Seeing a call in the Herald from Eld. Loughborough, for light on the meaning of Isa. 65: 20, reminds me of what I have thought of doing for some months past, but have till now neglected—viz. to copy and send for publication in your paper Dr. Homes view of the passage, written more than 200 years ago, which, though old, will, I think, be new to most of your readers, and in my opinion clearly solve a hitherto difficult text. I extract all he says upon the chapter, which, though lengthy, is worth the reading. Dr. H. was a millenarian, and I think you will find by examination that his criticisms on the Hebrew word Kee, rendered "for" in the verse; also his change of the conjunctive "but" into "or," &c., is sustained by the lexicographers, see Frey; also Roy, pp. 355; Pick, pp. 160; Gesenius, pages 457–461.

In answering the inquiry, "What that glorious state on earth shall be at the restitution of all things," Homes says that as to its qualities it will be "Negatively; sinless, sorrowless, deathless, superiorless, temptationless and timeless; and positively; it will be the Restoration of the creation, perfection of all qualities, confidence of all comforts, and preface to eternity." And it is while proving the deathlessness of the millennial age that he gives us the following:—"To deal faithfully with you, there is only one considerable place that I know of relating to the time I speak of that hath something of an intimation of mortality to be in those times, and that is Isa. 65: 20. It clearly relates to the time we speak of, verse 17, 'Behold I create new heavens and new earth,' &c., which Peter refers to this time, 2 Pet. 3: 13, in relation to the promise in Isa. 65. Now the 20th verse, our translators have rendered thus, 'There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: For the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.' Now as far as I can see into languages and the context, these words, 'for the child shall die,' &c., may be more fitly translated 'that the child should die,' &c., 'For the word Kee, in the Hebrew, is exceeding often used,—yea, and so rendered by translators—to signify that as we have here rendered it. As for turning shall into should, it is not worth the mentioning before a grammarian, who knows that the word so rendered will infer that the verb speaks subjunctively. Now read the words so easily altered in the English, and without the least violence to the Hebrew, and the meaning will be quite contrary to any intimation of the mortality of the saints in this glorious time of the thousand years. For according as we have translated, the sense will run clearly thus—'There shall be no more thence (or from that time, viz. the beginning of the thousand years of the new creation,) an infant of days, or an old man that hath not filled his days, that the child, (or young man) should die at an hundred years,' &c. So that here is no mention of the mortality of the saints, but of their immortality. Which for further clearing of the text may be made out two ways.—

"1. Thus; He that is an hundred years old in those days is but [naar. Prof. Pick defines it 'lad, young man, youth,' T] a youth or young man as our old translation renders it. For as a youth hath but the tenth part of that age which many men live in these days, so an hundred years are but the tenth of this millenary time of life to the inheritors thereof. Again, as in the first age of the world, wherein Adam lived, one of an hundred years old was but a young man to one at his full age, i. e. 930 years, (near 1000,) even so in this millenary age of the new creation, one of an hundred years is but a young man to the thousand years that he shall reign with Christ on earth, so that the sense of the prophet may fairly be taken to be this, that in the time of this new creation, as the young man must not have his days cut off, so the old man must fulfill his days. And how are both these accomplished in this new creation but by their both living on earth a thousand years, old and young reigning with all the saints on the earth? When I speak of old and young, you must understand those saints that are found alive at Christ's coming, which are changed; for all the deceased saints are raised to an equal perfection, and absolute maturity of age and nature; even as the other are changed into the same exactness, though at Christ's appearing differing in age. So that we may well understand the prophet to allude to the age of the first Adam, that if in a sinful state his age at a hundred years was but as it were youth, his whole age amounting to near a thousand years, how much more shall the saints by means of the second Adam live a thousand years in a sinless condition?

"2. It may congruously be made out, that the prophet in this text intends rather the immortality of the saints than their mortality, thus: 'There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days, that the child, youth or young man should die an hundred years old, or the sinner an hundred years old should be accursed. 'Thus we read the whole verse to the time or sound of (Kee) that as before we rendered it turning our English but in the latter clause into or, the Hebrew being the conjunction which, as Mr. Mede says, being like materia prima, capable of innumerable forms of signification, may well be so rendered here. And then the sense will be this, that at the time of the new creation there shall be neither he who shall naturally die in his infancy, nor he that shall naturally die in his riper age before he hath made up his full days, nor he that shall be a sinner whereby his days should be violently cut off.

"3. If it may better please some, they may read it to this sense, that at that time and glorious estate, though the old sinner shall be cut off, yet no saint neither young or old shall die at all. All these ways of reading the text in favor of the immortality of the saints the word "thence" doth much animate and justify, as if the prophet should say thus—Within this new creation, while it endures, there shall no mortal person be found, though all the transgressors, the enemies thereof, that are without it shall be cut off at its very beginning, even as we have largely amplified before upon sundry occasions.

"But if we launch out into the context as we promised before, to wade into the depth of the precedent and subsequent coherence or dependence of this text, our reading of the words and rendering of the sense of it for the immortality of saints will be made much more perspicuous. First, it is said in verse 17, Behold I create new heavens and a new earth, (alluding, no doubt, to the first creation of the world) and the former shall not be remembered (viz. for their meanness by reason of man's sin) nor literally in the Heb. 'ascend upon you,' That is, the imperfections of the former state of things should not touch them when they should attain this new state, one of the main imperfections of their former state being mortality; it being the sad memorial and effect of sin. Therefore to the removal of this the prophet mainly refers.

"Second; it is said in verse 18, 'Be ye glad and rejoice, age to age, or forever in that I create,' which cannot consist with death, or death with it, which quencheth natural joy and also moral joy.

"Third; it is said in verse 19, 'I the Lord will rejoice in Jerusalem and joy in my people, and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her nor the voice of crying.' Now if sorrow must be gone that it shall be no more, then I think there shall be no more death.

"Fourth; in the 20th verse itself it is strange that according to our English there should be mentioned the death of saints and not the death of the wicked, of whom it is only said he shall be accursed. And what does this atheistical creation care for that? The curse in Gen. 2 was 'In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt die,' i. e. be mortal, liable to death. It is death that strikes a dart through the lives of a wicked man.

"Fifth; it is said in verse 22, 'they shall not build and another inhabit,' which is the case while mortality reigns. Mark the reason; 'for as the days of a tree are the days of my people' (Sept. 'tree of life,' T) and many sorts of trees live a thousand years. And surely trees in paradise lived as long. And in this time is the tree of life, Rev. 21.

"And Sixth, in verse 22 it follows, 'And mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.' How do they enjoy them long, if no longer than heretofore in the reign of mortality? It is a promise, and all these plainly justify my reading of this text to cast out mortality from the saints.

"And that I may seem the less presumptuous and singular in this, and withal add something for illustration, give me leave to show you other famous translations.—First, the Arabic renders Isa. 65: 20 thus—'Neither shall there be any more a young man imperfect in age, nor an old man that shall not fulfill his time. For the young man shall fill up an hundred years, but the sinner that after an hundred years dies, shall be accursed.' Observe, this translation casts out mortality from the saints and applies it to sinners, simply by not regarding the commen pointing of the Hebrew by which points ofttimes we suffer much. Second; the seventy Greek translators render it to the same effect, * 'Neither shall there be any more one that is not ripe (i. e. in age) nor an old man that hath not fulfilled his time, for the young man shall be an hundred years old, but the sinner that dies an hundred years old shall be accursed.'

Observe here, as with the Arabic.

"Third, the Chaldee paraphrase also favors our reading, though it differs a little from the Arabic and Greek,—'And there shall not be any more an infant of days, and an old man that fills not his days, because the youth that offends at the age of a hundred years shall die, and he that transgresseth in the age of a hundred years shall be banished,' which is to our purpose to signify that the sinners, not the saints shall die at this glorious time.

But do I stretch the sense of the Chaldee paraphrase? To answer this, and to give you a further account of the sense of that place according to the opinion of the church at Geneva, and of the Rabbins, hear the great critic Ludovick De Dieu, in his animadversions on the place, bring in his report of their opinions. He says, 'I see they of Geneva do refer this same thence to time, translating De la en avant, from henceforward. But Rabbi D. Kimchi refers it to Jerusalem, saying thence, that is from Jerusalem, Vatablus and Junius follow, and I think ought to be followed. Moreover they of Geneva translate the rest as if the sense of the Hebrew was this—At that time so great shall be the length of men's lives that he that is now an old man shall be counted as the infant. And I see the Hebrews as R. D. Kimchi and Sol Jarchi in their commentaries, yea and Jonathan in his Chal. Par., take the sense of this place to be—that no man at that time shall be carried out of Jerusalem for burial who is but a boy, no, nor an old man, unless he h th filled up his day, that is, lived to that length of life which men had before the flood.' Thus for De Dieu's report of the Genevenses, the Hebrews, and the Chaldee Paraphrase, which how closely they concur with us I need not multiply words to open the intelligent eye.

"As for De Dieu's own opinion upon the place though he looks upon the earthly hopes of the Jews to be but dreams, yet he says,—We interpret the text as meaning, at that time there shall be another manner of the state of the world than there is at present. For in this world many die infants, others as it were old men of sixty or seventy years of age; few finish their just space of life to attain to an hundred years old. But there shall be the same condition of all whether of young or old; for all shall fully make up their days. The prophet proves it, 'For the child shall die a hundred years old,' that is, a child shall die a child, but shall fulfill the due span of life—"But the sinner a hundred years old shall be accursed i. e., shall be a child will be happier in the kingdom of Christ than an old man in the kingdom of the world: for a child in the kingdom of Christ shall attain a blessed, or beatified perfection of life. But the sinner in the kingdom of the world shall be accursed even while he seems to have attained a perfection of life.'

*Thompson's Sept. renders it,—"Nor shall there any more be an untimely birth, nor an old man who shall not complete his term; for he who is a hundred years old shall be young, and the sinner who dieth at an hundred years shall be accursed.'

Brenton's Sept.—"Neither shall there be any more a child that dies untimely, or an old man who shall not complete his time, for the youth shall be a hundred years old, and the sinner who dies at a hundred years shall also be accursed." D. T.

"Thus much for De Dieu's own opinion. By which, (suppose we consent to all he says,) how far he carried us from where we were? He says he knows these things of the Messiah's kingdom shall be spiritual. We say so too. The efficient cause, the form, the manner, the end shall be spiritual, and the enjoyment shall be spiritualized. But men's souls and bodies shall not be altered in kind; otherwise they were not men. And the earth shall be earth—an earth though renovated, else how is it called a new earth? And upon this must Christ's kingdom exist, for he shall have none in the supremest heavens after this on earth, 1 Cor. 15: 24-28. And De Dieu confesses that in the kingdom of Christ shall be happiness. I say no more: let the reader judge."

—Adv. Herald.

A Bath in the Dead Sea!—Plunging into the Dead Sea, Mr. W. C. Prime reports is not agreeable! He says:

"If there were words to express an agony that no one has experienced, I would use them here. I cannot conceive worse torture than that plunge caused me. Every inch of my skin smarted and stung as if a thousand nettles had been whipped over it. My face was as if dipped in boiling oil, the skin under my hair and beard was absolute fire, my eyes were balls of anguish, and my nostrils hot as the nostrils of Lucifer. I howled with pain, but I suspended when I heard Whitley's voice. He had swallowed some of the water, and coughed it up into his nose and the tubes under his eyes. The effect was to overcome all pain elsewhere while that torture endured. It came near being a serious matter with him, and as it was, his voice suffered for a week, his eyes and nose were inflamed as if with a severe cold, and the dain continued severe for several days. Recovering our feet with difficulty, we stood pictures of despair, not able to open our eyes, and increasing the pain by every attempt we made to rub them with our wet arms or hands."

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Revival.

IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE.

There are very few of our readers who hve any conception of the great revival which is still in progressi n all parts of our land. From all we can learn, the work is still going on without any apparent abatement. The Congregationalist of this week, a most excellent and reliable religious journal, by the way, contains over seven columns of brief reports of revivals from 156 towns and cities; 151 of which are in New England, and 125 in Massachusetts. The record embraces, with one or two exceptions, Orthodox Congregationalist Churches only. The aggregate figures of these reports, which apply to the above named denomination only, are as follows: No. of conversions 11,000; deducting the number which are mentioned as having occurred in the West, there remain about 9500 for New ngland, and not far from 7800 for Massachusetts. It will be noticed that the whole number of places heard from is 156. There are in Massachusetts alone over three hundred towns. It will be seen, therefore, that if the whole state had been heard from, to say nothing about Vermont, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Connecticut, the number would have been greatly augmented. Add to this the conversions among other denominations, especially the Baptist and Methodist, both of which have shared very largely in the work, and the number of conversions would have swelled up to forty or fifty thousand in New England alone. Surely may we exclaim, What hath God wrought?

The results of the revival have not been confined, exclusively, to the church. Nearly every reformatory movement has been benefitted. The temperance reform has, especially, gained much strength. Whole towns have been purged of grog shops. Hotels and saloons where liquors have been freely sold, have been changed into places of prayer. Drunkards have been reclaimed in large numbers. As in Newburyport, so in other places, crime has been greatly diminished. It is impossible to compute the immense benefits and advantages which society will derive both in morals and religion, from this great awakening. Every good citizen will rejoice in this, whether he believes in revivals or not. It is cheering to know that this work is still onward.—While we are writing, thousands are beginning the new life, and there is reason to believe that the time is far distant when the work will cease.

We give below some statements relating to the revival in Boston among Orthodox Congregational churches, and in a few days we hope to be able to report progress among the churches of other denominations.

In the Bowdoin street church, which is still without a pastor, there have been twelve or fifteen conversions. In the Central church, Rev. Mr. Richards pastor, there have been many inquirers, and from fifteen to twenty conversions. In the Essex street church the revival has been more powerful. Probably from thirty to fifty have been hopefully converted, and the interest still continues. The Mariner's church, Rev. Mr. Kellogg, pastor, has been greatly respered. About forty sailors have given evidence of a change of heart, and have gone to sea. Four have been propounded for admission into the church. About fifty in all have been converted. The young men from the Christian Association have rendered very efficient aid in the meetings at this church. Last Sabbath evening thirty-five were present from Mt. Vernon and Essex street churches. Prayer meetings are held every morning and every evening during the week. In Mount Vernon church there have been about one hundred conversions, though many more have conversed with the pastor on the subject of religion. In the Maverick church, East Boston, without a pastor, there have been about fifteen conversions, four of whom were heads of families. In the Old South Church, Rev. Dr. Blagden and Rev. J. M. Manning, pastors, new cases of inquiry and conversion are occuring every week. The meetings are full and solemn. About thirty have been converted among the stated worshippers, besides a number of wayfaring persons who have dropped in accidentally.

In Park street the work has been very interesting. The conversions among the Park street people will not probably number over a hundred, but many others from the country and other churches in the city of different denominations have been converted at the meetings or under the influence of preaching at that place. In Pine street, Rev. H. M. Dexter pastor, it is thought the converts will amount to over sixty. Some heads of families and some quite young persons are among the number. In the Phillips Church, South Boston, there have been fifteen or seventeen conversions. A daily morning prayer meeting is held at this church at 5 o'clock A. M. In the Shawmut church, Rev. Mr Smith pastor, some thirty or forty have been converted. This makes all the Orthodox Congregational Churches, except the church of the unity in South Boston, Rev Mr. Porter pastor, from which we have no information

In giving the figures above, we have not, of course, attempted to be exact. In some cases we know the figures are much below the actual facts. It is not well to be too hasty or too particular in recording conversions, yet an acknowledgement of the power of God's grace in the various churches, serves to encourage all those who are interested to promote the revival.—Traveller.

—Elder Pike, of Newburyport, says there are more than 1500 preachers and 150,000 communicants connected with the churches of the Christian order in the United States. The Herald of Gospel Liberty is in its fiftieth year. The Christians do not profess to be either Unitarians or Trinitarians. Their creed is the Bible, and their test of fellowship, Christian character. They consider their system of church government that of Christ and the apostles. They are in sentiment Unitarians and Baptists, but do not like to be called by either of these names.

Tremendous Tornado.—St. Louis, May 15. A violent tornado blew the passenger train of the Alton and St. Louis Railroad off the track at Lexington, Mo., on Thursday night, and several persons were seriously injured. The towns of Lexington and Peoria, at the junction of Towanda, also suffered, half the houses in them being prostrated. At Towanda three men were killed. Yesterday another storm of like character passed over the region between Bloomington and Springfield, doing much damage. A large number of houses in Elkhart and Williamsville were demolished, one of them falling in and killing five persons.

ITEMS.

The Thirty-Second State.—Minnesota has just been admitted into the American Union, making another free State. The climate, soil and people, resemble New England more than any other State of the North-West.

A writer in an exchange paper says:—"I do not believe there is a church in existence (aside from the Romish,) in which, if we could get the candid belief, we should not find that nine out of ten are believers in Spiritualism; but they dare not own their belief."

—At last accounts the grasshoppers were committing serious ravages in Western Texas. In several counties they had completely destroyed the growing crops. The planters, though greatly disheartened, were in hopes that the devouring insects would leave early in May, in which case they may make tolerable crops of cotton and corn, as the prospects otherwise were never better.

Express from Camp Scott.—Fort Leavenworth, May 13.—An express has just arrived from Camp Scott, with advices of April 10th, and highly important intelligence.

The Mormons are all leaving Salt Lake City for the White River Mountains, and Gov. Cumming had gone to the Mormon capital by special invitation.

Obituary.

Died, in Laporte, Ind., May 12th, 1858, Amos P. Wells, aged 43 years.

It is with deep sorrow that we are called to announce the death of our beloved brother. In consequence of a protracted illness, the friends of the deceased were not taken altogether by surprise. There was but little encouragement that life would be protracted for any length of time. As the symptoms were favorable or unfavorable, there was an alternation of hope and fear. The nature of the disease, however, was of such a character, that a permanent cure was out of the question. All that could be done was to administer some simple medicine that would, in part, act as a tonic, and thus smooth the rough path of disease, and favor, with a gentle descent to the tomb, him whom death had marked as its victim. He continued to fail until Wednesday, May 12th, when he fell "Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,

From which none ever wakes to weep."

It is not necessary to pronounce an eulogy upon our brother, or hold up his virtues to community. His integrity, his benevolence, and his christian character, are known to all with whom he associated. In his death the church has lost one of its most devoted and faithful members. May God have mercy on his dear companion and children. May they be sustained under this bereavement, and while called to pass through severe afflictions, may the richest of Heaven's blessings attend them now, and also through all the vicissitudes of this life, till, finally, husband and wife, parents and children, shall meet to part no more. F. H. B.

Died in So. Hope, Me., March 25th, of scarlet fever and canker rash, John Noyes, son of Merrill W. and Catherine Payson, aged two years, seven months and two days.

This is the third time these afflicted parents have been called to mourn the loss of their offspring; two little girls have been taken, and now the only son. Little Johnny was a remarkably interesting child, active and sprightly beyond his years. His memory will long be cherished by a large circle of relatives, among whom he was a general favorite. No more shall we see his sunny face, no more will his childish prattle greet his parents' ear. But why mourn, sorrowing mother, and refuse to be comforted? "Thus saith the Lord; refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy." May the blessing of God rest upon the father, the two sisters, and the weeping mother, who deeply feel the loss of one so lovely. May you be faithful till the end, and at last find a home in heaven,

"Where no tear will ever fall,
Nor heart be sad;
Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Amelia Crabtree.

The Maine Conference of Adventists.

This conference is to be holden in Richmond, Reed Meeting-house, to commence on Thursday, 10 o'clock, A. M., June 17th, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that those who are specially interested in the great truths which have called us out as a distinct class, sufficiently see and feel that the cause they have espoused, and which has already benefited so many, demands their continued and more united efforts to sustain and increase the interest upon the all-important theme of the day of the Lord, the judgment, and the kingdom of God at hand. Never, since we became a people, has there been a time when we could labor so understandingly and effectually as now. Let us try to unite all our strength given by the Lord, and encourage all who are inclined to the truth. Come, brethren, all who can consistently, and let us see each other again in the flesh; talk, pray, sing, and consult how we may best act to save our fellow men and ourselves by the instrumentalities God has put in our hands. The meeting is 2 miles from the Rail Road station and from steamboat wharf. Those coming from the North can arrive at 12 M. Those from the South and West at 3 P. M. Should any endeavor to come Wednesday, brethren in the vicinity, though few, will do all they can to provide for them, and will furnish pasturing for the horses. As this meeting is intended for the benefit of the cause generally, in all parts of the State, churches and lay brethren should furnish means to defray the expenses of the ministers, or come prepared to contribute at the meeting; as those in the place will do all their duty in taking care of those who come, and they will be glad to see all who can come. Call for Eld. I. C. Wellcome, at the village, or David Robinson, Low Curtis, or John Umberhind in the vicinity.

We take the liberty to sign the names to this call of several of our ministers whom we know to be anxious for the meeting, as time has not permitted us to notify them of its arrangement. Will all other ministers interested, send their names to the offices to be added?

Poetry.

THE CHANGED CROSS.

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, saith the Lord."—Isaiah lv: 8.

"For I know the thoughts that I think towards you—thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end."—Jer. xxix: 11.

And when that happy time shall come, of endless peace and rest,
We shall look back upon our path and say—It was the best.

It was a time of sadness, and my heart,
Although it knew and felt the better part,
Felt wearied with the conflict and the strife,
And all the needful discipline of life.

And while I thought on these as given to me—
My trial tests of faith and love to be—
It seemed as if I never could be sure
That faithful to the end I should endure.

And thus no longer trusting to His might,
Who says, "we walk by faith, and not by sight,"
Doubting, and almost yielding to despair,
The thought arose—my cross I cannot bear.

Far heavier its weight must surely be
Than those of others which I daily see;
Oh! if I might another burden choose,
Methinks I should not fear my crown to lose.

A solemn silence reigned on all around—
E'en Nature's voices uttered not a sound;
The evening shadows seemed of peace to tell,
And sleep upon my weary spirit fell.

A moment's pause, and then a heavenly light
Beamed full upon my wondering, raptured sight;
Angels on silvery wings seemed everywhere,
And angel's music thrilled the balmy air.

Then One, more fair than all the rest to see—
One to whom all others bowed the knee—
Came gently to me as I trembling lay,
And, "Follow me," He said, "I am the way."

Then speaking thus, He led me far above;
And there, beneath a canopy of love,
Crosses of divers shape and size were seen,
Larger and smaller than my own had been.

And one there was most beauteous to behold—
A little one, with jewels set in gold;
Ah! this methought, I can with comfort wear,
For it will be an easy one to bear.

And so the little cross I quickly took,
But all at once my frame beneath it shook;
The sparkling jewels fair were they to see,
But far too heavy was their weight for me.

This may not be, I cried, and looked again,
To see if there was any here could ease my pain;
But one by one I passed them slowly by,
Till on a lovely one I cast my eye.

Fair flowers around its sculptured form entwined,
And grace and beauty seemed in it combined;
Wondering, I gazed, and still I wondered more
To think so many should have passed it o'er.

But, oh! that form so beautiful to see,
Soon made its hidden sorrows known to me;
Thorns lay beneath those flowers and colors fair:
Sorrowing, I said, "This cross I may not bear."

And so it was with each and all around—
Not one to suit my need could there be found;
Weeping, I laid each heavy burden down,
As my Guide gently said, "No cross, no crown!"

At length to Him I raised my saddened heart:
He knew its sorrows, bid its doubts depart.
"Be not afraid," He said, "but trust in me—
My perfect love shall now be shown to thee."

And then, with lightened eyes and willing feet,
Again I turned my earthly cross to meet,
With forward footsteps, turning not aside,
For fear some hidden evil might betide.

And there, in the prepared, appointed way—
Listening to hear and ready to obey—
A cross I quickly found of plainest form,
With only words of love inscribed thereon.

With thankfulness I raised it from the rest,
And joyfully acknowledged it the best—
The only one of all the many there
That I could feel was good for me to bear.

And while I thus my chosen one confessed,
I saw a heavenly brightness on it rest;
And as I bent, my burden to sustain,
I recognized my own old cross again!

But, oh! how different did it seem to be
Now I had learned its preciousness to see!
No longer could I unbelieving say,
Perhaps another is a better way.

Ah, no! henceforth my own desire shall be,
That He who knows me best should choose for me;
And so whate'er His love sees good to send,
I'll trust its best, because He knows the end.

A Short Sermon.

[Concluded.]

"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Solomon.

III. The right way.

Now it is both reasonable and just to suppose, from the acknowledged character of the divine Being, that he should give us a way, in his communications with the human family, which should not only "seem right unto a man," but should be right in fact. Without question, God has done this. Did man need a true way? He has given it. Did he need a new way? He has secured it, and a living way. And this is not left to conjecture; it is a plain revelation.

[illegible] of Scripture it is manifest that the intention of the Deity is to afford men a knowledge of a pathway so distinctly marked, that no one need err. Will not his wisdom be found equal to his purpose? Assuredly it will. He has succeeded, and so fully, that he has himself announced to the world the fact.

This being the admitted premise, by all who fully confide in the divine record, a second consideration is that all sober and inquiring minds inquire for that way; yet all sober and inquiring minds do not see the way. The reason is, they proceed as if this was left to the determination of men, as questions of human interest and philosophical investigation are. And withal they seek first to find means to reconcile the way of God with the way of man; i. e., attempt to find a way to future salvation which will allow of human pride and selfish exaltation, or sinful affections, the spirit of the world—a conformity to the world; at the same time they see the importance of conformity to Christ, and would gladly secure the latter if they could retain the former. But God says, "My ways are not as your ways."

A desire to secure the way to the kingdom of God and its results, may be referred to the gracious aid of the Spirit of God, bestowed upon all sincere seekers for truth. But man is not willing to adopt the way the Lord has prepared, and soon becomes unwilling to endorse it. Hence, as he cannot settle down, he begins to look for a way of his own—to invent a plan of escape.

Every man of inquiry, of thought, finds a way that is right unto him. But the way of the Lord, his own chosen and sanctified path, is by Christ alone. There is no other. He hath set him forth the "propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the sins of the world." By him is repentance, by him forgiveness, by him faith, by him hope, by him we have grace to overcome the world, by him we have a resurrection to life, and only by him is immortality.

The right way, then, is by the plan which God has revealed, in Christ, who says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." The way of faith and obedience is so perfect, as to the conscience of man, that he has an entire assurance of being right. He takes up his cross to serve God daily, and is not governed by the sectarian principle which regards no one as right who differs.

From all, we conclude that God has established a way in the gospel, which may be understood, and being understood, will be apprehended as right or true, whether it seems to be so or not. And what wonder that men do not by nature perceive, with the understanding darkened through the ignorance that is in them, the way of God, that it only is right?

IV. The end of the evil way.

All ways but the true way end in death. The sects all, or nearly all, believe in the natural immortality of man. It seemeth right, but the end is death. This the prophet said was a sadness to the heart of the righteous—"promising the wicked life whom God had not promised life." It is a grand deception. God has in no instance said that the wicked should live; but often that he should die. There is a way, the way of living in the future, after the dogma of pagan mythology, that man is immortal, and, therefore, cannot die. Now the natural consequence is, that a man will not seek for immortality. He will not seek for that he feels sure he possesses. What a man seeth himself possessed of, why should he seek for it? He sees, by all the prejudices of his education, by all the convictions of his study, by all the argument of his friends, his minister, the sympathies of his church, his Bible, as he reads it, if he reads it at all, his philosophy—all tell him he is right. The way seemeth to be right to him, but the end is death, for he has no such life. If the conviction that he has deters him from seeking life in Christ, as it will most likely, then he will die, and die under the deception that he had life and could not lose it. So far from his being right, the Son of God says if he will not believe on Christ he shall not see life.

If a man mistake his way, and it seems right, the more danger he will pursue it. If the further he goes, the more confirmed he becomes in the delusion, the more prospect of his going finally astray. If that road ends in ruin, then he will find destruction. It is the wrong way, and will end wrong.

There is but one way to life; that is the way the Lord hath taught in the gospel. There is but one other way. That one ends in death. The Lord has not taught the way by the natural immortality of man, therefore, it is not the right path—he that trusts to that doctrine will find it end in death. Death is resulting continually. It leads men to trust to Universalism. They could not if the way of the immortal soul did not seem right to them. It leads to Spiritualism, which could not exist if men did not admit that the popular soul theory is correct. It leads to views of God's character and plan which are derogatory to his character and justice and dishonorable to his entire being. There is death in the churches, death in the moral nature, death moral and spiritual throughout the land, because the life power is removed; the motive is lost; the vital force paralyzed.

If to seek for life and immortality is the duty of man, and the consequence is eternal life, death being the opposite condition, the man will not seek for immortality, because he says he knows he has that principle and power of living now.—What will be the consequence? Will not his way end in death, however right it may seem to him? Of all this perversion of the great christian doctrine of life, we say, "the end thereof is death!"

It has proved, and will prove, the damnation of millions of the human race.—Death began in error, and this very error, too, which seemed right. It will till truth reigns.

From Bro. G. L. Hart.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to say thro the Crisis to the waiting ones, that I am still with them waiting for redemption. The love of God constrains me to acknowledge the nearness of the event, while casting my eye broadcast over the land.

We are living in perilous times. Will they increase? Will the toil-worn, disappointed ones have more trials? It may be; but the apostle tells us not to think it strange concerning the fiery trial that is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. Praise God, every trial works out for us a far more exceeding, and eternal weight of glory.

O what deception is in the land! The cry of peace proceeds from those who should be warning the world of the coming judgment. They worship at the shrine of worldly honor and human glory, deceiving themselves and those who follow them.

Dear brethren, let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. He that has promised will perform.

Yours, waiting for the return of the Bridegroom,

G. L. Hart.

From Sr. S. H. Young.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I would like to write a few lines for the Crisis, and may heavenly wisdom direct me, so that what I speak may be for the glory of him who spake as never man spake.

Dear brethren and sisters, have we that religion which will enable us to support the weak with a heart filled with love, void of selfishness. Can we go to the erring child of sin, and with yearnings toward him, direct him to the Savior? Can we point him to the Lamb of God and say, believe on Christ and you shall have eternal life? In this day of evil can we set before the people the great and important truths of the gospel, in the spirit of love and meekness.

Oh, brethren and sisters, we need that compassionate heart that will weep with those that weep and feel anothers woes. How should every act of our lives demonstrate to those who do not believe in the near approach of the kingdom of God, that we are looking for the same, and the resurrection of the dead saints of God, and if they refuse to hear, shall it be through strife or vain glorying that we contend for the truth?

And again; my heart has been sorely pained when I have seen the feelings of a brother all crushed and bleeding, by the harsh language of those who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, who, if he reproved, blended love with authority, gentleness, and humility. Oh, that love may be through all my actions, and all my words be mild, so that none may have occasion to say that I have not the spirit of Christ. This is what I believe to be the ground work of religion, without which we can never enter the kingdom of God, which is just at hand. I desire in all things to imitate the example of my Savior and live at his feet, keeping myself unspotted from the world, that I at his appearing may be found without spot or blemish.

Your sister, striving to be an overcomer,

H. S. Young.

WISDOM'S WAYS.

Mortal, is it wisdom now
To neglect to pay thy vow?
Peace or pleasure to pursue,
Will ye choose the false or true?
  Is that hope not false indeed,
  Ever failing thee in need!

See! the children of this age
All their thoughts and powers engage;
In their generation wise,
While the truth and wisdom dies:
  Wiser for this passing day,
  Than which passeth not away.

Prodigal, thine end we see,
Empty for eternity;
Oh! the coming of that night,
Wisdom calls thee—choose the light!
  Life and death before thee wait,
  Enter now the narrow gate.

Seeking for the golden ore,
Do ye lay the dross in store?
Fishers value not the shell,
That which pays their toil so well;
  Costly pearls tempt not the eye,
  Pass the pearl of price not by.

Wisdom's ways in good increase,
Paths of pleasantness and peace;
Youthful sinner—say in truth,
Henceforth do thou guide my youth:
  While gray hairs in meekness bow,
  Pay the oft repeated vow.

Choice Selections.

Apollos;

Or, Directions to Young Christians.

The following is from an interesting little work, published by Gould & Lincoln, 59 Washington Street, Boston.

Remember that the principal duty of a christian, as it respects others, is to excite them to the immediate performance of their religious duty.

Jesus Christ has instituted his church in the world, that through their instrumentality the perishing may be saved. There is no christian but can find some one mind, at least, over which he can have some influence, and if we can do any thing to save others from eternal death, nothing should for a moment prevent our attempting it.

But to perform our duty faithfully in this respect, requires both discretion and some knowledge derived from the experience of others. The following hints, therefore, are added as the result of long experience and observation, and as a sort of guide to those who may be anxious to save a soul from death.

Let your first object be to persuade your friend to give an earnest and immediate attention to the subject. Serious remarks upon religion do not produce much effect, unless some direct object is had in view. Endeavor to persuade your friends to commence the daily reading of the Bible with prayer. Show them that the Holy Spirit operates by means of the truths which we find in the Bible, and which are most forcibly presented to the mind in the solitude and solemnity of closet devotion. The character of the God we are commanded to love, can no more be perceived by a mind that is engrossed by other subjects and turned away from this, than the human eye can perceive the beauties of a picture, when it is not directed towards it. And as it is not only needful, in beholding a picture, that light should shine upon it, but that the eye should be turned to it, so in order that the heart may be sanctified by the truth, it is as needful that the mind should be turned towards it, as that the Holy Spirit should enlighten by his illuminating influences. Always, then, in all your efforts, have this definite end in view, to persuade your friends to spend much time in studying the Bible with prayer.

When this object is secured, then urge he immediate duty of giving the affections of the heart to God. Show them that if they will only love God, they will then feel their guilt in refusing to obey him, and will greatly desire to live for his glory. If they will only love their God and Savior, they will feel that they can trust in the merits of his atoning blood. Do not, for a moment, allow them to feel that performing the outward duties of religion is doing any thing to recommend them to God, but is only a means of making them feel more deeply their immediate obligation to give the affections of their hearts to him, and of realizing the reasonableness of his holy law which requires it. Speak to them as if you really felt that there was no need of any delay, but that they could immediately perform what God requires; and, in order to do this, endeavor to have a deep and realizing sense of this truth yourself. If they complain of their inability, or of the difficulty they find in performing their duty, show them that it is because they have so long forgotten and neglected these things, and formed such bad habits, that though it has really become difficult, it is a difficulty they have made for themselves, and which is an addition to their guilt. Show them that whatever the difficulty is, they can overcome it; for God never requires of his creatures what they cannot perform, and his standing, unalterable law is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Remember always that the more clearly, constantly and forcibly the truth is presented to any mind that will attend to it, the more hope there is that it will be obeyed.

One caution, however, needs to be added; and that is, that when it becomes apparent that the mind will not be brought to attend to the subject, when you find that the efforts become wearisome and unpleasant, always cease for a while, and wait for another time, or else you will do more harm than good. Persevering after this, will only affect their minds with disgust and aversion towards a subject to which they have resolved they will not attend.

Another caution is also important. Always speak kindly and affectionately to friends upon this subject, and if you find all your efforts vain, though you cease to urge neglected duty, still continue to express the same kindness and interest for them. Do not give them occasion to feel that because they will not take your advice, you have cast them off as reprobates, and no longer desire their society. We may still continue to love the amiable natural traits of our friends, even though we find that they refuse to have them crowned and beautified by religion. Let all your efforts for the good of others be accompanied by earnest and constant prayer.

Lastly, do not be discouraged because you find that you are very deficient in every one of the particulars specified.

Remember that christian life is a warfare, and that it is only at the end that we are to come off conquerors and more than conquerors. Remember that He whom you are striving to serve and please, is not a hard Master. Though you have been inexcusable in forming such inveterate habits of sin, and all the difficulties you find are of your own making, yet he can be "touched with the feeling of your infirmities." When he sees that you really are afflicted because you so constantly abuse and forget him, he pities you as a father pitieth his children; and so long as you use the means he has appointed to keep you from sin, and wait upon him for strength and guidance, he will never leave nor forsake you. When you feel your own strength and resolution failing, go to him who hath said "my grace is sufficient for thee, and my strength shall be made perfect in weakness." Call upon him, "and he will be very gracious unto the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee. And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, this is the way, walk ye therein, when ye turn to the right and when ye turn to the left." Remember, also, that the conflict is short; the race will speedily be accomplished—soon your deficiencies and guilt shall pain you no more—soon you shall "see him as he is," and "awake in his likeness and be satisfied therewith."

Why Am I not a Christian?

1. Is it because I am afraid of ridicule, and of what others may say of me?

"Whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed."

2. Is it because of the inconsistencies of professed christians?

"Every man shall give account of himself to God."

3. Is it because I am not willing to give up all for Christ?

"What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

4. Is it because I am afraid that I shall not be accepted?

"Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

5. Is it because I fear that I am too great a sinner?

"The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin."

6. Is it because I am afraid that I shall not "hold out?"

"He that hath begun a good work in you, will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ."

7. Is it because I am thinking that I will do as well as I can, and that God ought to be satisfied with that?

"Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

8. Is it because I am postponing the matter without any definite reason?

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."

9. Is it because I am trying to save myself by morality, or in any other way of my own?

"There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

10. Is it because I do not clearly see the way to be saved?

"Repent ye, and believe the gospel." "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16.—Amer. Messenger.

They Don't Pray to God.

What can be more appropriate than family prayer? And what tends more directly to bind the whole domestic circle to virtue and to God? Even little children are impressed with its fitness and utility. They feel more secure in a household of prayer.

A bright little girl was invited to spend a day or two in a family where she was intimate. Her mother gave her consent, and told her she might stay all night, if she wished to, as she had done once before. But the little girl said she did not want to stay all night. Her mother asked her why. She replied, "They don't pray to God there, and I am afraid." Young as she was, she felt that it was safest for her to be where God was acknowledged, and his protection was sought. She was afraid to remain where they don't pray to God; so she returned home at evening to her praying parents. The head of the family where she visited was not an infidel, but a member of a christian church; yet he has no domestic altar. I confess I should not want to remain long with such a household. I should be afraid, and who would not?

It is told of the good Richard Baxter, that he was traveling once to meet an appointment, when he was overtaken by a violent storm, and as night came on, he stopped at a house and asked for lodgings. He had his horse cared for, took his supper, and before retiring stated that he was a minister of the Gospel, and was in the habit of praying before he committed himself to sleep. He then asked if there would be any objection to his having prayers with the family. His host was very much enraged, and said there should be no prayers with his family, nor under his roof if he could prevent it. Baxter was very calm, and ordered his horse to be brought out, and began to prepare for his journey. The man began to expostulate; he told him that the storm was very violent, the night dark, and that it was full seven miles to the next stopping-place. Baxter replied that he had rather ride seven miles in the darkest night, and in the most violent storm that ever came, than attempt to sleep or risk himself under a roof and with a family where no prayer was allowed. At length the man consented to have him pray, and the Lord made his visit a blessing to that family. A good man can face storms and trust himself with God with a feeling of security, for he knows that he who controls the storm is his Father and friend. But to be with those who do not acknowledge God, and whom he may be about to visit with his indignation for their sins, is more than a godly man is willing to hazard. It is not safe to stay in a house where, as the little girl said, they don't pray to God.—Zion's Advocate.

Working Christians.

Learn to be working christians. "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." It is very striking to see the usefulness of many christians. Are there none of you who know what it is to be selfish in your christianity? You have seen a selfish child go into a secret place to enjoy some delicious morsel undisturbed by his companions. So it is with some christians. They feed upon Christ and forgiveness; but it is alone, and all for themselves. Are there not some of you who can enjoy being a christian, while your dearest friend is not, and yet you will not speak of him? See, here you have got work to do. When Christ found you, he said, "Go, work in my vineyard." What were you hired for, if it was not to spread salvation? What blessed for? O, my christian friends! how little you live as though you were the servants of Christ! How much idle time and idle talk you have! This is not like a good servant. How many things you have to do for yourself! how few for Christ and his people. This is not like a servant.—McCheyne.

Be Cheerful!—Which will you do—smile, and make others happy, or be crabbed, and make every one around you miserable? The amount of happiness you can produce is incalculable if you show a smiling face, and speak pleasant words. There is no joy like that which springs from a kind act or pleasant deed, and you may feel it at night when you rest, and at morning when you rise, and through all the day when about your business.—Ex.

Faith.—He who does not rejoice in the Lord, and feel God's peace as a cordial at his heart, is a christian of a low form, and hardly a believer. Why are we so often lumpish, heavy, and almost at our wits end, but because we look for comfort in ourselves more than in Christ, and do not charge it enough upon our souls to rejoice purely, simply, and only in him?—Rev. T. Adams.

THE CHANGED CROSS.

"For my thoughts are not your thoughts, saith the Lord."—Isaiah lv: 8.

"For I know the thoughts that I think towards you—thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end."—Jer. xxix: 11.

And when that happy time shall come, of endless peace and rest,
We shall look back upon our path and say—It was the best.

It was a time of sadness, and my heart,
Although it knew and felt the better part,
Felt wearied with the conflict and the strife,
And all the needful discipline of life.

And while I thought on these as given to me—
My trial tests of faith and love to be—
It seemed as if I never could be sure
That faithful to the end I should endure.

And thus no longer trusting to His might,
Who says, "we walk by faith, and not by sight,"
Doubting, and almost yielding to despair,
The thought arose—my cross I cannot bear.

Far heavier its weight must surely be
Than those of others which I daily see;
Oh! if I might another burden choose,
Methinks I should not fear my crown to lose.

A solemn silence reigned on all around—
E'en Nature's voices uttered not a sound;
The evening shadows seemed of peace to tell,
And sleep upon my weary spirit fell.

A moment's pause, and then a heavenly light
Beamed full upon my wondering, raptured sight;
Angels on silvery wings seemed everywhere,
And angel's music thrilled the balmy air.

Then One, more fair than all the rest to see—
One to whom all others bowed the knee—
Came gently to me as I trembling lay,
And, "Follow me," He said, "I am the way."

Then speaking thus, He led me far above;
And there, beneath a canopy of love,
Crosses of divers shape and size were seen,
Larger and smaller than my own had been.

And one there was most beauteous to behold—
A little one, with jewels set in gold;
Ah! this methought, I can with comfort wear,
For it will be an easy one to bear.

And so the little cross I quickly took,
But all at once my frame beneath it shook;
The sparkling jewels fair were they to see,
But far too heavy was their weight for me.

This may not be, I cried, and looked again,
To see if there was any here could ease my pain;
But one by one I passed them slowly by,
Till on a lovely one I cast my eye.

Fair flowers around its sculptured form entwined,
And grace and beauty seemed in it combined;
Wondering, I gazed, and still I wondered more
To think so many should have passed it o'er.

But, oh! that form so beautiful to see,
Soon made its hidden sorrows known to me;
Thorns lay beneath those flowers and colors fair;
Sorrowing, I said, "This cross I may not bear."

And so it was with each and all around—
Not one to suit my need could there be found;
Weeping, I laid each heavy burden down,
As my Guide gently said, "No cross, no crown!"

At length to Him I raised my saddened heart;
He knew its sorrows, bid its doubts depart.
"Be not afraid," He said, "but trust in me—
My perfect love shall now be shown to thee."

And then, with lightened eyes and willing feet,
Again I turned my earthly cross to meet,
With forward footsteps, turning not aside,
For fear some hidden evil might betide.

And there, in the prepared, appointed way—
Listening to hear and ready to obey—
A cross I quickly found of plainest form,
With only words of love inscribed thereon.

With thankfulness I raised it from the rest,
And joyfully acknowledged it the best—
The only one of all the many there
That I could feel was good for me to bear.

And while I thus my chosen one confessed,
I saw a heavenly brightness on it rest;
And as I bent, my burden to sustain,
I recognized my own old cross again!

But, oh! how different did it seem to be
Now I had learned its preciousness to see!
No longer could I unbelieving say,
Perhaps another is a better way.

Ah, no! henceforth my own desire shall be,
That He who knows me best should choose for me;
And so whate'er His love sees good to send,
I'll trust its best, because He knows the end.

A Short Sermon.

[Concluded.]

"There is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death."—Solomon.

III. The right way.

Now it is both reasonable and just to suppose, from the acknowledged character of the divine Being, that he should give us a way, in his communications with the human family, which should not only "seem right unto a man," but should be right in fact. Without question, God has done this. Did man need a true way? He has given it. Did he need a new way? He has [illegible] it [illegible] living way? And he has not left it to conjecture; it is a plain manifest that the intention of the Deity is to afford men a knowledge of a pathway so distinctly marked, that no one need err. Will not his wisdom be found equal to his purpose? Assuredly it will. He has succeeded, and so fully, that he has himself announced to the world the fact.

This being the admitted premise, by all who fully confide in the divine record, a second consideration is that all sober and inquiring minds inquire for that way; yet all sober and inquiring minds do not see the way. The reason is, they proceed as if this was left to the determination of men, as questions of human interest and philosophical investigation are. And withal they seek first to find means to reconcile the way of God with the way of man; i. e., attempt to find a way to future salvation which will allow of human pride and selfish exaltation, or sinful affections, the spirit of the world—a conformity to the world; at the same time they see the importance of conformity to Christ, and would gladly secure the latter if they could retain the former. But God says, "My ways are not as your ways."

A desire to secure the way to the kingdom of God and its results, may be referred to the gracious aid of the Spirit of God, bestowed upon all sincere seekers for truth. But man is not willing to adopt the way the Lord has prepared, and soon becomes unwilling to endorse it. Hence, as he cannot settle down, he begins to look for a way of his own—to invent a plan of escape.

Every man of inquiry, of tqought, finds a way that is right unto him. But the way of the Lord, his own chosen and sanctified path, is by Christ alone. There is no other. He hath set him forth the "propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but for the sins of the world." By him is repentance, by him forgiveness, by him faith, by him hope, by him we have grace to overcome the world, by him we have a resurrection to life, and only by him is immortality.

The right way, then, is by the plan which God has revealed, in Christ, who says, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." The way of faith and obedience is so perfect, as to the conscience of man, that he has an entire assurance of being right. He takes up his cross to serve God daily, and is not governed by the sectarian principle which regards no one as right who differs.

From all, we conclude that God has established a way in the gospel, which may be understood, and being understood, will be apprehended as right or true, whether it seems to be so or not. And what wonder that men do not by nature perceive, with the understanding darkened through the ignorance that is in them, the way of God, that it only is right?

IV. The end of the evil way.

All ways but the true way end in death. The sects all, or nearly all, believe in the natural immortality of man. It seemeth right, but the end is death. This the prophet said was a sadness to the heart of the righteous—"promising the wicked life whom God had not promised life." It is a grand deception. God has in no instance said that the wicked should live; but often that he should die. There is a way, the way of living in the future, after the dogma of pagan mythology, that man is immortal, and, therefore, cannot die. Now the natural consequence is, that a man will not seek for immortality. He will not seek for that he feels sure he possesses. What a man seeth himself possessed of, why should he seek for it? He sees, by all the prejudices of his education, by all the convictions of his study, by all the argument of his friends, his minister, the sympathies of his church, his Bible, as he reads it, if he reads it at all, his philosophy—all tell him he is right. The way seemeth to be right to him, but the end is death, for he has no such life. If the conviction that he has deters him from seeking life in Christ, as it will most likely, then he will die, and die under the deception that he had life and could not lose it. So far from his being right, the Son of God says if he will not believe on Christ he shall not see life.

If a man mistake his way, and it seems right, that the more danger he will pursue it. If the further he goes, the more confirmed he becomes in the delusion, the more prospect of his going finally astray. If that road ends in ruin, then he will find destruction. It is the wrong way, and will end wrong.

There is but one way to life; that is the way the Lord hath taught in the gospel. There is but one other way. That one the way by the natural immortality of man, therefore, it is not the right path—he that trusts to that doctrine will find it end in death. Death is resulting continually. It leads men to trust to Universalism. They could not if the way of the immortal soul did not seem right to them. It leads to Spiritualism, which could not exist if men did not admit that the popular soul theory is correct. It leads to views of God's character and plan which are derogatory to his character and justice and dishonorable to his entire being. There is death in the churches, death in the moral nature, death moral and spiritual throughout the land, because the life power is removed; the motive is lost; the vital force paralyzed.

If to seek for life and immortality is the duty of man, and the consequence is eternal life, death being the opposite condition, the man will not seek for immortality, because he says he knows he has that principle and power of living now.—What will be the consequence? Will not his way end in death, however right it may seem to him? Of all this perversion of the great christian doctrine of life, we say, "the end thereof is death!"

It has proved, and will prove, the damnation of millions of the human race.—Death began in error, and this very error, too, which seemed right. It will till truth reigns.

From Bro. G. L. Hnrt.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to say thro the Crisis to the waiting ones, that I am still with them waiting for redemption. The love of God constrains me to acknowledge the nearness of the event, while casting my eye broadcast over the land.

We are living in perilous times. Will they increase? Will the toil-worn, disappointed ones have more trials? It may be; but the apostle tells us not to think it strange concerning the fiery trial that is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. Praise God, every trial works out for us a far more exdeeding, and eternal weight of glory.

O what deception is in the land! The cry of peace proceeds from those who should be warning the world of the coming judgment. They worship at the shrine of worldly honor and human glory, deceiving themselves and those who follow them.

Dear brethren, let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. He that has promised will perform.

Yours, waiting for the return of the Bridegroom,

G. L. Hart.

From Sr. S. H. Young.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I would like to write a few lines for the Crisis, and may heavenly wisdom direct me, so that what I speak may be for the glory of him who spake as never man spake.

Dear brethren and sisters, have we that religion which will enable us to support the weak with a heart filled with love, void of selfishness. Can we go to the erring child of sin, and with yearnings toward him, direct him to the Savior? Can we point him to the Lamb of God and say, believe on Christ and you shall have eternal life? In this day of evil can we set before the people the great and important truths of the gospel, in the spirit of love and meekness.

Oh, brethren and sisters, we need that compassionate heart that will weep with those that weep and feel anothers woes. How should every act of our lives demonstrate to those who do not believe in the near approach of the kingdom of God, that we are looking for the same, and the resurrection of the dead saints of God, and if they refuse to hear, shall it be through strife or vain glorying that we contend for the truth?

And again; my heart has been sorely pained when I have seen the feelings of a brother all crushed and bleeding, by the harsh language of those who profess to be the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, who, if he reproved, blended love with authority, gentleness, and humility. Oh, that love may be through all my actions, and all my words be mild, so that none may have occasion to say that I have not the spirit of Christ. This is what I believe to be the ground work of religion, without which we can never enter the kingdom of God, which is just at hand. I desire in all things to imitate the example of my Savior and live at his feet, keeping myself unspotted from the world, that I at his appearing may be found without spot or blemish.

Your sister, striving to be an overcomer,

H. S. Young.

WISDOM'S WAYS.

Mortal, is it wisdom now
To neglect to pay thy vow?
Peace or pleasure to pursue,
Will ye choose the false or true?
Is that hope not false indeed,
Ever failing thee in need!

See! the children of this age
All their thoughts and powers engage;
In their generation wise,
While the truth and wisdom dies:
Wiser for this passing day,
Than which passeth not away.

Prodigal, thine end we see,
Empty for eternity;
Oh! the coming of that night,
Wisdom calls thee—choose the light!
Life and death before thee wait,
Enter now the narrow gate.

Seeking for the golden ore,
Do ye lay the dross in store?
Fishers value not the shell,
That which pays their toil so well;
Costly pearls tempt not the eye,
Pass the pearl of price not by.

Wisdom's ways in good increase,
Paths of pleasantness and peace;
Youthful sinner—say in truth,
Henceforth do thou guide my youth:
While gray hairs in meekness bow,
Pay the oft repeated vow.

Choice Selections.

Apollos;

Or, Directions to Young Christians.

The following is from an interesting little work, published by Gould & Lincoln, 59 Washington Street, Boston.

Remember that the principal duty of a christian, as it respects others, is to excite them to the immediate performance of their religious duty.

Jesus Christ has instituted his church in the world, that through their instrumentality the perishing may be saved. There is no christian but can find some one mind, at least, over which he can have some influence, and if we can do any thing to save others from eternal death, nothing should for a moment prevent our attempting it.

But to perform our duty faithfully in this respect, requires both discretion and some knowledge derived from the experience of others. The following hints, therefore, are added as the result of long experience and observation, and as a sort of guide to those who may be anxious to save a soul from death.

Let your first object be to persuade your friend to give an earnest and immediate attention to the subject. Serious remarks upon religion do not produce much effect, unless some direct object is had in view. Endeavor to persuade your friends to commence the daily reading of the Bible with prayer. Show them that the Holy Spirit operates by means of the truths which we find in the Bible, and which are most forcibly presented to the mind in the solitude and solemnity of closet devotion. The character of the God we are commanded to love, can no more be perceived by a mind that is engrossed by other subjects and turned away from this, than the human eye can perceive the beauties of a picture, when it is not directed towards it. And as it is not only needful, in beholding a picture, that light should shine upon it, but that the eye should be turned to it, so in order that the heart may be sanctified by the truth, it is as needful that the mind should be turned towards it, as that the Holy Spirit should enlighten by his illuminating influences. Always, then, in all your efforts, have this definite end in view, to persuade your friends to spend much time in studying the Bible with prayer.

When this object is secured, then urge he immediate duty of giving the affections of the heart to God. Show them that if they will only love God, they will then feel their guilt in refusing to obey him, and will greatly desire to live for his glory. If they will only love their God and Savior, they will feel that they can trust in the merits of his atoning blood. Do not, for a moment, allow them to feel that performing the outward duties of religion is doing any thing to recommend them to God, but is only a means of making them feel more deeply their immediate obligation to give the affections of their hearts to him, and of realizing the reasonableness of his holy law which requires it. Speak to them as if you really felt that there was no need of any delay, but that they could immediately perform what God requires; and, in order to do this, endeavor to have a deep and realizing sense of this truth yourself. If they complain of their inability, or of the difficulty they find in performing their duty, show them that it is because they have so long forgotten and neglected these things, and formed such bad habits, that though it has really become difficult, it is a difficulty they have made for themselves, and which is an addition to their guilt. Show them that whatever the difficulty is, they can overcome it; for God never requires of his creatures what they cannot perform, and his standing, unalterable law is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Remember always that the more clearly, constantly and forcibly the truth is presented to any mind that will attend to it, the more hope there is that it will be obeyed.

One caution, however, needs to be added; and that is, that when it becomes apparent that the mind will not be brought to attend to the subject, [illegible] that the efforts become wearisome and unpleasant, always cease for a while, and wait for another time, or else you will do more harm than good. Persevering after this, will only affect their minds with disgust and aversion towards a subject to which they have resolved they will not attend.

Another caution is also important. Always speak kindly and affectionately to friends upon this subject, and if you find all your efforts vain, though you cease to urge neglected duty, still continue to express the same kindness and interest for them. Do not give them occasion to feel that because they will not take your advice, you have cast them off as reprobates, and no longer desire their society. We may still continue to love the amiable natural traits of our friends, even though we find that they refuse to have them crowned and beautified by religion. Let all your efforts for the good of others be accompanied by earnest and constant prayer.

Lastly, do not be discouraged because you find that you are very deficient in every one of the particulars specified.

Remember that christian life is a warfare, and that it is only at the end that we are to come off conquerors and more than conquerors. Remember that He whom you are striving to serve and please, is not a hard Master. Though you have been inexcusable in forming such inveterate habits of sin, and all the difficulties you find are of your own making, yet he can be "touched with the feeling of your infirmities." When he sees that you really are afflicted because you so constantly abuse and forget him, he pities you as a father pitieth his children; and so long as you use the means he has appointed to keep you from sin, and wait upon him for strength and guidance, he will never leave nor forsake you. When you feel your own strength and resolution failing, go to him who hath said "my grace is sufficient for thee, and my strength shall be made perfect in weakness." Call upon him, "and he will be very gracious unto the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee. And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, this is the way, walk ye therein, when ye turn to the right and when ye turn to the left." Remember, also, that the conflict is short; the race will speedily be accomplished—soon your deficiencies and guilt shall pain you no more—soon you shall "see him as he is," and "awake in his likeness and be satisfied therewith."

Why Am I not a Christian?

1. Is it because I am afraid of ridicule, and of what others may say of me?

"Whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed."

2. Is it because of the inconsistencies of professed christians?

"Every man shall give account of himself to God."

3. Is it because I am not willing to give up all for Christ?

"What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

4. Is it because I am afraid that I shall not be accepted?

"Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

5. Is it because I fear that I am too great a sinner?

"The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin."

6. Is it because I am afraid that I shall not "hold out?"

"He that hath begun a good work in you, will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ."

7. Is it because I am thinking that I will do as well as I can, and that God ought to be satisfied with that?

"Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all."

8. Is it because I am postponing the matter without any definite reason?

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."

9. Is it because I am trying to save myself by morality, or in any other way of my own?

"There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved."

10. Is it because I do not clearly see the way to be saved?

"Repent ye, and believe the gospel." "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3: 16.—Amer. Messenger.

They Don't Pray to God.

What can be more appropriate than family prayer? And what tends more directly to bind the whole domestic circle to virtue and to God? Even little children are impressed with its fitness and utility. They feel more secure in a household of prayer.

A bright little girl was invited to spend a day or two in a family where she was intimate. Her mother gave her consent, and told her she might stay all night, if she wished to, as she had done once before. But the little girl said she did not want to stay all night. Her mother asked her why. She replied, "They don't pray to God there, and I am afraid." Young as she was, she felt that it was safest for her to be where God was acknowledged, and his protection was sought. She was afraid to remain where they don't pray to God; so she returned home at evening to her praying parents. The head of the family [illegible] member of a christian church; yet he has no domestic altar. I confess I should not want to remain long with such a household. I should be afraid, and who would not?

It is told of the good Richard Baxter, that he was traveling once to meet an appointment, when he was overtaken by a violent storm, and as night came on, he stopped at a house and asked for lodgings. He had his horse cared for, took his supper, and before retiring stated that he was a minister of the Gospel, and was in the habit of praying before he committed himself to sleep. He then asked if there would be any objection to his having prayers with the family. His host was very much enraged, and said there should be no prayers with his family, nor under his roof if he could prevent it. Baxter was very calm, and ordered his horse to be brought out, and began to prepare for his journey. The man began to expostulate; he told him that the storm was very violent, the night dark, and that it was full seven miles to the next stopping-place. Baxter replied that he had rather ride seven miles in the darkest night, and in the most violent storm that ever came, than attempt to sleep or risk himself under a roof and with a family where no prayer was allowed. At length the man consented to have him pray, and the Lord made his visit a blessing to that family. A good man can face storms and trust himself with God with a feeling of security, for he knows that he who controls the storm is his Father and friend. But to be with those who do not acknowledge God, and whom he may be about to visit with his indignation for their sins, is more than a godly man is willing to hazard. It is not safe to stay in a house where, as the little girl said, they don't pray to God.—Zion's Advocate.

Working Christians.

Learn to be working christians. "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." It is very striking to see the usefulness of many christians. Are there none of you who know what it is to be selfish in your christianity? You have seen a selfish child go into a secret place to enjoy some delicious morsel undisturbed by his companions. So it is with some christians. They feed upon Christ and forgiveness; but it is alone, and all for themselves. Are there not some of you who can enjoy being a christian, while your dearest friend is not, and yet you will not speak of him? See, here you have got work to do. When Christ found you, he said, "Go, work in my vineyard." What were you hired for, if it was not to spread salvation? What blessed for? O, my christian friends! how little you live as though you were the servants of Christ! How much idle time and idle talk you have! This is not like a good servant. How many things you have to do for yourself! how few for Christ and his people. This is not like a servant.—McCheyne.

Be Cheerful!—Which will you do—smile, and make others happy, or be crabbed, and make every one around you miserable? The amount of happiness you can produce is incalculable if you show a smiling face, and speak pleasant words. There is no joy like that which springs from a kind act or pleasant deed, and you may feel it at night when you rest, and at morning when you rise, and through all the day when about your business.—Ex.

Faith.—He who does not rejoice in the Lord, and feel God's peace as a cordial at his heart, is a christian of a low form, and hardly a believer. Why are we so often lumpish, heavy, and almost at our wits end, but because we look for comfort in ourselves more than in Christ, and do not charge it enough upon our souls to rejoice purely, simply, and only in him?—Rev. T. Adams.

I SHALL REST.

Soon with the ransomed I shall rest,
And lean my head on Jesus' breast;
Forever free from earthly care,
Safe in those realms of glory fair.

The joys of that immortal land
Spring up to charm on every hand;
No night shall ever end the day,
And clouds shall ever flee away.

The pains and tears of this dark vale
No more our pathway can assail,
And death will stand afar, and ne'er
Before us conqueror appear.

O, how I long to find that home,
No more a wanderer here to roam!
For cares oppress me while I stay
In sorrow's vale, from home away.

No. V.

To UNCLE FRED;—In reply to your question, "Did not Christ tell his disciples that the kingdom of heaven was within them?" I would respectfully reply in the negative. If you will carefully notice the circumstance recorded by Luke 17: 20, you will find that the Pharisees demanded of him when the kingdom should come; he answered them, and said: "The kingdom of God cometh not with observation, (or outward show, as the margin reads,) neither shall they say, lo, here! or lo, there! for, behold, the kingdom of God is within you." Was it, Uncle Fred, in the hearts of those wicked Pharisees? You do not believe this; yet Jesus spake to them. It is my opinion that the Savior simply teaches the suddenness of its coming. The Pharisees overlooked those prophecies which refer to Christ's humiliation, and had their eye on those which relate to his future coming in glory. Hence, when he appeared among them, so lowly, followed by a few fishermen, they would not believe him to be the Messiah. They looked for a kingdom to be established with great pomp and splendor, and therefore asked, probably deriding his poverty and humility, when the kingdom of which he spake, would appear? He tells them that it will not come with "observation," but when established, it would come suddenly, unexpectedly, giving them no opportunity to say, "Lo, here! or lo, there!" is the kingdom. He then turns to his disciples and says to them: "The days will come when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of man, and ye shall not see it. And they (another class) shall say to you: "See here! or see there (is the kingdom that ye desire to behold) but go not after them. . . For as the lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven shineth to the other part under heaven, so shall also the Son of man be in his day." As sudden, as extensive, as visible as the lightning's flash, will the kingdom of God appear, affording no opportunity for one class to say to another,—Lo, here is the kingdom, or lo, it is there; therefore, when men do so teach, we may know it to be false, for "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Such is my view of the text referred to. I should have before stated, that the marginal rendering, "among you," seems to be the most consistent.

And now I will notice the other question—"How could the apostle speak of being already translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, if there was no such kingdom now established?"

When we yield ourselves by obedience unto God, we cease to be the subjects of Satan's kingdom—the kingdom of darkness, and become the heirs of Christ's kingdom, and are governed by his laws. The apostle, I think, here speaks of our being translated from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of Christ, in the same sense that John does of our having "passed from death unto life," viz. by faith. The Savior says that his people are not of the world, but are chosen out of it. We do not understand him to mean that they are actually taken out of the world, for he says—"Father, I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil." As flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God, neither corruption inherit incorruption, it is certain that we are not now in the kingdom, nor can the kingdom be in us; but those who by diligence work by the rule of addition laid down by the apostle Peter," will surely, by and by, have an abundant entrance ministered unto them into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

I will now proceed to my fourth proposition, to show from chronology that the kingdom was not established in the days of Christ's first advent. Turn with me to Daniel 2d, and read the description of the mighty and terrible image, shown to king Nebuchadnezzar in a vision and interpreted by the prophet. You there find that it is not until four universal kingdoms have borne away—the fourth become divided into two—and then these subdivided into ten, as shadowed forth by the ten toes of the image; that a stone is cut out of the mountain without hands, which smites the image on the feet, and breaks in pieces the entire superstructure, and after its utter demolition, the stone becomes a great mountain, and fills the whole earth. Daniel says that the stone symbolizes the everlasting kingdom of God.

In the 7th chapter the kingdoms are presented under the symbols of beasts, four in number, representing as interpreted, the four kingdoms of earth. From the fourth, ten horns arise, and then another little horn, which speaks great words against the Most High, and wears out the saints, even for a time, times, and a dividing of time. Then judgment sits on this horn power, and his dominion is taken away, and he no longer has the kingly power to consume and destroy the saints. Then, after all this succession of kingdoms—division of the fourth, long period of persecution, and then suppression of the power of the little horn—then, as next in order, comes the kingdom and dominion of the Most High, universal in extent and everlasting in its duration.

It is not until six angels have done sounding, and the seventh begun to sound, that the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. It is when the Son of man sits on throne of his glory, and all nations are gathered before him for judgment, that he says to those on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom."

If you will examine the prophetic visions of Daniel, or those of the seer on Patmos isle, you will find the kingdom is uniformly placed at the termination of earthly kingdoms—it is at the end of the world—the end of time. With this, the teachings of Christ and his apostles harmonize, as I think I have plainly shown.

That we may so live as to have an entrance ministered unto us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom, is the sincere prayer of KATE.

For the Crisis.

Are We a People?

No. I.

WHAT IS THE PRINCIPLE OF UNION?

I have a few thoughts on this question which have been long deferred, but have only seen the more reason for urging them by the delay. The condition of the church which is served by this paper and which receives almost the entire labor of a respectable number of ministers of the gospel, in preaching, publishing and traveling; which has passed various changes and vicissitudes, whether in times of revivals, such as prevail in the country now, and have prevailed for a few months past; or, in times of general declension—this condition is the interest of many faithful and tried hearts, and presses the question home to many a toil-spent minister; and not less to some of the faithful and constant, self-sacrificing members of the flock, —"are we a people?"

Why, unquestionably, we are! says one. Many have thought so for a time, and have impulsively declared their adhesion; but either there was nothing to remain with, or there was nothing in them that could attach to us. The principle of union seems to have been wanting; at least, the permanent union did not follow. It might have been from a deficient principle. Now if we are a people, how came we such? What makes us such? How long have we existed? And by what name are we known? What are the great leading features of our organization, action, position? When a few things in answer to the questions are brought out, if they meet other minds and affect them as they do mine, we shall see whether we are a people or not, and when we act we shall be identified as one, or we shall yield our embryotic struggles for existence to the excessive forces of life all around us, rather than to any lack of vitality in the elements. We may lack wisdom to appropriate the forces, properties and supplies of being: we certainly have wanted such wisdom.

It should be seen that we have remained long enough an inchoate church, if we ever expect to become harmonized, settled, solidified. If we have a grand rallying truth or two, we may indeed call together a few of like faith on those points, while they have a like interest; but the interest may be affected by various influences. We often find it thus affected. Often, alas, find that we have apparently bestowed labor in vain.

Such being the case, we inquire, are we a body, or a fragmentary mass, without cohesion; without order; without union, &c.? consequently, without position and power to act successfully in the great struggle for truth and righteousness in this world. No effective man in the cause can lose his individuality. A man without individuality is only a part of a great machine. He is enslaved; his manhood is surrendered; but the gospel, we shall see, most beautifully provides for the concert of action, union and strength of position, which will ensure success, and at the same time gives him an individual action and responsibility, which makes his labor energetic and effectual.

If we judge by the past, we must consider the cause with which we are connected as extremely fragmentary—a most intractable and heterogeneous multitude as a whole; and yet, I have no doubt, composed of the best people in the world. Perhaps, so far as intelligence and moral position are concerned with individuals as well as should appear; but when the body as a great instrumentality to awaken the world, and save men from God's approaching wrath—divided and contending often with each other; with but little of the force of enlightened, consecutive and concentrated operation that will break up the rock of nature, and when this is done lay up the beautiful living stones into a "holy temple in the Lord."

Is there reciprocity of feeling, to say nothing of sentiment? Is there, again, a united purpose? Is there harmony of spirit, such as can lead us to a uniform and consentaneous application of the gospel on the "savor of life unto life?" or, must minor differences, miserable party bickerings, override and overwhelm so glorious an object as saving men?

Extract from Saurin's Sermons.

"I would abhor myself, deplore my frailty, blush at the remembrance of my best duties, cast myself into the arms of divine mercy, and own all my felicity derivable from grace. I would own, it is grace that elects; grace which calls; grace that justifies; grace which sanctifies; grace that accepts a sanctification always frail and imperfect: but at the same time, I would watch over myself, I would arouse myself to duty, I would work out my salvation with fear and trembling. Phil. 2: 12. And while I acknowledge grace does all, and my works merit nothing, I would act as if I might expect every thing from my own efforts."

For the Crisis.

What is Coming?

"What is coming?" This question is asked on all sides—it echoes from the pulpit and from the forum; it arises from small assemblies and from legislative halls,—"what is coming?" Earth seems breathless with expectancy, and the people tremble with a fearful "looking for."

"Through the walls of hut and palace
Shoots the instantaneous throe,
And the travail of the Ages
Wrings earth's systems to and fro."

"What is coming?" Commerce takes in her white sails and waits; trade hushes in a measure its busy music, and waits; all business, all occupations, are even now paralized, and men, from the crowned head to the peasant, by look and deed, ask,—"what is coming?" Every nation seems preparing for something—there is a hushed but perpetual preparation going on throughout the world; earth seems waiting for the commencement of some great struggle, preparing for some mighty conflict.

"What is coming?" Is a new era about to dawn? Is an age of gold or an eternity of glory to burst upon our expectant vision? What is the meaning of this "looking for?" Why these vain whisperings of "peace, peace," as if men would still the monitor that warns them of an approaching crisis?

"What is coming?" Warrior! place thine ear to the ground!—is that which thou hearest the thundering tread of the armies of the nations as they march to the battle of the great day of God Almighty? Place thine ear to the ground!—do you hear the entrancing music that attends the cavalcade of the coming King of Kings? Christian! look up! do you see the purple banners of the Resurrection morn that flout old earth's horizon? Look up! is that the rosy glow of the Morning of Joy that e'en now bursts up the skies? Look up! behold! thy "redemption cometh!" Yes,—

"'Tis the birth of God's new Era!
With a recognizing start,
Nation wildly looks at nation,
Standing with mute lips apart,
And glad TRUTH's yet mightier man-child
Leaps beneath the Future's heart!"

Hail, auspicious day! Hail, glorious morning! Truth shall soon rise from her trammelled, dusty bed; Justice shall take her wand and sit in judgment; Faith shall soon merge into fruition! Paradise shall be restored! Creation shall rejoice in her Eden beauty!

"After all the storms and the strifes that have roll'd
Down the ages grim and gory,
Earth shall wear her pleasant face as of old
And laugh in her morning glory!"

Soldier! gird on thine armor!—dost thou not hear the reveille note that calls thee on to victory?

For the Crisis.

A Solemn Fact.

Jesus Christ has taught the solemn fact, that of four classes of hearers of the Gospel, one only will be eternally saved. See the parable of the sower.

Each of these classes is numerous. They are truthfully and faithfully delineated by the appointed Judge of all the earth, and demand our most serious regard. The first, are those persons who hear the truth of God; righteous claim to their hearts and lives; their just condemnation for their violation of his holy law; their duty of immediate repentance and faith in a precious Savior. By yielding to the various suggestions of the Father of lies; that there is no danger, God being merciful, or that there will be time enough in the future to attend to the concerns of the eternal state, the word of life is taken out of the mind; the sinner hardens his heart against God, and continues in the broad road to destruction, rejecting with base ingratitude redeeming love and mercy freely offered.

The second class proceed further; they receive the word with joy; profess their faith in it, and outwardly maintain their profession for a while, but have "no root" of true heart holiness in themselves. Their exercises of mind, whether of concern for the future, sorrow on account of sin, or joyful hope in the divine mercy, are all purely selfish. They have no concern for the glory of God, no godly sorrow for sin, as against their Creator and Benefactor; no pious grief of mind that they have offended him; and their repentance needs to be repented of. Their joy is the result of presumption and false hope, which will make them ashamed at the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. The love of God is not in them.

The third class acknowledge the general truth of the Gospel which they hear. They are deeply affected by it. Like the unhappy Felix, they tremble when the faithful herald reasons "of righteousness and temperance and judgment to come." They may go much farther than Felix, and publicly declare their faith in the gospel, and observe its outward ordinances. They continue in professedly christian churches where the discipline of God's word is not maintained. But, alas! "the care of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke the word," so that they are "unfruitful." They remain "carnally minded," which "is death." They may preach what they ought not, or even the truth, "for filthy lucre's sake." They may have animal excitement with the forms of godliness, but they are destitute of its holy spirit and transforming power. The name of Jesus is on their lips, but his love is not in their hearts. Covetousness, or carnal honor, is their ruling principle, whether they are public ministers or private members. They may indeed dole out their pittance to the poor, but they are unfaithful stewards of their Lord's goods committed unto them. Their dreadful end will be according to their works.

Blessed be God, there is another class, which gives us pleasure to contemplate. The fourth describes those who, by the divine renewal of the Holy Spirit, (without which none will enter the kingdom of God; John 3: 3, 5) receive the word "in an honest and good heart, keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience." Luke 8: 15. With a spiritual understanding of the holy truth, they are deeply humbled before God, in the clear perception of the exceeding sinfulness of their past transgressions; and have no hope of deliverance from the just penalty of the divine Law, which is eternal death, but in the mercy of God in Jesus Christ.

"Accepted in the Beloved," being "justified freely by (divine) grace, through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus;" they cordially consecrate themselves, body, soul and spirit, with all their possessions, to the God of their salvation, and to the service of his dear Son. Their observance of divine ordinances is accompanied with holy and delightful communion of spirit with their Father in heaven. With them, prayer is the pouring out of the soul, and singing, making melody in the heart to God. The bread they break in commemoration of dying love, is "the communion of the body of Christ," and the cup, for which they bless God, is "the communion" of his precious "blood." Their fellowship with saints, is not a nominal union with one denomination of christians, but a holy and refreshing fellowship with all who love their Lord in sincerity.

Remembering the example of their Redeemer, "who went about doing good," and partaking of his blessed spirit, they live, not unto themselves, but to "do good unto all men as (they) have opportunity, especially to the household of faith." The blessing of "the widow and the fatherless," and of the widow's God, rests upon them; the true holiness of their charities being evinced by their "keeping (themselves) unspotted from the world." In their hearts is felt the same compassion for the woes of a sinful and suffering world which moved their divine Master, not only to sympathizing tears, but to lay down his life. In sweet experience, they know the verity of his words, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

O blessed life of holy Love! How vast the difference between a name to live, and being, in verity, alive unto God by "the power of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus!" How great the difference between "the (mere) form of godliness" and its holy, transforming power!

"As the hart panteth after the water brook," so their souls pant after the living God. "Patient in tribulation," and sweetly resigned to their Father's will, they enjoy the spirit of adoption, an earnest of their holy and eternal inheritance in the promised kingdom. "The Spirit itself witnesseth with (their) spirit that (they) are the children of God." "All things work together for (their) good," preparing them for a more abundant entrance into the joy of their Lord. For his promised return they patiently wait, assured, that when he "shall appear" they shall "appear with him in glory."

Dear reader, what question can there be of equal magnitude with the question; To which of these classes do I belong?

Christian Union---Again.

I regret that so long time has elapsed since I made the promise to the readers of the Crisis to write on the means of promoting Christian union; but I will try, God helping me, to express a few thoughts to stir up its readers to endeavor to "keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

The first thought that occurs to me is this; Christian union cannot be maintained by laboring to promote the interests of any sect, with a narrow, morbid notion, that all are wrong who do not belong to that particular sect. There are some so bigoted that they would scarcely labor for the salvation of one soul if it was positive he would connect himself with another denomination; thus, not only unchristianising the other sect, but saying virtually, "I'd rather the soul would be damned than go there and join that church." It is true that there are some places where a convert would be better nourished than at others; but that christian who feels the "blessed union" in his heart, will make the salvation of men of far greater importance than church relation. I tell you the truth, brethren, when I say, I would agonize just as earnestly in prayer for a sin-burdened soul, if I had positive proof that it would become connected with any other church, as I would if I knew he would connect himself with my own.

The recent and present revival has attested to the truth that, when the heart is right, sectarian prejudice will melt away; although as I said in the former article on this subject, denominations will still be necessary. Let the work go on. Let all God's people have the baptism of the Holy Ghost and the tongue of fire.

Another thought is, that Christian union is promoted by sacrificing personal interests for the general good of the Christian. This is a hard lesson for some of our brethren and sisters to learn, and often schisms are produced because some one rather talk of injustice received, than patiently suffer for the glory of God. There are some who will do the will of God when their personal feelings are not affected, but when the time comes to suffer his will, they shrink back, and, like a wicked worldling, they go and publish to every person they meet, the injury they have received. But you say, "I have really been injured." Well, suppose you have, and suppose others might help you denounce the offender; you would never get out of the difficulty and promote Christian union and so readily and directly by this course, as though you felt the real martyr spirit and would say—

I had rather be neglected,
Have my name and memory rot,
Be by all my friends rejected,
Than to give God's cause a blot,—
Yes, I'd suffer, suffer though it end-ed not.

Yes, it is far better to suffer if you cannot settle the subjects between "thee and him alone," or by taking a regular christian action, than to destroy your own peace and the union of the church, by talking to everybody of your grievances. Oh! there is something glorious in sinking self into insignificance for the glory of God, and suffering personally here for the prosperity of the cause generally. Let Judah cease to vex Ephraim, and Ephraim to trouble Judah. Let love drive the chariot wheels, forgive injuries, and then the union will be preserved.

One word more. Seek to preserve it. Set your head and heart to work out devices for this purpose. Not only let your christian inventiveness be employed to turn existing circumstances to the glory of God and for the union; but seek to furnish those means that shall directly promote it, and the God of peace shall be with you, and you will have revivals continually.

TO THE SINNER.

Why not love God? O, tell me why,
Is he not ever good to thee?
Does he not give thee life and health,
A boon above a world of wealth?

When you forget that Christ hath died,
That he for man was crucified,
And bore his sins upon the tree;
God still in mercy spareth thee.

While you forget, and are ashamed
To be among his children named;
To be a christian, bold and free,
He still in mercy spareth thee.

Not love your Father, God, in heaven?
Not seek by him to be forgiven
Of all your sins, whate'er they be,
While he in mercy spareth thee?

O, will you yet still longer wait,
Ere you approach the mercy seat
And plead for pardon rich and free,
While he in mercy spareth thee?

Do not delay; O, come at once!
And all your evil ways renounce;
And then you'll know how good is he
Who still in mercy spareth thee.

And when you've felt his love so sweet,
While bowed before the mercy seat,
You'll feel to say, I will be thine,
Both now and inthe world to come.

Then may I not oft pray for thee,
That such thy blissful end may be?
O grant the boon, for such an end
Is deeply wished for by

So. Wilbraham.

From Bro. S. W.

We find the last time our Lord sent out his servants, he told them to "go into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." I have been solemnly impressed for a few days past that this present waking up of the church and warning the world of the judgment, was the servant's last message ere we see the sign of the Son of man; because we see a portion of the professors of religion that seem to take no part nor lot in this matter, and our Lord tells us that "none of these men which were bidden shall taste of my supper."

I feel that the judgment of the great day is at hand; and shall we cease to warn our friends and neighbors? God's Spirit is warning the ungodly of a judgment, and of their awful condition out of Christ; and if we have his Spirit shall we not move in the same order?

Truly, we are living in a grand and awful time. O, what a responsibility there is resting upon us who profess to love Jesus! I never have felt this so much as I have for a few days past. Here are those on every hand, who are going the downward road to destruction, and many are turning away from the truth. It seems after Lot had warned the Sodomites that God would destroy the city, and near the time when he was to leave the city, he went once more to his friends; but he seemed as one that mocked; nevertheless, he had the approbation of heaven's high King. If I should go among some of my friends and tell them I had been deceived, and tell them we do not know any thing about the Lord's coming, they would cease to call me a fool. I should gain their approbation, the approbation of men, and not the approbation of Heaven.

In years gone by I went with the world, and that to my satisfaction; and in 1854 I turned to the Lord and he adopted me into his family—blessed be his holy name—and ever since have shared with you in the glory of God. And now I would say, Let us be steadfast in the Lord; let us go forth, not in our own strength, but in the strength of the Lord,—go without the camp, bearing the reproach, knowing that if we suffer with him here we shall also reign with him in the blessed fields of immortality.

How much we need the spirit of Christ! It should be in all of our conversation. Let us give heed to the words of our Savior, who says, "watch!" My prayer is that we may be endowed with wisdom from on high, and ever discharge our duty in the love and fear of God, our words being such that they may find a lodgement in the sinner's heart, and they have no peace until they find Him who is the "chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely;" and thus "save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins." God forbid that for the sake of pleasing man we should cease to tell what the Lord has done for us, and warn others to prepare for the judgment day.

We all left a few friends when we started in this good way, but I feel that I have an hundred fold more of friends now than when I was in the world, and even have one that sticketh closer than a brother; one that knoweth how to succor us under all our trials and sorrows, and is a present help in every time of need, and has promised to go with us even to the end. Therefore let us fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment will come.

From Sr. S. P. Green.

My Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Wherever you are, I hope you are prospering in your pilgrimage journey. Look up, ye saints of the most high God. See, the darkness disperses before our eyes.

I claim the honor of belonging to the household of God, although my privileges are limited, and I have no means of doing the work that many are able to do, or as much as I should be glad to do. But there is plenty of work to do in the Lord's vineyard, and in whatsoever situation in this life Providence has placed us, (if we do not "hide our talents in the earth,") we may do something; and though it may look small, and of no account to us, what we do will tell in the day of judgment.

I shall make bold to tell you some of my feelings, thoughts and desires, &c. My health is feeble, many cares to attend to, some times afraid I shall not guide my children safe into the port of endless day; but I do mean to keep trying with all my might; and if, by the means of grace, we do get all our little ones along to the "pearly gates of endless joy," it is no small accomplishment; especially in these days of peril and danger. The times (spiritually) seem to me like the rough sea, with storm and tempest; and the "heaven-bound pilgrims" are something like poor sailors put to their utmost endeavors to bring to land their mangled ship, with its weather-beaten and tempest-driven crew. But we have a good leader; he will land us all safe in due time. Let us be encouraged, let what will befall us here upon the sands of time; let us "be still and know that he is God;" he will surely take care of us if we are good and obedient.

Sometimes I am afraid I do not enough exercise the grace of patience before my family, and feel somewhat disheartened, fearing I do not serve God acceptably; I feel to cry, Lord, I am not worthy of one of the least of thy favors; have mercy upon me, with all my family; suffer me, O Lord, to come before thee and implore pardon for all our sins. O Lord, put forth thy hand and keep me from falling. Teach me all thy will concerning me.—Hear my complaints for Christ's sake, and turn not away from me; for I am poor and needy. Create within me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me, that I may worship thee acceptably.

There is a great work to be done for the people in this place, or they must be lost forever. It is, and has been for a long time, my prayer, Lord, send some of thy servants into this part of thy vineyard, one that will do the work that is needed to be done, one who will be faithful—truth being in his heart, and peace flowing from his lips,—who will draw their minds away from their idols, from going any longer the broad road to destruction.

Now may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us all. Amen.

From A. M. S. B.

Time rolls on, bearing upon its bosom millions of accountable beings to their final goal. How thoughtless and giddy pass the mighty throng as they crowd the broad road that leads to death, unmindful of that glittering crown of never fading glory, had in reserve for those who only walk in the straight and narrow path their heavenly Leader trod, who said, "I am the Way, the Truth and the [Life]." "If any one will come after me, let them take up their cross and follow me." "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." But for fear of the cross, many lose the glorious prize, trying to climb up some other way. They say, we naturally have immortal souls and therefore we are a part of God, and he will not destroy himself. This is a very popular theory, although so unscriptural. Thousands make this a ground of their hope, which, I fear, will be as a spider's web in the day of the Lord Jesus. O for a hope that is like an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, reaching to that within the vail, where Christ our forerunner hath for us entered; having a living faith, a zeal that is according to knowledge; having the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelling in us, that it may also quicken us at the appearing of Jesus! Then all will be well.

The past season has been one of thrilling interest to the waiting ones. We have seen the last signs having their fulfillment. Brethren and sisters, shall we sleep as do others, and not lift the voice to the thoughtless multitude who are rushing down the broad road to ruin? "O why should we slumber in sight of the prize?"

"Oh! watch, and fight, and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore.

Ne'er think the vict'ry won,
Nor lay thine armor down;
Thy arduous work will not be done
Till thou obtain the crown."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 2, 1858.

Rutland.

Our late visit to Rutland, Vt., was one of deep interest. Notwithstanding the strong opposition and reproach with which the church has had to contend, they have made a steady advance in divine life and knowledge of the Bible. We seldom meet with those who love the pure word of the Lord more than this church, which now numbers forty-seven members. Eight were baptized on Lord's day, May 23d, and others are now waiting an opportunity. Many candid minds in that place, who were much prejudiced against us at first, are now satisfied that the doctrine we preach is true and founded upon the word of God. They begin to see the difference between truth and fables, and often exclaim, "how plain!" "why did not I see it before?" "I am astonished to see how carelessly I have read the Bible." There is a good revival in all the churches in the place. Many have been brought from darkness to light, and the work still goes on. Several have caught the missionary spirit, and are traversing the mountains and valleys to bring sinners to Christ, and their labors are followed with happy results. Let others follow their example. Now is the time to work. Brethren and sisters, be faithful. "He that winneth souls is wise."

In the evening about fifty sat down to the table of the Lord to commemorate the sufferings of our Savior. It was a season of deep interest. We think there is no scene so well adapted to cement christians to each other and the great Head of the church, as the sacrament of the Lord's supper. It is well calculated to exalt Christ and increase our affection for him, while at the same time it humbles us low in the dust, and produces close heart examination. None but christians can take satisfaction on such occasions and truly enjoy them.

We parted with a strong determination to meet, by the help of the Lord, at the marriage supper of the Lamb, which we expect soon to celebrate. During our meetings several requested prayers, and we hope soon to hear that they have found Jesus precious.

Queries.

"What is the meaning of the following Scripture?—'The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls,'" "and they 'shall be your plowmen and your vine-dressers.'"—F. Mansfield.

These prophecies are found in Isa. 60: 10, and 61: 5. Isaiah wrote till within less than one hundred years before the Jews were carried captive to Babylon, and was led to say much of their backslidden state, and the sad consequences that should follow. He begins his prophecy with a dark picture of their low condition and wide departure from the requirements of the Most High. In consequence of their iniquity, the prophet is moved to write a description of their beautiful land, as it would appear when the spoiler had spread his desolation thereon.—"Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire; your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers." Isa. 1: 7. The Lord placed before his rebellious people various motives to induce them to repent and become obedient again, but they persisted in their wayward course till they were finally carried captive to Babylon, and their land desolated. Observe how kindly the Lord addresses them in Isa. 1: 18-20.

"Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool; if ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

As a people, they did rebel, were carried to Babylon, and wore the galling yoke of bondage for seventy years.

They were cruelly treated by the Babylonians, who were a proud and oppressive nation. While looking forward to the time when their captivity should be broken by the conquests of the Medes and Persians, under Cyrus, the Lord says in chap. 13: 17-20.

"Behold, I will stir the Medes against them, (the Babylonians) . . . and Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited."

In the next chapter immediately following the foregoing awful denunciation against Babylon, he speaks comforting words to his people, and says,

"For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land; and the STRANGERS shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob. And the people shall take them and bring them to their place; and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the Lord for servants and handmaids and they shall take them (the Babylonians) captives, whose captives they were, and they shall rule over their oppressors. And it shall come to pass in the day that the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve, that thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, how hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city ceased!"

We have now found "the sons of strangers who shall build up thy walls," and "be your plowmen and your vine-dressers," and also the time when this was done; to wit, after the Jews returned from their captivity at Babylon. The strangers, who were their oppressors, "whose captives they were," became "servants and handmaids" to "the house of Israel," after their return from captivity, and were their plowmen and vine-dressers.

Spiritualism.

In the Oberlin Evangelist of April 28th, we saw an article from Joel Tiffany, a man who has been a champion in Spiritualism, and probably as well prepared to speak intelligently upon the subject as any man in our country. He says:—

"After all of our investigations for seven or eight years, we must say, that we have as much evidence that they are lying spirits as we have that there are any spirits at all. . . . The doctrines they teach . . . are mostly contradictory and absurd. . . There are those . . . who have become and are becoming victims to a sensual philosophy, under the influence of what is termed Spiritualism. . . . Spiritualism, in a very large class of minds, tends to beget a kind of moral and religious Atheism."

Said Gerrit Smith in Peterboro', Feb. 21, 1858:

"We are living in an age of great progress—great progress in the material, mental and moral world. Every thing is going forward and improving except ecclesiastical religion. That remains stereotyped and unchangeable. But we thank God for the abounding evidence that it will ere long give place to another and better religion,"—(Spiritualism.)

A New Work.

Bro. J. Lenfest has just issued a very interesting and instructive work, entitled, "The Repository of Biblical Knowledge, designed as a help for the Sabbath School, Bible Class, and Family." It is to be published quarterly. Price 81 cts, postage 3 cents.

From a hasty examination of the work, we can give it a hearty recommendation as a useful help in the study of the Scriptures. Those who wish the work can address Eld. J. Lenfest, Machiasport, Maine. When you send for it, please state whether you wish to become a subscriber to this excellent quarterly, that the succeeding numbers may be sent as fast as issued. At the close of the volume, arrangements will be made to have the numbers bound at the least possible expense to the regular subscribers, thus making a valuable work for Biblical reference.

At Salisbury, N. H., in the Baptist Meeting House, 18th inst., Bro. Nathaniel Davidson was publicly set apart to the work of the gospel ministry.

The order of exercises were as follows: Reading of hymns by the writer; introductory prayer by Eld. P. M. Hersey, (Christian denomination); sermon by Eld. F. H. Berick. After the sermon, Bro. Davidson gave a very interesting account of his call to the ministry, and of his purpose for the future. Ordaining prayer by Eld. B. Interrogatory.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to ask you a question through the Crisis. You sent me an extra sheet folded in the Crisis, a few weeks since, purporting to be "An Address from the Advent Churches in New York and Newark, N. J.," on time. What I wish to know is, did that document represent the faith or mind of the body of brethren constituting those two churches? Being somewhat acquainted with some of them, and their experience and knowledge in the historical and chronological arguments bearing on time, as connected with the prophetic periods, I with some others, were not a little surprised to receive such an address, with such a heading. Please tell us how it is, or will those brethren who wrote it tell us?

Yours still hoping for eternal life when Jesus comes. I. C. Wellcome.

A Child's Testimony.

When Mr. Whitefield was preaching in New England a lady became the subject of divine grace, and her spirit was peculiarly drawn out in prayer for others. She could persuade no one to pray with her but her little daughter, about ten years of age. After a time it pleased God to touch the heart of the child, and give her the hope of salvation. In a transport of holy joy she then exclaimed:

"O, mother, if all the world knew this! I wish I could tell everybody. Pray, let me run to some of the neighbors and tell them, that they may be happy and love my Savior."

"Ah, my child," said the mother, "that would be useless, for I suppose were you to tell your experience, there is not one within many miles who would not laugh at you, and say it was all a delusion."

"O, mother," replied the little girl, "I think they would believe me. I must go over to the shoemaker and tell him; he will believe me."

She ran over, and found him at work in his shop. She began by telling him that he must die, and that he was a sinner; and that she was a sinner, but that her blessed Savior had heard her mother's prayers, and had forgiven all her sins; and that now she was so happy, she did not know how to tell it.

The shoemaker was struck with surprise, and his tears flowed down like rain; he threw aside his work, and by prayer and supplication sought mercy. The neighborhood was awakened, and within a few months more than fifty persons were brought to the knowledge of Jesus, and to rejoice in his power and grace.—Ex.

For the Crisis.

A Christian.

Christians are scarce. Christians are valuable—Christians are precious. But where are they? There are abundance of "ites" and "ists." Men there are of various sects, names and orders; but few that are Christians. Men are not satisfied with being mere Christians. You must be something more, or something else than a Christian. You must belong to a sect. You must be wedded to a party. You must swear allegiance to a clique. You must bow to a miniature pope. If you will belong to my party you are right. If you will join the other party over the way you shall be loved or hated according to circumstances. But to belong to Christ—a Christ alone—this cannot be endured for a moment. To belong to no party is a crime.

I remember seeing once in a professedly religious newspaper some sneering and contemptuous allusions to a man that they met with that belonged to no party. As if it was a crime not to belong to a party.

Ten different sects will tell you that you may be saved outside of any nine of them if you are only in the tenth; but if you happen to be outside of the tenth you are probably a gone case. Yea, churches that never were heard of for ten or fifteen or eighteen hundred years from the time of Jesus Christ, start up and assume that in order to be saved you must join them, or some one of them, forgetting that men were saved for ages before they existed as sects or christians.

There are six different yokes laid before you. You may reject any five of them, and be a Christian and be saved, provided you wear the sixth. But if you happen to throw off the whole six and only take Christ's yoke upon you, Woe be to you. You may profess religion and not be a Christian. You may belong to a church and not be a Christian. You may be a sectarian and not be a Christian. You may belong to any denomination and not be a Christian. You may even join the "Christian connexion," and still not be a Christian. You may have any quantity of "present truths," "precious truths," "glorious truths," "important truths," "essential truths," &c. &c., and yet not be a lover of God, a disciple of Christ, a follower of the Lamb. Are you a Christian? Not an "—ist" or an "—ite,"—not a mere narrow-souled bigot, but a Christian—a believer in Jesus the Messiah and an obedient servant of the living God?

If you are a Christian, God speed you in your course. Do you suffer?—If any man suffer as a Christian let him glorify God on this behalf. Are you out of Christ, O seek to be a Christian. God help you! Begin to-day. Learn God's word, do his will, obey his voice. Be faithful in his work. Take his yoke upon you and learn of him. God bless you, reader, and save you forever with his people in glory. Amen. H. L. H.

The Effects of One Book.

Bro. Grant:—I am often encouraged, in the midst of opposition and reproach, by news that I have not labored in vain in the great West. Three years ago I gave forty of my works to book peddlers on Rail Roads, running in every direction from the capital of Indiana, and I have lately heard from one of them. Last fall I received a letter from a Bro. in Western Indiana, where our views were held by none, and hardly ever heard of, saying he had got Death not Life from a peddler, after it had been read till the covers were worn off, and it had convinced him of the truths it advocated, and given him great joy. He had sent for all our works (being able), and I send for the Crisis, and the encouragement of Brn., an extract of a long letter received from him last week.

"Dear Bro. Blain:—Since I wrote you, quite a stir has been made in this region. The church called me to an account for preaching Destruction, as they call it, or rather to try and stop me from preaching it. I told them frankly it was better 'to obey God than man,' and I should do so. They said I would lead weak minds astray: on this a leading Bro. told them he believed my views, weak-minded or not, and he knew others in the church who believed the same; so they adjourned sine die. I have no fears that they will exclude me, as our church numbers about 150, and only 13 oppose me.

Since that meeting I was challenged to debate the subject by a minister of the United Brethren in our village. We discussed the immortality of thee soul on day, and though he had agred to discuss and the union of the church, by talking to everybody of your grievances. Oh! there is something glorious in sinking self into insignificance for the glory of God, and suffering personally here for the prosperity of the cause generally. Let Judah cease to vex Ephraim, and Ephraim to trouble Judah. Let love drive the chariot wheels, forgive injuries, and then the union will be preserved.

One word more. Seek to preserve it. Set your head and heart to work out devices for this purpose. Not only let your christian inventiveness be employed to turn existing circumstances to the glory of God and for the union; but seek to furnish those means that shall directly promote it, and the God of peace shall be with you, and you will have revivals continually.

TO THE SINNER.

Why not love God? O, tell me why,
Is he not ever good to thee?
Does he not give thee life and health,
A boon above a world of wealth?

When you forget that Christ hath died,
That he for man was crucified,
And bore his sins upon the tree;
God still in mercy spareth thee.

While you forget, and are ashamed
To be among his children named;
To be a christian, bold and free,
He still in mercy spareth thee.

Not love your Father, God, in heaven?
Not seek by him to be forgiven
Of all your sins, whate'er they be,
While he in mercy spareth thee?

O, will you yet still longer wait,
Ere you approach the mercy seat
And plead for pardon rich and free,
While he in mercy spareth thee?

Do not delay; O, come at once!
And all your evil ways renounce;
And then you'll know how good is he
Who still in mercy spareth thee.

And when you've felt his love so sweet,
While bowed before the mercy seat,
You'll feel to say, I will be thine,
Both now and inthe world to come.

Then may I not oft pray for thee,
That such thy blissful end may be?
O grant the boon, for such an end
Is deeply wished for by

So. Wilbraham.

From Bro. S. W.

We find the last time our Lord sent out his servants, he told them to "go into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." I have been solemnly impressed for a few days past that this present waking up of the church and warning the world of the judgment, was the servant's last message ere we see the sign of the Son of man; because we see a portion of the professors of religion that seem to take no part nor lot in this matter, and our Lord tells us that "none of these men which were bidden shall taste of my supper."

I feel that the judgment of the great day is at hand; and shall we cease to warn our friends and neighbors? God's Spirit is warning the ungodly of a judgment, and of their awful condition out of Christ; and if we have his Spirit shall we not move in the same order?

Truly, we are living in a grand and awful time. O, what a responsibility there is resting upon us who profess to love Jesus! I never have felt this so much as I have for a few days past. Here are those on every hand, who are going the downward road to destruction, and many are turning away from the truth. It seems after Lot had warned the Sodomites that God would destroy the city, and near the time when he was to leave the city, he went once more to his friends; but he seemed as one that mocked; nevertheless, he had the approbation of heaven's high King. If I should go among some of my friends and tell them I had been deceived, and tell them we do not know any thing about the Lord's coming, they would cease to call me a fool. I should gain their approbation, the approbation of men, and not the approbation of Heaven.

In years gone by I went with the world, and that to my satisfaction; and in 1854 I turned to the Lord and he adopted me into his family—blessed be his holy name—and ever since have shared with you in the glory of God. And now I would say, Let us be steadfast in the Lord; let us go forth, not in our own strength, but in the strength of the Lord,—go without the camp, bearing the reproach, knowing that if we suffer with him here we shall also reign with him in the blessed fields of immortality.

How much we need the spirit of Christ! It should be in all of our conversation. Let us give heed to the words of our Savior, who says, "watch!" My prayer is that we may be endowed with wisdom from on high, and ever discharge our duty in the love and fear of God, our words being such that they may find a lodgement in the sinner's heart, and they have no peace until they find Him who is the "chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely;" and thus "save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins." God forbid that for the sake of pleasing man we should cease to tell what the Lord has done for us, and warn others to prepare for the judgment day.

We all left a few friends when we started in this good way, but I feel that I have an hundred fold more of friends now than when I was in the world, and even have one that sticketh closer than a brother; one that knoweth how to succor us under all our trials and sorrows, and is a present help in every time of need, and has promised to go with us even to the end. Therefore let us fear God and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment will come.

From Sr. S. P. Green.

My Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Wherever you are, I hope you are prospering in your pilgrimage journey. Look up, ye saints of the most high God. See, the darkness disperses before our eyes. I claim the honor of belonging to the household of God, although my privileges are limited, and I have no means of doing the work that many are able to do, or as much as I should be glad to do. But there is plenty of work to do in the Lord's vineyard, and in whatsoever situation in this life Providence has placed us, (if we do not "hide our talents in the earth,") we may do something; and though it may look small, and of no account to us, what we do will tell in the day of judgment.

I shall make bold to tell you some of my feelings, thoughts and desires, &c. My health is feeble, many cares to attend to, some times afraid I shall not guide my children safe into the port of endless day; but I do mean to keep trying with all my might; and if, by the means of grace, we do get all our little ones along to the "pearly gates of endless joy," it is no small accomplishment; especially in these days of peril and danger. The times (spiritually) seem to me like the rough sea, with storm and tempest; and the "heaven-bound pilgrims" are something like poor sailors put to their utmost endeavors to bring to land their mangled ship, with its weather-beaten and tempest-driven crew. But we have a good leader; he will land us all safe in due time. Let us be encouraged, let what will befall us here upon the sands of time; let us "be still and know that he is God;" he will surely take care of us if we are good and obedient.

Sometimes I am afraid I do not enough exercise the grace of patience before my family, and feel somewhat disheartened, fearing I do not serve God acceptably; I feel to cry, Lord, I am not worthy of one of the least of thy favors; have mercy upon me, with all my family; suffer me, O Lord, to come before thee and implore pardon for all our sins. O Lord, put forth thy hand and keep me from falling. Teach me all thy will concerning me.—Hear my complaints for Christ's sake, and turn not away from me; for I am poor and needy. Create within me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me, that I may worship thee acceptably.

There is a great work to be done for the people in this place, or they must be lost forever. It is, and has been for a long time, my prayer, Lord, send some of thy servants into this part of thy vineyard, one that will do the work that is needed to be done, one who will be faithful—truth being in his heart, and peace flowing from his lips,—who will draw their minds away from their idols, from going any longer the broad road to destruction.

Now may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with us all. Amen.

From A. M. S. B.

Time rolls on, bearing upon its bosom millions of accountable beings to their final goal. How thoughtless and giddy pass the mighty throng as they crowd the broad road that leads to death, unmindful of that glittering crown of never fading glory, had in reserve for those who only walk in the straight and narrow path their heavenly Leader trod, who said, "I am the Way, the Truth and the [illegible]." "If any one will come after me, let them take up their cross and follow me." "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." But for fear of the cross, many lose the glorious prize, trying to climb up some other way. They say, we naturally have immortal souls and therefore we are a part of God, and he will not destroy himself. This is a very popular theory, although so unscriptural. Thousands make this a ground of their hope, which, I fear, will be as a spider's web in the day of the Lord Jesus. O for a hope that is like an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast, reaching to that within the vail, where Christ our forerunner hath for us entered; having a living faith, a zeal that is according to knowledge; having the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwelling in us, that it may also quicken us at the appearing of Jesus! Then all will be well.

The past season has been one of thrilling interest to the waiting ones. We have seen the last signs having their fulfillment. Brethren and sisters, shall we sleep as do others, and not lift the voice to the thoughtless multitude who are rushing down the broad road to ruin? "O why should we slumber in sight of the prize?"

"Oh! watch, and fight, and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er;
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore.

Ne'er think the vict'ry won,
Nor lay thine armor down;
Thy arduous work will not be done
Till thou obtain the crown."

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 2, 1858.

Rutland.

Our late visit to Rutland, Vt., was one of deep interest. Notwithstanding the strong opposition and reproach with which the church has had to contend, they have made a steady advance in divine life and knowledge of the Bible. We seldom meet with those who love the pure word of the Lord more than this church, which now numbers forty-seven members. Eight were baptized on Lord's day, May 23d, and others are now waiting an opportunity. Many candid minds in that place, who were much prejudiced against us at first, are now satisfied that the doctrine we preach is true and founded upon the word of God. They begin to see the difference between truth and fables, and often exclaim, "how plain!" "why did not I see it before?" "I am astonished to see how carelessly I have read the Bible." There is a good revival in all the churches in the place. Many have been brought from darkness to light, and the work still goes on. Several have caught the missionary spirit, and are traversing the mountains and valleys to bring sinners to Christ, and their labors are followed with happy results. Let others follow their example. Now is the time to work. Brethren and sisters, be faithful. "He that winneth souls is wise."

In the evening about fifty sat down to the table of the Lord to commemorate the sufferings of our Savior. It was a season of deep interest. We think there is no scene so well adapted to cement christians to each other and the great Head of the church, as the sacrament of the Lord's supper. It is well calculated to exalt Christ and increase our affection for him, while at the same time it humbles us low in the dust, and produces close heart examination. None but christians can take satisfaction on such occasions and truly enjoy them.

We parted with a strong determination to meet, by the help of the Lord, at the marriage supper of the Lamb, which we expect soon to celebrate. During our meetings several requested prayers, and we hope soon to hear that they have found Jesus precious.

Queries.

"What is the meaning of the following Scripture?—'The sons of strangers shall build up thy walls,'" "and they 'shall be your plowmen and your vine-dressers.'"—F. Mansfield.

These prophecies are found in Isa. 60: 10, and 61: 5. Isaiah wrote till within less than one hundred years before the Jews were carried captive to Babylon, and was led to say much of their backslidden state, and the sad consequences that should follow. He begins his prophecy with a dark picture of their low condition and wide departure from the requirements of the Most High. In consequence of their iniquity, the prophet is moved to write a description of their beautiful land, as it would appear when the spoiler had spread his desolation thereon.—"Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire; your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers." Isa. 1: 7. The Lord placed before his rebellious people various motives to induce them to repent and become obedient again, but they persisted in their wayward course till they were finally carried captive to Babylon, and their land desolated. Observe how kindly the Lord addresses them in Isa. 1: 18–20.

"Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool; if ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land; but if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

As a people, they did rebel, were carried to Babylon, and wore the galling yoke of bondage for seventy years.

They were cruelly treated by the Babylonians, who were a proud and oppressive nation. While looking forward to the time when their captivity should be broken by the conquests of the Medes and Persians, under Cyrus, the Lord says in chap. 13: 17–20.

"Behold, I will stir the Medes against them, (the Babylonians) . . . and Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited."

In the next chapter immediately following the foregoing awful denunciation against Babylon, he speaks comforting words to his people, and says,

"For the Lord will have mercy on Jacob, and will yet choose Israel, and set them in their own land; and the strangers shall be joined with them, and they shall cleave to the house of Jacob. And the people shall take them and bring them to their place; and the house of Israel shall possess them in the land of the Lord for servants and handmaids and they shall take them (the Babylonians) captives, whose captives they were, and they shall rule over their oppressors. And it shall come to pass in the day that the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve, that thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, how hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city ceased!"

We have now found "the sons of strangers who shall build up thy walls," and "be your plowmen and your vine-dressers," and also the time when this was done; to wit, after the Jews returned from their captivity at Babylon. The strangers, who were their oppressors, "whose captives they were," became "servants and handmaids" to "the house of Israel," after their return from captivity, and were their plowmen and vine-dressers.

Spiritualism.

In the Oberlin Evangelist of April 28th, we saw an article from Joel Tiffany, a man who has been a champion in Spiritualism, and probably as well prepared to speak intelligently upon the subject as any man in our country. He says:—

"After all of our investigations for seven or eight years, we must say, that we have as much evidence that they are lying spirits as we have that there are any spirits at all. . . . The doctrines they teach . . . are mostly contradictory and absurd. . . There are those . . . who have become and are becoming victims to a sensual philosophy, under the influence of what is termed Spiritualism. . . . Spiritualism, in a very large class of minds, tends to beget a kind of moral and religious Atheism."

Said Gerrit Smith in Peterboro', Feb. 21, 1858:

"We are living in an age of great progress—great progress in the material, mental and moral world. Every thing is going forward and improving except ecclesiastical religion. That remains stereotyped and unchangeable. But we thank God for the abounding evidence that it will ere long give place to another and better religion,"—(Spiritualism.)

A New Work.

Bro. J. Lenfest has just issued a very interesting and instructive work, entitled, "The Repository of Biblical Knowledge, designed as a help for the Sabbath School, Bible Class, and Family." It is to be published quarterly. Price 31 cts, postage 3 cents.

From a hasty examination of the work, we can give it a hearty recommendation as a useful help in the study of the Scriptures. Those who wish the work can address Eld. J. Lenfest, Machiasport, Maine. When you send for it, please state whether you wish to become a subscriber to this excellent quarterly, that the succeeding numbers may be sent as fast as issued. At the close of the volume, arrangements will be made to have the numbers bound at the least possible expense to the regular subscribers, thus making a valuable work for Biblical reference.

Ordination.

At Salisbury, N. H., in the Baptist Meeting House, 18th inst., Bro. Nathaniel Davidson was publicly set apart to the work of the gospel ministry.

The order of exercises were as follows: Reading of hymns by the writer; introductory prayer by Eld. P. M. Hersey, (Christian denomination); sermon by Eld. F. H. Berick. After the sermon, Bro. Davidson gave a very interesting account of his call to the ministry, and of his purpose for the future. Ordaining prayer by Eld. B. Locke; right hand of fellowship, and charge by the writer; and benediction by Eld. M. B. Scribner, of the Christian order. The meeting throughout was one of no ordinary interest.

Interrogatory.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to ask you a question through the Crisis. You sent me an extra sheet folded in the Crisis, a few weeks since, purporting to be "An Address from the Advent Churches in New York and Newark, N. J.," on time. What I wish to know is, did that document represent the faith or mind of the body of brethren constituting those two churches? Being somewhat acquainted with some of them, and their experience and knowledge in the historical and chronological arguments bearing on time, as connected with the prophetic periods, I with some others, were not a little surprised to receive such an address, with such a heading. Please tell us how it is, or will those brethren who wrote it tell us?

Yours still hoping for eternal life when Jesus comes. I. C. Wellcome.

A Child's Testimony.

When Mr. Whitefield was preaching in New England a lady became the subject of divine grace, and her spirit was peculiarly drawn out in prayer for others. She could persuade no one to pray with her but her little daughter, about ten years of age. After a time it pleased God to touch the heart of the child, and give her the hope of salvation. In a transport of holy joy she then exclaimed;

"O, mother, if all the world knew this! I wish I could tell everybody. Pray, let me run to some of the neighbors and tell them, that they may be happy and love my Savior."

"Ah, my child," said the mother, "that would be useless, for I suppose were you to tell your experience, there is not one within many miles who would not laugh at you, and say it was all a delusion."

"O, mother," replied the little girl, "I think they would believe me. I must go over to the shoemaker and tell him; he will believe me."

She ran over, and found him at work in his shop. She began by telling him that he must die, and that he was a sinner; and that she was a sinner, but that her blessed Savior had heard her mother's prayers, and had forgiven all her sins; and that now she was so happy, she did not know how to tell it.

The shoemaker was struck with surprise, and his tears flowed down like rain; he threw aside his work, and by prayer and supplication sought mercy. The neighborhood was awakened, and within a few months more than fifty persons were brought to the knowledge of Jesus, and to rejoice in his power and grace.—Ex.

A Christian.

Christians are scarce. Christians are valuable—Christians are precious. But where are they? There are abundance of "ites" and "ists." Men there are of various sects, names and orders; but few that are Christians. Men are not satisfied with being mere Christians. You must be something more, or something else than a Christian. You must belong to a sect. You must be wedded to a party. You must swear allegiance to a clique. You must bow to a miniature pope. If you will belong to my party you are right. If you will join the other party over the way you shall be loved or hated according to circumstances. But to belong to Christ—to Christ alone—this cannot be endured for a moment. To belong to no party is a crime.

I remember seeing once in a professedly religious newspaper some sneering and contemptuous allusions to a man that they met with that belonged to no party. As if it was a crime not to belong to a party.

The Effects of One Book.

Bro. Grant:—I am often encouraged, in the midst of opposition and reproach, by news that I have not labored in vain in the great West. Three years ago I gave forty of my works to book peddlers on Rail Roads, running in every direction from the capital of Indiana, and I have lately heard from one of them Last fall I received a letter from a Bro. in Western Indiana, where our views were held by none, and hardly ever heard of, saying he had got Death not Life from a peddler, after it had been read till the covers were worn off, and it had convinced him of the truths it advocated, and given him great joy. He had sent for all our works (being able), and I send for the Crisis, and the encouragement of Brn., an extract of a long letter received from him last week.

"Dear Bro. Blain:—Since I wrote you, quite a stir has been made in this region. Since that meeting I was challenged to debate the subject by a minister of the United Brethren in our village. We discussed the immortality of the soul on day, and though he had agreed to discuss the destiny of the wicked, he backed out after the first day's debate, saying he was not prepared. Many eyes were opened.

One of my own brethren, twelve miles from here, challenged me to debate with him. He had a large assembly at two different times, and he owned, what brethren told him—that he was beaten, and said my views might be correct.

Our debate on non-immortality aroused the ire of the Spirit Rappers, and they got two of their strong men to debate with me, but after the first day they backed out, and left me to address a large assembly alone. Their doctrine is now about done with there, and the church they had about destroyed is built up again. You see truth is mighty and will prevail.

Eld. Potts (the brother I spoke of as coming to convince me, last year, but got convinced himself,) has commenced to advocate our views publicly. He has convinced one preacher, and perhaps two—one is a presiding elder, and has received into his church a preaching brother who believes with us. Thanks to God, Bro. Blain, for that book of yours, which I got of the peddler.

If you will send me $10 or $15 worth of books and tracts, I will pay for them in Oct. I expect the United Brethren will turn Eld. Potts out of their Conference, and if they do, I will see that he does not suffer. [The United Brethren are somewhat numerous in some of the western States. They are a very pious people, and similar to our Methodist brethren. J. B.]

Can you not 'come over and help us?' Direct books, &c., to Dr. Wm. L. Knight, Cole Creek, Fountain Co., Ind."

I hope ere long to hear more from the forty books I gave the peddlers to get them into new fields, but if not I shall be satisfied with the good this one has produced, and be thankful to my Master for the precious privilege of making sacrifices to honor his name, and comfort his people.

The Lord permitting, I shall be at the Conference in Worcester, June 8th, and have a supply of my works for brethren who may wish them to sell. The revival is subsiding here. JACOB BLAIN.

The Worship and Service of God.

"If any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth."

This passage seems to be susceptible of three divisions.

1. Worshipping God.
2. Doing his will.
3. An assurance of being heard by him.

Worshiping God. This is an important part of the christian's duty. But the manner in which it is performed by many, renders it an insult rather than an acceptable service to him. What is the meaning of worship? It is homage, reverence, respect; and how do we show our respect to our fellow mortals in the flesh? We should consider it an act of impoliteness to offer them our hand in a sitting posture.

If the President, or Governor, was to receive a public reception in an audience or drawing room, the person who would not rise from his seat would be considered low bred and disrespectful. And if we consider it our duty thus to respect our fellow men, ought we not to show some token of reverence to the Ruler of the universe, when we assemble professedly for his worship? I know that there are many who consider it a matter of little importance respecting kneeling in time of public prayer; but they cannot find any word in scripture to excuse them. We read of standing in prayer, and kneeling also, but not of sitting.

To conclude this division of the subject, I think the man or woman who is too proud to kneel in public, will be too proud to get in to the kingdom of heaven.

Doing his will. And what is the will of God respecting man? It may be summed up in few words; it is to have pure religion. But in these days of spiritual quacks there are those who, if they had the power, would invade the sacred council chamber of the Almighty, and undertake to improve the system of religion that was given to the world by Jesus Christ; but, like the rock in the ocean, it has withstood the storm and rage of foes for ages, and is yet the same truth teat it was when uttered by the tongue of him who spake as never man spake.

Pure religion and undefiled before God, is to visit the widows and the fatherless in their affliction, and to keep unspotted from the world; to feed the hungry and clothe the naked; and whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. It required but few words for him to tell it, and it need not require any great stretch of the imagination or philosophy on our part, to comprehend it. This appears to be the substance of what is required of us.

But, as has been stated, there are restless spirits who connot be content with these simple truths, but endeavor to attach to them an endless variety of isms, or leave them entirely out of their creed. We have this consolation, however, that we are not to be judged for our opinions or creeds, but for our character. In the descriptions of the judgment, Christ is represented as rewarding those on the right hand for what they had done, and not what they had believed. And that we may be thus rewarded, let us go and do likewise.

The third division of the subject may be expressed in a few passages of Scripture. "If ye abide in the vine ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." "Ask and receive, that your joy may be full." "If we know that he heare thus, we know that we have the things that we desire of him." Amen.

Sit Upright.

"Sit upright! sit upright, my son!" said a lady to her son George, who had formed a wretched habit of bending whenever he sat down to read. His mother had told him that he could not breathe right unless he sat upright. But it was no use; bend over he would in spite of all his mother could say.

"Sit upright, master George," said the teacher, as George bent over his copy book at school. "If you don't sit upright, like Master Charles, you will ruin your health, and possibly die of consumption."

This startled Master George. He did not want to die, and he felt alarmed. So after school he said to his teacher—

"Please explain to me how bending over when I sit can give me the consumption?"

"That I will, George," replied the teacher with a cordial smile. "There is an element in the air called oxygen, which is necessary to make your blood circulate, and to help it to purify itself by throwing off what is called carbon. When you stoop you cannot take in sufficient quantity of air to accomplish these purposes; hence the air remains bad, and the air-cells in your lungs inflame. The cough comes on. Next the lungs ulcerate, and then you die. Give the lungs room to inspire plenty of air, and you will not be injured by study. Do you understand the matter now, George?"

"I think I do, sir, and I will try to sit upright hereafter," said George.

Health Department.

Influence of the Feelings and Passions on the Circulation.

"The passions founded on pleasure," says Dr. Sweetser, "cause a universal expansion—if so it may be expressed,—of vital action. The blood, under their animating influence, flows more liberally to the superficies; and playing freely through its capillary vessels, the countenance becomes expanded, its expression brightens, and the whole surface acquires the ruddy tint and genial warmth of health."

"Nothing," adds the same excellent writer, and in the very same connection, "contributes more effectively to the healthful and harmonious action of our organism, than an equable distribution of the blood to its various parts, and especially the free circulation of this fluid in the extreme vessels of the surface. Thus a full, bright, and ruddy skin is always ranked among the surest tokens of health." And Haller had said, long before this, "Love, hope, and joy, promote perspiration, quicken the pulse, promote the circulation, restore the appetite, and facilitate the cure of disease."

But, as the elevating passions and affections promote the circulation and give a centrifugal tendency to fluids generally, so the depressing passions and affections have the contrary effect. The blood, instead of tending to the surface, expanding the body and lightening and cheering the heart, abandons the surface; and being thrown, in undue quality, upon the internal organs, a painful sensation of stricture and suffocation is apt to follow, and the health must ultimately suffer.

I do not say that the painful emotions and passions, when only temporarily indulged, are destructive of health in any considerable degree. Thus, we may be subjected to a limited degree of fear, grief, and perhaps even of hatred or anger for a moment, or on special occasions, for a very short time, as at the approach of a thunder-storm, or at the loss of a dear and valued friend, without material injury. God has kindly adapted us to the world in which he has placed us—its storms as well as its sunshine.

It is, in general, the permanent influence of the depressing passions, that does the mischief to the circulatory system. It is this that fills the world with mourning, lamentation and woe. Not, I again say, that the temporary influence of such things has no evil effects, but only that it is not this whose influence is most to be deprecated.

It is not a little curious to note the wonderful fact that whatever is good for the health is good spiritually. Thus, christianity, by encouraging the culivation and the enthronement of the elevating passions and affections, and inspiring us with hope and trust in God, and love to man, is as profitable for the life that now is as for that which is to come.

Domestic Summary.

An epidemic supposed to be the cholera is said to be killing off the hogs at a rapid rate in the south-western portion of Montgomery county, Va. One gentleman lost twenty two in five or six days, and in one neighborhood some 150 or 200 hogs have died.

A BULLET FORTY YEARS IN A MAN'S LUNG.—At the recent Scientific Convention at Baltimore, Dr. Wurtz read an interesting paper giving the results of some chemical examination connected with a bullet imbedded for more than forty years in a man's lung. The individual whose experience had exhibited the effect of metallic lead imbedded in the human frame was an Irishman named Wm. Kelley, who had received a bullet wound at the siege of Badojos, in the Peninsular War, retired upon a pension from the British Government, and died recently in the hospital at Kingston, Canada. Upon dissection, the bullet was found enclosed in a cyst, or bag, within the lung, and closely adhering to its walls in several places. The ball had lost one hundred grains of its original weight (three hundred and seventy grains) by corrosion. A portion of the amount of lead thus lost was recovered from the lungs and diaphragm.

An immense activity reigns in the maritime ports of France, and no nation of the world is increasing its naval strength at the present moment with the same rapidity as that country. Its army now number 620,000 men; its navy is very nearly, and will soon perhaps be quite, equal to that of England.

PRAYER MEETING ON A WHALER.—The New Bedford Mercury states that the crew of the whaling barque Ionia, Capt. Morse, which sailed from that port on Tuesday, previous to leaving port held a prayer meeting in the forecastle, after which they passed a series of resolutions for their good conduct during the voyage, one of which was a prohibition and pledge against swearing, and another that prayers should be had night and morning in the forecastle, with the captain's permission. Henry W. Woods, one of the crew from Chicopee, Mass., was foremost in this good work.

THE UTAH ARMY.—New York, May 29.—(Washington Correspondence.)—A gentleman who arrived here to-day direct from Fort Leavenworth, says Gen. Harney pays no attention to the reported submission of Gov. Young, but is pushing forward the reinforcements and supply trains. Large Mormon trains were leaving various points in Nebraska for Salt Lake, carrying great quantities of arms, ammunition and clothing, and manifesting a very hostile spirit. Many Mormons were also hanging about the fort and following the trains in various capacities.

Rumors are in circulation of a battle on the Southern border, between the Free State force and a party of Missourians, in which 21 persons were killed and 11 wounded. The news is not authentic.

PRAYER.—It is remarkable that (as they that search those things may observe,) the words of the Lord's Prayer are divers of them such as come near the words of petitions which were usual among the Jews, though he, in whom was all fullness and wisdom, was not scarce of matter and words, so little was novelty and variety desirable in prayer in his esteem. Mistake it not, the spirit of prayer hath not his seat in the invention but in the affection. In this many deceive themselves, in that they think the work of this spirit of prayer to be mainly in furnishing new supplies of thoughts and words; no, it is mainly in exciting the heart anew in times of prayer to break forth itself in ardent desires to God, whatsoever the words be, whether new or old.—[Archbishop Leighton.

THE RIOT AT PHILADELPHIA.—The Philadelphia Bulletin gives the annexed account of the riot in that city, mentioned by telegraph.

"It seems that the Philadelphia Lafayette Rifles, a German military organization under the command of Capt. Ballier, celebrated Whitesuntide Monday by a sham fight and picnic on Lemon Hill.

Things were comparatively quiet during the day, but towards night the wine and lager had made some of the persons on the hill tipsy and excitable. Wrangles took place, and during one of them which took place just as the company left the hill to return home, late in the afternoon, a Fourteenth Ward officer was cut in the hand by a sword in the hands of one of the military. The police attempted to seize the soldier who struck the blow, and the military resisted.—The mob took sides with the police, the ranks of the military became broken, and the men with their clubbed rifles struck their blows right and left, while the crowd threw stones and brick-bats.

On the part of the police several men were badly bruised by blows from rifle-butts. Officer Duncan of the fifteenth ward was struck in the hip by a blank cartridge and badly wounded, and an officer of the Fourteenth Ward was cut about the head with a sword.

The military fared worse than the citizens. Three of the men in the ranks having been shot, and two having received severe cuts with brick bats.

Frank Wendell, a private in the company, and a marriep man, living in Arch street, below third, was shot in the right breast. The ball entered the lung, and it has not yet been extracted. His condition is considered very dangerous. Charles Bremner, a private, single man, living in Race street, between Third and Fourth, was shot in the left breast. The ball entered just below the heart. It has been extracted. The condition of Brenner is critical. George Lhuster was shot in the arm.

Capt. Ballier resisted the arrest of the man, and assured the police that he should be handed over to the authorities as soon as he had reached the armory of the company, in tqird street, below Green. Some sort of order was finally obtained, and the company continued its march down Coates street, followed by the excited crowd. At twenty-third and Coates streets a warrant was procured at the office of Alderman Binder, and an effort was made to serve it upon the offending soldier. The attempt was resisted and a furious fight took place. The crowd threw brickbats, the military used their swords and the butts of their rifles, and some shots were fired from the latter; while the police fired their revolvers."

The Maine Conference of Adventists.

This conference is to be holden in Richmond, Reed Meeting-house, to commence on Thursday, 10 o'clock, A. M., June 17th, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that those who are specially interested in the great truths which have called us out as a distinct class, sufficiently see and feel that the cause they have espoused, and which has already benefited so many, demands their continued and more united efforts to sustain and increase the interest upon the all-important theme of the day of the Lord, the judgment, and the kingdom of God at hand. Never, since we became a people, has there been a time when we could labor so understandingly and effectually as now. Let us try to unite all our strength given by the Lord, and encourage all who are inclined to the truth. Come, brethren, all who can consistently, and let us see each other again in the flesh; talk, pray, sing, and consult how we may best act to save our fellow men and ourselves by the instrumentalities God has put in our hands. The meeting is 2 miles from the Rail Road station and from steamboat wharf. Those coming from the North can arrive at 12 M. Those from the South and West at 3 P. M. Should any endeavor to come Wednesday, brethren in the vicinity, though few, will do all they can to provide for them, and will furnish pasturing for the horses. As this meeting is intended for the benefit of the cause generally, in all parts of the State, churches and lay brethren should furnish means to defray the expenses of the ministers, or come prepared to contribute at the meeting; as those in the place will do all their duty in taking care of those who come, and they will be glad to see all who can come. Call for Eld. I. C. Wellcome, at the village, or David Robinson, Low Curtis, or John Umberhind in the vicinity.

We take the liberty to sign the names to this call of several of our ministers whom we know to be anxious for the meeting, as time has not permitted us to notify them of its arrangement. Will all other ministers interested, send their names to the offices to be added? N. SMITH, Chairman,

Subscribers to the Camp Ground fund are requested to forward their subscription to R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass., at as early a date as possible. Arrangements are now being made to make the contemplated improvements upon the opening of Spring, and it is desirable to have the means at hand to meet all bills as they are made. All our brethren and sisters are invited to contribute to the fund whether they are subscribers or not.

the destiny of the wicked, he backed out after the first day's debate, saying he was not prepared. Many eyes were opened.

One of my own brethren, twelve miles from here, challenged me to debate with him. He had a large assembly at two different times, and he owned, what brethren told him—that he was beaten, and said my views might be correct.

Our debate on non-immortality aroused the ire of the Spirit Rappers, and they got two of their strong men to debate with me, but after the first day they backed out, and left me to address a large assembly alone. Their doctrine is now about done with there, and the church they had about destroyed is built up again. You see truth is mighty and will prevail.

Eld. Potts (the brother I spoke of as coming to convince me, last year, but got convinced himself,) has commenced to advocate our views publicly. He has convinced one preacher, and perhaps two—one is a presiding elder, and has received into his church a preaching brother who believes with us. Thanks to God, Bro. Blain, for that book of yours, which I got of the peddler.

If you will send me $10 or $15 worth of books and tracts, I will pay for them in Oct. I expect the United Brethren will turn Eld. Potts out of their Conference, and if they do, I will see that he does not suffer. [The United Brethren are somewhat numerous in some of the western States. They are a very pious people, and similar to our Methodist brethren. J. B.]

Can you not 'come over and help us?' Direct books, &c., to Dr. Wm. L. Knight, Cole Creek, Fountain Co., Ind."

I hope ere long to hear more from the forty books I gave the peddlers to get them into new fields, but if not I shall be satisfied with the good this one has produced, and be thankful to my Master for the precious privilege of making sacrifices to honor his name, and comfort his people.

The Lord permitting, I shall be at the Conference in Worcester, June 8th, and have a supply of my works for brethren who may wish them to sell. The revival is subsiding here. JACOB BLAIN.

For the Crisis.

The Worship and Service of God.

"If any man be a worshiper of God, and doeth his will, him he heareth."

This passage seems to be susceptible of three divisions.

1. Worshipping God.
2. Doing his will.
3. An assurance of being heard by him.

Worshiping God. This is an important part of the christian's duty. But the manner in which it is performed by many, renders it an insult rather than an acceptable service to him. What is the meaning of worship? It is homage, reverence, respect; and how do we show our respect to our fellow mortals in the flesh? We should consider it an act of impoliteness to offer them our hand in a sitting posture.

If the President, or Governor, was to receive a public reception in an audience or drawing room, the person who would not rise from his seat would be considered low bred and disrespectful. And if we consider it our duty thus to respect our fellow men, ought we not to show some token of reverence to the Ruler of the universe, when we assemble professedly for his worship? I know that there are many who consider it a matter of little importance respecting kneeling in time of public prayer; but they cannot find any word in scripture to excuse them. We read of standing in prayer, and kneeling also, but not of sitting.

To conclude this division of the subject, I think the man or woman who is too proud to kneel in public, will be too proud to get in to the kingdom of heaven.

Doing his will. And what is the will of God respecting man? It may be summed up in few words; it is to have pure religion. But in these days of spiritual quacks there are those who, if they had the power, would invade the sacred council chamber of the Almighty, and undertake to improve the system of religion that was given to the world by Jesus Christ; but, like the rock in the ocean, it has withstood the storm and rage of foes for ages, and is yet the same truth that it was when uttered by the tongue of him who spake as never man spake.

Pure religion and undefiled before God, is to visit the widows and the fatherless in their affliction, and to keep unspotted from the world; to feed the hungry and clothe the naked; and whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them. It required but few words for him to tell it, and it need not require any great stretch of the imagination, or philosophy on our part, to comprehend it. This appears to be the substance of what is required of us.

But, as has been stated, there are restless spirits who cannot be content with these simple truths, but endeavor to attach to them an endless variety of isms, or leave them entirely out of their creed. We have this consolation, however, that we are not to be judged for our opinions or creeds, but for our character. In the descriptions of the judgment, Christ is represented as rewarding those on the right hand for what they had done, and not what they had believed. And that we may be thus rewarded, let us go and do likewise.

The third division of the subject may be expressed in a few passages of Scripture. "If ye abide in the vine ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." "Ask and receive, that your joy may be full." "If we know that he heare thus, we know that we have the things that we desire of him." Amen.

Sit Upright.

"Sit upright! sit upright, my son!" said a lady to her son George, who had formed a wretched habit of bending whenever he sat down to read. His mother had told him that he could not breathe right unless he sat upright. But it was no use; bend over he would in spite of all his mother could say.

"Sit upright, master George," said the teacher, as George bent over his copy book at school. "If you don't sit upright, like Master Charles, you will ruin your health, and possibly die of consumption."

This startled Master George. He did not want to die, and he felt alarmed. So after school he said to his teacher—

"Please explain to me how bending over when I sit can give me the consumption?"

"That I will, George," replied the teacher with a cordial smile. "There is an element in the air called oxygen, which is necessary to make your blood circulate, and to help it to purify itself by throwing off what is called carbon. When you stoop you cannot take in sufficient quantity of air to accomplish these purposes; hence the air remains bad, and the air-cells in your lungs inflame. The cough comes on. Next the lungs ulcerate, and then you die. Give the lungs room to inspire plenty of air, and you will not be injured by study. Do you understand the matter now, George?"

"I think I do, sir, and I will try to sit upright hereafter," said George.

Health Department.

Influence of the Feelings and Passions on the Circulation.

"The passions founded on pleasure," says Dr. Sweetser, "cause a universal expansion—if so it may be expressed,—of vital action. The blood, under their animating influence, flows more liberally to the superficies; and playing freely through its capillary vessels, the countenance becomes expanded, its expression brightens, and the whole surface acquires the ruddy tint and genial warmth of health."

"Nothing," adds the same excellent writer, and in the very same connection, "contributes more effectively to the healthful and harmonious action of our organism, than an equable distribution of the blood to its various parts, and especially the free circulation of this fluid in the extreme vessels of the surface. Thus a full, bright, and ruddy skin is always ranked among the surest tokens of health." And Haller had said, long before this, "Love, hope, and joy, promote perspiration, quicken the pulse, promote the circulation, restore the appetite, and facilitate the cure of disease."

But, as the elevating passions and affections promote the circulation and give a centrifugal tendency to fluids generally, so the depressing passions and affections have the contrary effect. The blood, instead of tending to the surface, expanding the body and lightening and cheering the heart, abandons the surface; and being thrown, in undue quality, upon the internal organs, a painful sensation of stricture and suffocation is apt to follow, and the health must ultimately suffer.

I do not say that the painful emotions and passions, when only temporarily indulged, are destructive of health in any considerable degree. Thus, we may be subjected to a limited degree of fear, grief, and perhaps even of hatred or anger for a moment, or on special occasions, for a very short time, as at the approach of a thunder-storm, or at the loss of a dear and valued friend, without material injury. God has kindly adapted us to the world in which he has placed us—its storms as well as its sunshine.

It is, in general, the permanent influence of the depressing passions, that does the mischief to the circulatory system. It is this that fills the world with mourning, lamentation and woe. Not, I again say, that the temporary influence of such things has no evil effects, but only that it is not this whose influence is most to be deprecated.

It is not a little curious to note the wonderful fact that whatever is good for the health is good spiritually. Thus, christianity, by encouraging the cultivation and the enthronement of the elevating passions and affections, and inspiring us with hope and trust in God, and love to man, is as profitable for the life that now is as for that which is to come.

Domestic Summary.

An epidemic supposed to be the cholera is said to be killing off the hogs at a rapid rate in the south-western portion of Montgomery county, Va. One gentleman lost twenty-two in five or six days, and in one neighborhood some 150 or 200 hogs have died.

A BULLET FORTY YEARS IN A MAN'S LUNG.—At the recent Scientific Convention at Baltimore, Dr. Wurts read an interesting paper giving the results of some chemical examination connected with a bullet imbedded for more than forty years in a man's lung. The individual whose experience had exhibited the effect of metallic lead imbedded in the human frame was an Irishman named Wm. Kelley, who had received a bullet wound at the siege of Badajos, in the Peninsular War, retired upon a pension from the British Government, and died recently in the hospital at Kingston, Canada. Upon dissection, the bullet was found enclosed in a cyst, or bag, within the lung, and closely adhering to its walls in several places. The ball had lost one hundred grains of its original weight (three hundred and seventy grains) by corrosion. A portion of the amount of lead thus lost was recovered from the lungs and diaphragm.

An immense activity reigns in the maritime ports of France, and no nation of the world is increasing its naval strength at the present moment with the same rapidity as that country. Its army now number 620,000 men; its navy is very nearly, and will soon perhaps be quite, equal to that of England.

PRAYER MEETING ON A WHALER.—The New Bedford Mercury states that the crew of the whaling barque Ionia, Capt. Morse, which sailed from that port on Tuesday, previous to leaving port held a prayer meeting in the forecastle, after which they passed a series of resolutions for their good conduct during the voyage, one of which was a prohibition and pledge against swearing, and another that prayers should be had night and morning in the forecastle, with the captain's permission. Henry W. Woods, one of the crew from Chicopee, Mass., was foremost in this good work.

THE UTAH ARMY.—New York, May 29.—(Washington Correspondence.)—A gentleman who arrived here to-day direct from Fort Leavenworth, says Gen. Harney pays no attention to the reported submission of Gov. Young, but is pushing forward the reinforcements and supply trains. Large Mormon trains were leaving various points in Nebraska for Salt Lake, carrying great quantities of arms, ammunition and clothing, and manifesting a very hostile spirit. Many Mormons were also hanging about the fort and following the trains in various capacities.

Rumors are in circulation of a battle on the Southern border, between the Free State force and a party of Missourians, in which 21 persons were killed and 11 wounded. The news is not authentic.

PRAYER.—It is remarkable that (as they that search those things may observe,) the words of the Lord's Prayer are divers of them such as come near the words of petitions which were usual among the Jews, though he, in whom was all fullness and wisdom, was not scarce of matter and words, so little was novelty and variety desirable in prayer in his esteem. Mistake it not, the spirit of prayer hath not his seat in the invention but in the affection. In this many deceive themselves, in that they think the work of this spirit of prayer to be mainly in furnishing new supplies of thoughts and words; no, it is mainly in exciting the heart anew in times of prayer to break forth itself in ardent desires to God, whatsoever the words be, whether new or old.—[Archbishop Leighton.

THE RIOT AT PHILADELPHIA.—The Philadelphia Bulletin gives the annexed account of the riot in that city, mentioned by telegraph.

"It seems that the Philadelphia Lafayette Rifles, a German military organization under the command of Capt. Ballier, celebrated Whitesuntide Monday by a sham fight and picnic on Lemon Hill.

Things were comparatively quiet during the day, but towards night the wine and lager had made some of the persons on the hill tipsy and excitable. Wrangles took place, and during one of them which took place just as the company left the hill to return home, late in the afternoon, a Fourteenth Ward officer was cut in the hand by a sword in the hands of one of the military. The police attempted to seize the soldier who struck the blow, and the military resisted.—The mob took sides with the police, the ranks of the military became broken, and the men with their clubbed rifles struck their blows right and left, while the crowd threw stones and brick-bats.

On the part of the police several men were badly bruised by blows from rifle-butts. Officer Duncan of the fifteenth ward was struck in the hip by a blank cartridge and badly wounded, and an officer of the Fourteenth Ward was cut about the head with a sword.

The military fared worse than the citizens. Three of the men in the ranks having been shot, and two having received severe cuts with brick bats.

Frank Wendell, a private in the company, and a married man, living in Arch street, below third, was shot in the right breast. The ball entered the lung, and it has not yet been extracted. His condition is considered very dangerous. Charles Bremner, a private, single man, living in Race street, between Third and Fourth, was shot in the left breast. The ball entered just below the heart. It has been extracted. The condition of Brenner is critical. George Lhuster was shot in the arm.

Capt. Ballier resisted the arrest of the man, and assured the police that he should be handed over to the authorities as soon as he had reached the armory of the company, in third street, below Green. Some sort of order was finally obtained, and the company continued its march down Coates street, followed by the excited crowd. At twenty-third and Coates streets a warrant was procured at the office of Alderman Binder, and an effort was made to serve it upon the offending soldier. The attempt was resisted and a furious fight took place. The crowd threw brickbats, the military used their swords and the butts of their rifles, and some shots were fired from the latter; while the police fired their revolvers."

The Maine Conference of Adventists.

This conference is to be holden in Richmond, Reed Meeting-house, to commence on Thursday, 10 o'clock, A. M., June 17th, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that those who are specially interested in the great truths which have called us out as a distinct class, sufficiently see and feel that the cause they have espoused, and which has already benefited so many, demands their continued and more united efforts to sustain and increase the interest upon the all-important theme of the day of the Lord, the judgment, and the kingdom of God at hand. Never, since we became a people, has there been a time when we could labor so understandingly and effectually as now. Let us try to unite all our strength given by the Lord, and encourage all who are inclined to the truth. Come, brethren, all who can consistently, and let us see each other again in the flesh; talk, pray, sing, and consult how we may best act to save our fellow men and ourselves by the instrumentalities God has put in our hands. The meeting is 2 miles from the Rail Road station and from steam-boat wharf. Those coming from the North can arrive at 12 M. Those from the South and West at 3 P. M. Should any endeavor to come Wednesday, brethren in the vicinity, though few, will do all they can to provide for them, and will furnish pasturing for the horses. As this meeting is intended for the benefit of the cause generally, in all parts of the State, churches and lay brethren should furnish means to defray the expenses of the ministers, or come prepared to contribute at the meeting; as those in the place will do all their duty in taking care of those who come, and they will be glad to see all who can come. Call for Eld. I. C. Wellcome, at the village, or David Robinson, Low Curtis, or John Umberhind in the vicinity.

We take the liberty to sign the names to this call of several of our ministers whom we know to be anxious for the meeting, as time has not permitted us to notify them of its arrangement. Will all other ministers interested, send their names to the offices to be added? N. SMITH, Chairman.

Poetry.

[Old hymn, published by request.]

"COME OUT OF HER, MY PEOPLE."

While I was down in Egypt's land,
I heard my Savior was at hand;
The midnight cry was sounding,
And I wanted to be free,
So I left my scoffing brethren
To sound the jubilee.

They said that I had better stay
And go with them in their old way;
But they scoff at my Lord's coming—
With them I could not agree,
And I left their painted synagogue
To sound the jubilee.

Then soon I joined the Christian band,
Who'd just come out from Egypt's land:
They were on the road to Canaan,
A blest praying company,
And with them I am proclaiming
This is the jubilee.

They call us now a noisy crew,
And say they hope we'll soon fall through;
But we now are growing stronger
Both in love and unity,
Since we left old mystic Babylon
To sound the jubilee.

We're now united in one band,
Believing Christ is just at hand
To reward his faithful children,
Who are glad their Lord to see;
Bless the Lord, our souls are happy
While we sound the jubilee.

Though opposition waxes strong,
Yet still the battle won't be long;
For our blessed Lord is coming
As we all shall quickly see,
So keep up good courage, brethren,
This is the jubilee.

If Satan comes to tempt your minds,
Then meet him with these blessed lines,
Saying, "Get behind me, Satan,
I have nought to do with thee,
I have got my soul converted,
And I'll sound the jubilee."

The battle is not to the strong,
The weak may sing the conquerer's song,
I've been through the fiery furnace
And no harm was done to me;
I came out with stronger evidence
This is the jubilee.

A little longer here below,
And home to glory we shall go;
I believe it! I believe it!
Hallelujah! I am free
From all sectarian prejudice—
This is the jubilee.

We'll soon remove to that blest shore,
And shout and sing forever more,
Where the wicked cannot enter
To disturb our harmony;
But we'll wear the crowns of glory
With our God eternally.

For the Crisis.

Gleanings.

BY M. D. W.

While the telegraphic wire is now so frequently made the medium by which the announcement of the conversion of this one and the other is made to distant friends, it renders the language used by a minister before the American Board, in 1853, truly prophetic. He says:

"The time is coming when His (Christ's) successes shall be reported with the rapidity of Napoleon's victories; when the press shall teem with the intelligence of Christ's movements in the world; when the steamer shall furrow the deep to speed the tidings of His power; when the electric wires shall thrill with heavenly life to convey from city to city, and from continent to continent, the news of revivals of religion, and of nations born in a day. The kingdom of Christ is yet to be the one thing thought of in the world; and in every market place, at every exchange, on every bulletin at the corners of the streets, men shall speak of the glory of his kingdom, and talk of His power, one to another making known his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom."

To-day I gleaned the following clear illustration of

"THE CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

The christian character is a paradox. Its excellences imply and seem to arise from their opposites. The believer's elevations are all based on some previous lowliness. Never does he become virtuous, unless he discerns himself as intrinsically wicked; nor is he estimable in the sight of God, unless vile in his own. Sorrow precedes his joys; disquietude, his peace; misery, his happiness. Distrust is necessary to his confidence; despair to his hope.

When weak, the believer is strong; when naked, he is clad; and when stripped of all possessions, he is yet the heir of inestimable riches. The hatred of the world indicates to the christian the love of God; and his contempt and scorn point him out as one who is intrinsically valuable, and is advancing to lasting honors and a crown. Forsaking earthly relations and friends, or deserted by the whole world, he has yet relatives and friends innumerable. Fear renders a believer confident; and terror, calm. He gains his life by losing it; and even when dead he lives. While unable to do any thing, he can still do all things; and while able to create nothing, or even to change the color of a hair, he can by the word of prayer, move the Arm that moves the universe; and in certain circumstances, by a mere wish, he may transfer the mountain from its base into the sea.

A lamb, the believer may yet become a lion; and while a mere worm and no man, he can withstand the gates of hell. He can himself be crushed by a moth, and yet can he bruise the head of the serpent; and while a serpent, he can bid Satan get behind him. Regarded as a fool, he is yet the light of the world, and instructor of sages and philosophers. In obscurity he is nevertheless a city on a hill; and banished from the world, he is still the salt and leaven necessary for the preservation of society.

An enemy to sin, the believer is the friend of sinners; and their curses are answered by his blessings. He clings to a cross for safety, and trusts to one slain as a malefactor, for eternal life. For him God's reconciled face would turn hell into heaven; and heaven without God, would lose its happiness.

In short, the more a believer is considered, he will be the wisdom and power of God, and yet to the Greeks foolishness—an enigma, a riddle, a paradox—a seeming earth man, and yet a new créature, wholly, in a moral and spiritual sense, different from the unconverted man; and the more the contrariness of his nature, renewed by the Holy Ghost, is understood and appreciated by himself, the greatest evidence has he that his faith is the true faith, and that he is a son of God."

For the Crisis.

1 Samuel, 15th Chapter.

On the mountains, a man of God toiled his lonesome way. He would be a guest with the elders of the city of the great King. Treasures won in battle were here. The lowing of oxen and the bleating of sheep filled his ears. Sacrifices and songs rose on high. The King had put off his armor, and now in regal splendor and with noble mien, he sat with the elders of the people. I saw the changeful soul of the stranger. A captive monarch, son of other lands, clad in hope, walked delicately amidst the covenant tribes. Death was not here, with his bands, dark rider of the wave. He had marched to that land which is without order. The man of God rebuked. The King bowed low and worshipped.

Why should mine eyes return to the dim times of yore, when our days are spent in hearing of news from the spheres? But the years that are past are marked with Jehovah's deeds. A thunderbolt, heated with its velocity, struck the proud mocker; he was hewn in pieces, whose fame in battle had been heard.

C. E. CLARK.

From Bro. John T. Dixon.

BRO. GRANT:—In the revival in this town of late, God is giving power to his truth. The Baptists have enjoyed a wide spread revival; it still continues, and what I wish to praise the Lord for is, the soul cheering doctrine of the speedy coming of Jesus to give immortality only to his sheep, and an everlasting inheritance on the earth is attracting the attention of some of those converts as I never witnessed before. They inquire after tracts on the subject, and boldly proclaim their belief in the above truths, in and out of their congregations. The Pastor of the B. church, although he does not agree with us, appears to be kind and considerate, while he opposes, and charity constraineth me to believe him to be a sincere christian; and it is my earnest desire that he may see all the truth as it is in Jesus.

As an evidence of the interest to read our publications, a Bro. last week had 500 Campbell's "Two Edged Sword" printed. As we wanted some, and Bro. Hastings had none, they were eagerly sought after and read. The Episcopal minister had public notices posted up in the stores that he would preach yesterday P. M. on the soul, and notice those questions. We attended. I guess, he had a fuller house than he has seen before since he has been with this people. He did just as I expected. He did not attempt to answer most of the questions, and the three last he treated with silent contempt. He did not attempt to prove the soul's immortality from the Bible, but quoted heathen philosophy, and then gave his (what he called common sense) opinions. He declared positively that the soul could not be destroyed, in the face of Jesus' word to the contrary. Matt 10: 28.

Bro., let us be awake. The Lord is at hand. Let us do all we can to scatter truth. There is much required of us, and we must soon give an account of our stewardship.

Most of us are poor, but few are so poor as not to be able to purchase and scatter a few of Bro. Hastings' tracts. (You know he keeps all kinds, by different authors, on hand.) I could tell you of much good done in this town by those little silent preachers. JOHN T. DIXON.

Peace Dale, May 24th, '58.

P. S.—If any wish some of those "Two Edged Swords," they can have them for 2 cents a piece by writing to Charles Dixon, Peace Dale, R. I. Any Bro., especially Bro. Grant, Z Campbell, or Blain, would be gladly heard here now on the Life theme. Bro. W. S. Campbell is expected week after next. We hope he will tarry over Sunday and preach, as he knows how to, on life only in Christ. J. T. D.

From Bro. G. L. Teeple.

DEAR BRO GRANT:—I would express my feelings through the Crisis relative to the extensive revivals of which I hear from week to week through the papers. Shall I say the work is not of God? God forbid. Shall I say of many, as did those in the time of Christ—"He followeth not us;" therefore try to stop them in their work? To this I also say, God forbid. I have for several months felt very differently than in former times. The question now is not, Are you an Adventist, Baptist, Methodist, &c.? but rather, Are you a Christian?

I am heartily glad that this revival which is progressing through the land is tearing down the old walls of sectarianism and causing the Church to feel that she is one in Jesus Christ. This work is, as one remarked, "Just like God." When men work, they try to build up their own peculiar theories and views, and talk of how many they get in their Church; but God works differently. His work is melting and softening, instead of hardening; uniting, instead of separating; building up, instead of tearing down.

My heart then is in sympathy with this great work I hear of, and I cry unto God, let it continue until the Church shall be fully ready to meet the King of glory, and sinners all saved that can be, that God may get to his name great glory. Let every christian do what they can to help on this work. Let all be willing to do the will of God, and we shall see in the end that our labor has not been in vain.

To the unconverted let me say, O hasten! the storm is gathering; now is the accepted time to find a refuge; now is a favorable time, inasmuch as christians are in earnest pleading in your behalf, and exhorting you to escape for your life; and God is also in earnest calling you by his Spirit and word to come to Him through Jesus Christ, who has loved you with the deepest love, giving himself for you that you might not perish but have everlasting life. Soon, I fear, it will be too late. O, come, come! now mercy pleads; Christ invites; the Spirit convinces you of the necessity of coming, and the Church is laboring for your salvation. Again, I say, Come! No time to lose; every hour is growing big with danger; soon the last hour of earth's probation will close; then, if you have not secured a part in Christ, you are lost, lost forever! Nothing can avail in your behalf then,—you have neglected the offers of mercy,—despised and heeded not the prayers and exhortations of christians, and have chosen your own ways; therefore must receive your doom—be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power. That time is approaching. The day of rejoicing to the christian will soon dawn. Be ready. Let no consideration prevent you from entering the blissful climes of Immortality.

"O may we be the truly wise,
Who seek with all our hearts this prize;
Contend no more for earth's renown,
But look for an immortal crown.

Your Bro. looking for life eternal through Jesus Christ. GEORGE L. TEEPLE.

P. S.—I would here express my gratitude to God and to those that have aided me in my straitened circumstances; may the Lord reward them. Pray for me, Bro. that my faith fail not in these trying hours. I believe the hour of deliverance is at hand. Praise the Lord. G. L. T.

THE EMERALD BOW.

BY REV. E. PORTER DYER.

"And there was a rainbow round about the throne, like unto an Emerald."—Rev. 4: 3.

Above Jehovah's "great white Throne,"
High-arching, bends an emerald bow;
The symbol fair of grace unknown;
God's pledge of love to man below.

What grace and justice mingling meet
In that bright bow! The throne between
Henceforth becomes a mercy-seat,
Beneath the circling evergreen.

How pure that Throne. How lustrous He
Who, robed in glory, sits thereon,
Most like, of all our eyes may see,
To Jasper and a Sardine stone.

With crowns of gold, the elders sit
In raiment white that throne before,
While, harmless, at Jehovah's feet,
The lightnings flash and thunders roar.

Seven lamps of fire, with ceaseless glow,—
Amid whose light 'twere joy to be,—
Are shining on the emerald bow,
And on the beauteous crystal sea.

Four living creatures, full of eyes,
The throne encompass day and night;
Each holy, holy, holy cries
And glorifies the God of might.

The elders join the sweet refrain,
And low before the throne they fall,
And cast their crowns, and cry amain,
"All glory to the Lord of all."

Ye ruined souls, from earth look up;
O venture near in Jesus' name,
Encouraged by the bow of Hope,
And humbly own your guilt and shame.

That bow is bent by mercy's hand,
Sure pledge that mercy shall endure;
It speaks his grace by mercy planned;
It says, The covenant standeth sure.

Then come, O sinner, on that Bow
Fix evermore my wandering eye;
Receive the truth, believe, and know
The Friend of sinners reigns on high.

He now calls thee his grace to share:
Come, leave thy sins—come, bow thine heart;
Come, bend thy knee, and lift thy prayer,
And choose, O, choose the better part.

Nor fear to trust the Lamb, whose blood
For thee did once like water flow,
Whose love hath spanned the throne of God
With Mercy's lifted Emerald Bow.

Don't be Afraid.

BY REV. J. C. RYLE, B. A.

Reader, don't be afraid of man's opinion in religion. Never mind being laughed at or mocked, or persecuted, because you try to please God.

"The fear of man" does indeed "bring a snare." Prov. 29: 25. It is terrible to observe the power which is exerted over most minds. Few seem to have any opinions of their own, or to think for themselves. Like dead fish, they go with the stream and tide; what others think right, they think right; and what others call wrong, they call wrong too. There are not many original thinkers in the world.—Most men are like sheep, they follow a leader. If it was the fashion of the day to be Romanists, they would be Romanists; if to be Mohammedans, they would be Mohammedans. They dread the idea of going against the times. In a word, the opinion of the day becomes their religion, their creed, their Bible, and their god.

The thought, "What will my friends say or think?" nips many a good inclination in the bud. The fear of being observed upon, laughed at, ridiculed, prevents many a good habit being taken up. There are Bibles that would be read this very day if the owners dared. They know they ought to read them, but they are afraid: "What will the people say?" There are knees that would be bent in prayer this very night, but the fear of man forbids, it:—"What would my wife, my brother, my friend, my companion say, if they saw me praying?" Alas, what wretched slavery this is, and yet how common!

Remember the words of the Lord Jesus: "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt, 10: 28. Only try to make others pleased with you. "When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him." Prov. 15: 7.

Reader, don't be afraid of man's opinion. Fear God, and never be ashamed of his service. There is nothing to be ashamed of in seeking to be saved.—Seed Corn.

Influence of a Holy Life.

There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life, passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The seen but silent beauty speaks more eloquently of God and duty than the tongue of men and angels. Let parent's remember this. The best inheritance a parent can bequath to a child is a virtuous example, a legacy of hallowed remembrances and associations. The beauty of holiness beaming through the life of a loved relative or friend, is more effectual to strengthen such as do stand in virtue's ways, and raise up those that are bowed down, than precept, command, entreaty, or warning. Christianity itself, I believe, owes by far the greater part of its moral power, not to the precepts or parables of Christ, but to his own character. The beauty of that holiness which is enshrined in the four brief biographies of the Man of Nazareth, has done more, and will do more, to regenerate the world and bring in everlasting righteousness, than all the other agencies put together. It has done more to spread his religion in the world, than all that has ever been preached or written on the subject of Christianity.—Chalmers.

How to Do Good.

Why do you begin to do good so far off? This is a ruling error. Begin at the center and work outward. If you do not love your wife, do not pretend to such love of the people of the antipodes. If you let some family grudge, some peccadillo, some undesirable gesture, sour your visage toward a sister or daughter, pray cease to teach benificence on a large scale. Begin not at the next door, but within your own door—then with your next neighbor, whether relative, servant, or superior. Account the man you meet the man you are to bless. Give him such things as you have. "How can I make him or her happier?" This is the question. If a dollar will do it, give the dollar. If advice will do it, give advice. If a look, a smile, a warm pressure of the hand, or a tear, will do it, give the look, smile, hand, or tear. But never forget that the happiness of our world is a mountain of golden sands, and that it is your part to cast some tributary atom every moment.

Revival Incidents.

A lady called on a friend who was utterly opposed to religion and begged him to attend some of the meetings. He refused. But she still urged him, and at length said, "Do go to just one meeting, to please me." He hesitated and then replied, "Well, I will go once, seeing you ask it as a personal favor."

He went, but was determined not to be moved. He said to himself, "I promised to come, but I didn't promise to listen." So he sat with his hands up to his ears! By and by, he thought he felt something light on the end of his nose, and took down one hand to brush it away. Just at that moment the preacher was reading these words: "He that hath ears to hear let him hear." This arrested his attention, and he did not dare to cover his ears any longer; but listened earnestly through the whole service, and was brought under deep conviction which resulted in his conversion.

A christian in a certain place feeling extremely anxious about a notorious infidel, went to him and besought him to attend to the interest of his soul. He found the man haughty, decided and unyielding, but he determined to persevere. He continued to visit this person several times and conversed with him, answered his objections, prayed for him in secret places, until, during the next visit, the infidel,—such no longer—exclaimed, "I can stand it no longer; you have knocked away all my underpinning, I believe—Lord help my unbelief." This converted infidel went to his old comrades, urged them to attend upon the means of grace, and soon had the unspeakable satisfaction to see several of them yielding to the gospel call, and submitting to Christ.

A very little boy, who had been visiting in a pious family, said to his father when he came home, "Father, why don't you pray? Jemmy's father prays before dinner." "Hush," said the father. "But father, won't you pray as Jemmy's father does?" "No, child, be still." "Then may I pray, father?" "Yes," said he, "you may pray if you want to." The little one folded his hands, bent his head, and said,

"Now I lay me down to sleep," &c.

It was the only prayer the child knew;—it went to the father's heart and was the means, under the Divine blessing, of his conversion.—Am. Missionary.

Self Denial.

A merchant in London had a dispute with a Quaker respecting the settlement of an account. The merchant was determined to bring the account into court, a proceeding which the Quaker earnestly deprecated, using every argument in his power to convince the merchant of his error; but the latter was inflexible. Desirous to make a last effort, the Quaker called at his house one morning, and inquired of the servant if the Master was at home. The merchant hearing the inquiry, and knowing the voice, called out from the top of the stairs, "Tell the rascal I am not at home." The Quaker, calmly looking up to him, said, "Well, friend, God put thee in a better mind." The merchant, struck afterwards with the meekness of the reply, and having more deliberately investigated the matter, became convinced that the Quaker was right and that he was wrong. He requested to see him, and after acknowledging his error, said, "I have one question to ask you. How were you able, on various occasions, to bear my abuse?" "Friend," replied the Quaker; "I will tell thee; I was naturally as hot and violent as thou art. I knew that to indulge this temper was sinful; and I found that it was imprudent—I observed that men in a passion always spoke loud; and I thought if I could control my voice, I could repress my passion. I have, therefore, made it a rule never to let my voice rise above a certain key, and by a careful observance of this rule, I have, by the blessing of God, entirely mastered my natural temper." The Quaker reasoned philosophically, and the merchant, as every one else may do, profitted by his example.

"That's Enough for Me."

"What do you do without a mother to tell all your troubles to?" asked a child who had a mother, of one who had not; her mother was dead.

"Mother told me who to go to before she died," answered the little orphan; "I go to the Lord Jesus; he was my mother's friend, and he's mine."

"Jesus Christ is up in the sky; he is away off, and has a great many things to attend to in heaven. It is not likely he can stop to mind you."

"I do not know any thing about that," said the orphan; "all I know is, he says he will, that's enough for me."

What a beautiful answer was that. And what was enough for this child, is enough for us all.

Are you tired of carrying about the heavy load of sin? "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." But I am not worthy of his forgiving love. Never mind that. "He says he will, and that's enough for me."

Take the Lord Jesus at his word, for the forgiveness of your sins, and for peace to your soul. "My peace I give unto you," he says. Will he? Oh, his peace is very precious. Will he give us his peace? "He says he will, and that's enough for me." God is angry with the wicked every day. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked." Let us act accordingly, and flee from the wrath to come.—Child's Paper.

Who is a Gentleman.

A gentleman is not merely a person acquainted with the forms and etiquettes of life, easy and self-possessed in society, able to speak, and act, and move in the world without awkwardness, and free from habits which are vulgar and in bad taste. A gentleman is something beyond all this; that which lies at the root of all his ease, and refinement, and tact, is power of pleasing—how he can show respect for others—how he may avoid hurting their feelings. When he is in society he scrupulously ascertains the position and relation of every one with whom he comes in contact, that he may give to each his due honor, his proper position. He studies how he may avoid touching in conversation upon any subject which may needlessly hurt their feelings, how he may abstain from any such allusion which may call up a disagreeable or offensive association. A gentleman never alludes to, never appears conscious of any personal defect, bodily deformity, inferiority of talent, of rank, of reputation, in the persons in whose society he is placed. He never assumes any superiority for himself; he never ridicules, never sneers, never boasts, never makes a display of his own power, or rank, or advantage—such as is implied in ridicule, and sarcasm, or abuse—as he never indulges in habits or tricks, or inclinations which may be offensive to others.

Read.

There was once a lad who at fourteen was apprenticed to a soap-boiler. One of his resolutions was to read one hour a day, or at least at that rate; and he had an old silver watch left him by his uncle, which he timed his reading by. He stayed seven years with his master, and his master said when he was twenty-one years old he knew as much as the squire did. Now let us see how much time he had read in seven years, at the rate of an hour a day. It would be twenty-five hundred and fifty-five hours; which, at the rate of eight reading hours a day, would be three hundred and nineteen days: equal to forty-five weeks, equal to eleven months; nearly a year's reading. That time spent in treasuring up useful knowledge, would pile up a very large bookstore. I am sure it is worth trying for. Try what you can do. Begin now.

INVOCATION.

Father in Heaven! High and Holy One!
Who, gazing from thy bright and dazzling throne,
Dost view each world, and guide each whirling sphere
In their eternal march and bright career;
Though viewing them, dost every action scan,
That's wrought on earth below by mortal man;—
O Thou, before whose throne bright seraphs bow
And raise their songs in swelling chorus now;
Thou who dost merit praise from every heart,
O that Thou wouldst to me thy love impart,
And teach thine erring child the way of life,
The way to live, to act, 'mid earth's wild strife;
O that Thou wouldst o'ershadow me with love,
With cheering light of hope from Thee above;
That, should dark woes my treasured hopes destroy,
Thou still may'st be my counsellor and joy!
O Father! teach me how to follow right,
That thine own will may be my sweet delight;
The good of all to seek while here I stay;
To soothe with words of hope the mourner's way,
And bind with healing balm the heart that bleeds;
That I may thus win Life with holy deeds,
That when this stormy voyage shall be o'er,
My home shall be on Salem's sunny shore!
Now grant, O Lord, that this my portion be,
On earth to praise, in heaven reign with Thee.

"I Know that my Redeemer Liveth."

What a flood of joy and tenderness flows upon the soul as the heart gives utterance to this Alpha and Omega of the Christian's faith! It stands like a heaven-reaching pyramid, far above the clouds and storms which often wrap its base, and would hide it forever from the believer, were his eye not fixed with implicit trust upon the promise given. A man without this knowledge is in the most dreadful state that can be conceived, for nothing could compensate, in earth or heaven, for the loss of that precious hope. It is the very life of man. The sorrow-stricken Job, suffering from an unparalleled accumulation of distress, felt it in his heart, and was comforted. Stephen, sinking beneath the dreadful hail, experienced the blessed assurance, and sweetly fell asleep. Paul felt it as he stooped his neck to the axe. The hunted Waldenses and Albigenses felt it as their hoof-trodden bosoms heaved their last sigh. The flame enwrapped martyr felt it as he hugged the burning stake. The weary, tempted, buffetted but faithful christian of our own day, feels it in his heart and rejoiceth. It lightens the gloomiest cell, strews flowers upon the rack, and sets at naught the worst that fiendish persecution can do. From dungeon and scaffold, gibbet and fire arises the glad anthem, "I know that my Redeemer liveth!"

Paul in his renowned defence of the resurrection from the dead, after alluding to his own dreadful trials and persecutions, says, "what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?" Thus, as it is often done in the Scriptures, in the form of a question putting truth in its strongest light. If there be no resurrection, Christ once dead, remains so, and the sinner is lost forever. But the plan of redemption is complete throughout, and Jesus liveth to make intercession for us. The hopeless being who dies impenitent and unforgiven, although he knows the "God-man" lives, 'tis not as his Redeemer but as his judge. He is not his Savior, for he is not saved; because he chose the perishable things of this world rather than the incorruptible treasures of eternal life.

The christian in this stage of trial need expect nothing of this world but sorrow and persecution, inasmuch as it is antagonistical to his dearest hopes and wishes. "If," said Christ, as he admonished and comforted his disciples, "ye were of the world, the world would love his own, but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." The world had lifted its red hand against the Lord's Anointed, and his followers need expect no better treatment; for the servant is not greater than his lord.

Jesus Christ intended that persecution, at the present not joyous but grievous, should work out and establish a perfect church, which could not otherwise exist, if there were a fusion of holy and secular things. Therefore, although bearing peace and good will towards men, he placed a sword between his servants and the servants of the devil, declaring war to the knife—grace and mercy to the repentant sinner, but no peace with Satan! Nor should there be a single moment's truce; for the wily old serpent lets no chance escape him when he may hurl the unguarded christian from his position and set his foot upon his neck. The evil One hates every thing that is like God; and at no time is he moved with such ferocious dislike, as when in the kindling eye of the repenting prodigal, he recognizes the almost effaced image of the Eternal. Yet fear him not, dear soul, for He who is now for you is mightier far than all that is against you.

Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution separate us from the love of Christ? Shall we grow weary in the struggle, or slacken our speed when life everlasting is the prize? No; not even if it be permitted that grim death should have for a time our poor worn out bodies in his grasp; we may lay down in calm repose a little while, knowing that that glooming incarceration is but temporal, and that we shall be delivered in His own good time, for

We know that our Redeemer ever lives,
And with his voice shall wake the slumbering dead,
And call them forth, whether the mighty deep,
Or gaping earthquake, or the field of war,
Or pestilence, or famine, or the sword
Of fiery persecution, swept them off.

May we so live that our part shall be in the first resurrection, over which the second death has no power.

WHAT HAVE WE DONE?

I. We have stood forth as those who were called by a special providence—and willingly obeyed the summons—to declare the doctrine of the kingdom of God, as taught in the prophecies. The prophecy of Daniel,—exhibiting the four universal, earthly monarchies, and showing the Divine Kingdom as the fifth, also as a legitimate deduction, a literal monarchy on earth, and being the ninth in order, now soon to be established,—has been our theme. This prophecy has not only been employed to establish this view of the kingdom (its literality and territorial locality,) thus overthrowing the Whitlyan theory; but to show the proximity of the grand event, (the Judgment,) which shall install that heavenly rule. All the prophecies of the Old Testament have been searched, and with constant labor and care presented, showing the literal new Heavens and Earth, as the hope of the church of God, the expectation of patriarchs, prophets, Christ, his apostles and martyrs. By the help of God we have been doing more in this country to establish the literal principle of interpretation, than all other expositors together. This has been one specific feature of the work to which we have been manifestly called.

The New Testament, in the instructions and predictions of Christ and his Apostles, has also been examined and developed, presenting the facts of the future, with the signs of the times; till many have been brought to believe in the literal second coming of Christ to judgment—his literal and glorious reign on the earth, as "the millennium"—distinguished from his figurative coming or reign, or the conversion of the world; while the Apocalyptic parchment has been unrolled, and light from history and chronology, with analogy, has been thrown upon it, as well as upon the Empire Book of Daniel. The destiny of human dominion has been seen from the inspired visions of the old and new dynasty seers, while all the prophets, whose burning thoughts of future glory divine have been treasured in our living record since the world began, have been gladly urged upon the hearts of wondering multitudes, many of whom have been converted to the truth. Not only so, but all this glory of Christ's kingdom has been, for the last fifteen years,—by evidence which is yet good, and which none of the adversaries have been effectually able to gainsay,—urged as near at hand. It has been a godlike work! allying us, though unworthy, to the prophets themselves. Who regrets it?

II. What else? The word of God presents to us a connected system of truth. We have learned to discover evidences of this system everywhere, in the holy record. In presenting the plan of God it was necessary that we should dwell upon the second coming of Christ and the resurrection. To preach the one we must preach the other, since they are both in the divine covenant together promised. The one, as a literal event, and personal appearing of the Son of God, was, a few years ago, entirely neglected, or spiritualized away; the other, either neglected or denied—if not denied, made of no account in the economy of God to bring man to the possession of his image and glory.

We have insisted on the veritable coming of the very Christ who went away, and in "like manner" as he went. We have also contended for the coming back to life again of those who have died; and, as an especial qualification of the Kingdom of God, the identity of the man saved, as well as the "man Christ Jesus" who saves. Alas! how little preaching upon these topics from any other sources. Who has defended the apostolic position on these questions? Here we have stood and battled in a degenerate age of Theology. Have we fought in vain? If our voice is still, the world may, it appears, listen through all the hosts of the church for the sound "behold he cometh!" "Go ye out to meet him." "The dead shall be raised and the living changed."

III. At an early point in the work of preaching the "gospel of the kingdom," the question of the final condition of the wicked was introduced by some devoted and inquiring minds, who had prayerfully studied the Scriptures on that point; and the view of their destruction was soon embraced by the great proportion, who had been called by the stern convictions of duty to preach the immediate second advent of Christ. It became one of the cardinal doctrines of this interest that the wicked would cease to exist under the wrath of God; that in suffering punishment they would suffer destruction. This is but taking the Scriptures literally which speak of the sinner's final condition. By such a view, the divine attributes are seen to exist in harmony—God's justice and mercy appear in his love; and while his law is sustained by the future punishment of his enemies, no charge can be made of undue severity—of vindictive vengeance.

But by this effort we have influenced many to examine the word of God; they have left Calvinism gladly—Universalism, Infidelity, and Skepticism. It is a view of God's purpose which we have delighted to exhibit, at whatever hazard or sacrifice. No people have been so fully identified in these days as the defenders of that view, as ourselves; and indeed we may say from almost all others we have met with opposition.

The past on this question in the United States has been a grand reform effort upon the theology of our times, which none who have taken the word and buckler, and met the onset valiantly can ever deplore.

IV. We have set forth, in addition, the kindred sentiment of the sleep of the dead; especially, that the righteous have no reward till the resurrection—that the dead are unconscious. This is so intimately connected with the question of the resurrection of the dead, that we could not preach the one without the other; hence, we have taken what appears plainly to have been the doctrine of the apostles, who regarded the day of Christ's appearing and kingdom as the time of the crown; of Luther who allowed the Pope to hold as one of the dogmas of the "Roman dung-hill of decretal,"—"that the soul is immortal"—[naturally]; of George Wischart of the sixteenth century, who was charged by the papists (17th specification) with believing that "the dead sleep from death to the resurrection, and do not put on immortality till then." He was a martyr.

By divine aid, we have produced a revolution on this point; one which is telling in this country to-day, and will be felt to the end of time. It has been the means of correcting the expectations of the church, and led to the belief of a real heaven, a tangible existence in the future, and one of the most effectual agents against the foolish dogmas of Spiritualism.

On this Scriptural, harmonious view of the way of salvation to man, we glory in occupying the front rank. Vastly modified is the position of believers, as a whole, within a few years. Many have secured confidence, hope and assurance, where all was darkness and doubt before.

Finally; we have preached, as well as others, repentance, faith, the atonement, free grace, holy living;—in a word, the whole plan of God and the whole duty of man. Have insisted upon baptism, and the Lord's supper in the church; have done much to break down prejudice among christian sects; have come out of every sect almost, and yet are not "come-outers," fanatics,—not Spiritualists, but the fartherest from them and most constant and consistent opposers of them;—and what are we?

The Lord's Coming---The Subject of Hope.

No. I.

"I will come again."—John 14: 3.

"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come, in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 2.

The second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ is a point not only of revelation, but is of so vast practical importance, that without it there is no completeness to the grand system of salvation proposed thro' Jesus Christ. Indeed, so important is this great prospective fact, that in regard is the questions as to what shall constitute the nature and object of his coming—and the time when he should come—it would seem no disciple of Christ could possibly be indifferent. And yet again, that such should to the unsophisticated reader exist as questions, rather than as well-defind and glorious doctrines, is but little less surprising. That the Scriptures are pregnant with thought relating to this very point, none who are conversant with them will for a moment question. Every prophecy, every gospel, every epistle; yea, almost every discourse, chapter, and parable, point more or less directly to this very event. Not to refer to the Old Testament for illustrations of this statement—which however is full and explicit—the New Testament is more than sufficient for this purpose.

First, then, let us notice the nature and object of the Lord's second advent, and then ask the question why there is so much discrepancy existing between Christian men on this subject.

If upon the unambiguous, unequivocal and positive statements of divine testimony we may establish a belief, then why from the following declarations of Scripture, may we not believe the second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ is to be personal, and not mystical, or purely spiritual? "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, ye that have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Matt. 19: 28. "And they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and he shall send his angels," &c. Matt. 24: 30, 31. "If I go and prepare a place for you I will come again." John 14: 3. "Ye men of Gallilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first," 1 Thess. 4: 16. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him will he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. To which scripture there might be added scores of other texts of similar import.

And the object of his coming is no less clearly set forth in the Scriptures. It is to "reckon with his servants." Matt. 25: 19. To "judge the world." Acts 17: 31. To raise the dead and change the righteous living. John 5: 28, 29. 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52. Phil. 3: 21; 1 Thess. 4: 17. To receive the righteous to himself, that where he is they may be also. John 14: 3. To establish and welcome his saints into his kingdom. Luke 19: 11–27; Matt. 25: 34. To destroy death and all the works of the devil. 1 Cor. 15: 26, Heb. 2: 14. 1 John 3: 8. To destroy the man of sin, and effect the restitution of all things—filling the earth with his glory, and taking his great power and reigning as King over all the earth—Acts 3: 19–21. 2 Thess. 2: 8. Ps. 72: 19. Zech. 14: 9. Rev. 11: 17.

And if these things depend upon the second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, as it is affirmed they do—then surely they cannot be realized before this event. Hence is seen the occasion for the immense practical importance which the Scriptures and the early church attached to this doctrine. It was touching the resurrection of the dead, Jesus said it was spoken, saying, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Matt. 22: 31, 32.—At the return of the Lord from heaven, the ancient disciple expected to be received by and thenceforth continue with him. John 14: 3. And this felicity was not expected before; because our Lord had distinctly declared to them, (see chap. 13: 33,) "whither I go ye cannot come;" but shortly adds,—"if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, ye may be also." To think, therefore, that it is ours to be with the Lord, until he come again, is to us little less than to say our Lord's words as here recorded are meaningless.

In support of this position let it be observed, that the day of the Lord's second advent and of the resurrection, is invariably pointed forward to as the time, and the only time, when God has promised to give the final reward to the saints. It is only with this view we can understand the apostle Paul in his masterly argument for the resurrection of the dead as recorded in 1 Cor. 15th chap. "And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. Who does not discover from this that St. Paul based his expectation of a future life entirely upon the hope of the resurrection through Jesus Christ. Hence the pertinence of his inquiry—"If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" Surely, what! Yet did he forget that if a state of felicity was to be uninterruptedly enjoyed independent of a resurrection, his warfare might avail him much! So it is we are enabled to understand St. Paul, who writes, just previous to his martyrdom, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith—henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8. "His appearing" being evidently the time when the crowns are given and received. See 2 Tim. 1. Rev. 11: 18; 22: 12.

Again. "The grace of God that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, —looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus 2: 11–13.

With such a view we cannot marvel that martyrs cried, "How long?" (Rev. 6: 10,) or that St John should conclude the sacred canon with the Catholic cry,—"Come, Lord Jesus!" (ib. 22: 20) or that the poet has sung,—

"In expectation sweet,
We'll wait, and watch, and pray,
Till Christ's triumphant car we meet,
And see an endless day!"

Freedom.

Freedom! The heart of the patriot thrills at the word. The pulse of the lover of liberty beats quickly as he pores over the speeches of Freedom's champions. How his blood leaps as he follows the towering grandeur and noble daring of Pitt in the defence of the liberty of the colonies—the simple, earnest, passionate outbursts of our own Otis—the deep and resistless eloquence of Samuel Adams—the electric enthusiasm of Patrick Henry—and the patriotic words of a host of others—all of whom had more or less to do in bringing about the American Revolution.

But after all that has been said and written, after all our boasts of Freedom, how much real Freedom does the world enjoy? Even our own land, professing to be the freest on the face of the globe, rivets the accursed chain of slavery upon the helpless hands of millions. This is the Freedom of the "freest land on earth!" This is the Freedom of the country that Shelley says is

——"Like an eagle, whose young gaze
Feeds on the noontide beam, whose golden plume
Floats moveless on the storm, and in the blaze
Of sunrise gleams when earth is wrapped in gloom;
An epitaph of glory for the tomb
Of murdered Europe!"

Our country enslaves the blacks, and most other countries enslave even the white peasantry, and the poor are robbed of their rights. Designing men, lifted to power, would crush even the first rising of true liberty.

"High hopes, that shone like stars sublime,
Go down i' the heavens of Freedom,
And true hearts perish in the time
We bitterliest need 'em!"

Such has been and such ever will be the case with more or less of earth's nations, till the dawning of the glorious day of universal Freedom—till the time that the great God shall emancipate the down-trodden. In this present life there can be no perfection of freedom, no perfection of joy. This is the state of preparation, the condition of trial.

"This life's a stage, the prologue tears,
The acts, vain hopes and varied fears;
The scene shuts up with loss of breath,
And leaves no epilogue but death."

But there will be a change of scene. A new government will be established—a government for the whole world. The subjects of that government will all be free. There will be no over-bearing aristocracy there, either monied or by birth. The King will be the choice of the people, the beloved Guardian of the nation. Freedom will be perfected there; joy and happiness will be the boon of all. The luxuriant verdure, the flowered beauty, the most excellent glory, the lovely splendor that decked earth in its Eden hours, will again be spread out like a mantle, and from every mount, and hill, and plain, shall burst forth the chorus of rejoicing; and the universal host shall send forth a glad shout, hailing the glorious morn of emancipation—the bright day of perfect freedom! And they salute their King—hear them:—"Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever!"

INVOCATION.

Father in Heaven! High and Holy One!
Who, gazing from thy bright and dazzling throne,
Dost view each world, and guide each whirling sphere
In their eternal march and bright career;
Though viewing them, dost every action scan,
That's wrought on earth below by mortal man;—
O Thou, before whose throne bright seraphs bow
And raise their songs in swelling chorus now;
Thou who dost merit praise from every heart,
O that Thou wouldst to me thy love impart,
And teach thine erring child the way of life,
The way to live, to act, 'mid earth's wild strife;
O that Thou wouldst o'ershadow me with love,
With cheering light of hope from Thee above;
That, should dark woes my treasured hopes destroy,
Thou still may'st be my counsellor and joy!
O Father! teach me how to follow right,
That thine own will may be my sweet delight;
The good of all to seek while here I stay;
To soothe with words of hope the mourner's way,
And bind with healing balm the heart that bleeds;
That I may thus win Life with holy deeds,
That when this stormy voyage shall be o'er,
My home shall be on Salem's sunny shore!
Now grant, O Lord, that this my portion be,
On earth to praise, in heaven reign with Thee.

"I Know that my Redeemer Liveth."

What a flood of joy and tenderness flows upon the soul as the heart gives utterance to this Alpha and Omega of the Christian's faith! It stands like a heaven-reaching pyramid, far above the clouds and storms which often wrap its base, and would hide it forever from the believer, were his eye not fixed with implicit trust upon the promise given. A man without this knowledge is in the most dreadful state that can be conceived, for nothing could compensate, in earth or heaven, for the loss of that precious hope. It is the very life of man. The sorrow-stricken Job, suffering from an unparalleled accumulation of distress, felt it in his heart, and was comforted. Stephen, sinking beneath the dreadful hail, experienced the blessed assurance, and sweetly fell asleep. Paul felt it as he stooped his neck to the axe. The hunted Waldenses and Albigenses felt it as their hoof-trodden bosoms heaved their last sigh. The flame enwrapped martyr felt it as he hugged the burning stake. The weary, tempted, buffetted but faithful christian of our own day, feels it in his heart and rejoiceth. It lightens the gloomiest cell, strews flowers upon the rack, and sets at naught the worst that fiendish persecution can do. From dungeon and scaffold, gibbet and fire arises the glad anthem, "I know that my Redeemer liveth!"

Paul in his renowned defence of the resurrection from the dead, after alluding to his own dreadful trials and persecutions, says, "what advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?" Thus, as it is often done in the Scriptures, in the form of a question putting truth in its strongest light. If there be no resurrection, Christ once dead, remains so, and the sinner is lost forever. But the plan of redemption is complete throughout, and Jesus liveth to make intercession for us. The hopeless being who dies impenitent and unforgiven, although he knows the "God-man" lives, 'tis not as his Redeemer but as his judge. He is not his Savior, for he is not saved; because he chose the perishable things of this world rather than the incorruptible treasures of eternal life.

The christian in this stage of trial need expect nothing of this world but sorrow and persecution, inasmuch as it is antagonistical to his dearest hopes and wishes. "If," said Christ, as he admonished and comforted his disciples, "ye were of the world, the world would love his own, but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." The world had lifted its red hand against the Lord's Anointed, and his followers need expect no better treatment; for the servant is not greater than his lord.

Jesus Christ intended that persecution, at the present not joyous but grievous, should work out and establish a perfect church, which could not otherwise exist, if there were a fusion of holy and secular things. Therefore, although bearing peace and good will towards men, he placed a sword between his servants and the servants of the devil, declaring war to the knife—grace and mercy to the repentant sinner, but no peace with Satan! Nor should there be a single moment's truce; for the wily old serpent lets no chance escape him when he may hurl the unguarded christian from his position and set his foot upon his neck. The evil One hates every thing that is like God; and at no time is he moved with such ferocious dislike, as when in the kindling eye of the repenting prodigal, he recognizes the almost effaced image of the Eternal. Yet fear him not, dear soul, for He who is now for you is mightier far than all that is against you.

Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution separate us from the love of Christ? Shall we grow weary in the struggle, or slacken our speed when life everlasting is the prize? No; not even if it be permitted that grim death should have for a time our poor worn out bodies in his grasp; we may lay down in calm repose a little while, knowing that that glooming incarceration is but temporal, and that we shall be delivered in His own good time, for

We know that our Redeemer ever lives,
And with his voice shall wake the slumbering dead,
And call them forth, whether the mighty deep,
Or gaping earthquake, or the field of war,
Or pestilence, or famine, or the sword
Of fiery persecution, swept them off.

May we so live that our part shall be in the first resurrection, over which the second death has no power.

"Ye men of Gallilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Acts 1: 11. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. 4: 16. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him will he appear the second time, without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 28. To which scripture there might be added scores of other texts of similar import.

And the object of his coming is no less clearly set forth in the Scriptures. It is to "reckon with his servants." Matt. 25: 19. To "judge the world." Acts 17: 31. To raise the dead and change the righteous living. John 5: 28, 29. 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52. Phil. 3: 21; 1 Thess. 4: 17. To receive the righteous to himself, that where he is they may be also. John 14: 3. To establish and welcome his saints into his kingdom. Luke 19: 11–27; Matt. 25: 34. To destroy death and all the works of the devil. 1 Cor. 15: 26, Heb. 2: 14. 1 John 3: 8. To destroy the man of sin, and effect the restitution of all things—filling the earth with his glory, and taking his great power and reigning as King over all the earth—Acts 3: 19–21. 2 Thess. 2: 8. Ps. 72: 19. Zech. 14: 9. Rev. 11: 17.

And if these things depend upon the second advent of our Lord Jesus Christ, as it is affirmed they do—then surely they cannot be realized before this event. Hence is seen the occasion for the immense practical importance which the Scriptures and the early church attached to this doctrine. It was touching the resurrection of the dead, Jesus said it was spoken, saying, "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Matt. 22: 31, 32.—At the return of the Lord from heaven, the ancient disciple expected to be received by and thenceforth continue with him. John 14: 3. And this felicity was not expected before; because our Lord had distinctly declared to them, (see chap. 13: 33,) "whither I go ye cannot come;" but shortly adds,—"if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, ye may be also." To think, therefore, that it is ours to be with the Lord, until he come again, is to us little less than to say our Lord's words as here recorded are meaningless.

In support of this position let it be observed, that the day of the Lord's second advent and of the resurrection, is invariably pointed forward to as the time, and the only time, when God has promised to give the final reward to the saints. It is only with this view we can understand the apostle Paul in his masterly argument for the resurrection of the dead as recorded in 1 Cor. 15th chap. "And if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also who are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable. Who does not discover from this that St. Paul based his expectation of a future life entirely upon the hope of the resurrection through Jesus Christ. Hence the pertinence of his inquiry—"If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not?" Surely, what! Yet did he forget that if a state of felicity was to be uninterruptedly enjoyed independent of a resurrection, his warfare might avail him much! So it is we are enabled to understand St. Paul, who writes, just previous to his martyrdom, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith—henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing." 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8. "His appearing" being evidently the time when the crowns are given and received. See 2 Tim. 1. Rev. 11: 18; 22: 12.

Again. "The grace of God that bringeth salvation, hath appeared to all men, teaching us that denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world,—looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus 2: 11–13.

With such a view we cannot marvel that martyrs cried, "How long?" (Rev. 6: 10,) or that St John should conclude the sacred canon with the Catholic cry,—"Come, Lord Jesus!" (ib. 22: 20) or that the poet has sung,—

"In expectation sweet,
We'll wait, and watch, and pray,
Till Christ's triumphant car we meet,
And see an endless day!"

Freedom.

Freedom! The heart of the patriot thrills at the word. The pulse of the lover of liberty beats quickly as he pores over the speeches of Freedom's champions. How his blood leaps as he follows the towering grandeur and noble daring of Pitt in the defence of the liberty of the colonies—the simple, earnest, passionate outbursts of our own Otis—the deep and resistless eloquence of Samuel Adams—the electric enthusiasm of Patrick Henry—and the patriotic words of a host of others—all of whom had more or less to do in bringing about the American Revolution.

But after all that has been said and written, after all our boasts of Freedom, how much real Freedom does the world enjoy? Even our own land, professing to be the freest on the face of the globe, rivets the accursed chain of slavery upon the helpless hands of millions. This is the Freedom of the "freest land on earth!" This is the Freedom of the country that Shelley says is

——"Like an eagle, whose young gaze
Feeds on the noontide beam, whose golden plume
Floats moveless on the storm, and in the blaze
Of sunrise gleams when earth is wrapped in gloom;
An epitaph of glory for the tomb
Of murdered Europe!"

Our country enslaves the blacks, and most other countries enslave even the white peasantry, and the poor are robbed of their rights. Designing men, lifted to power, would crush even the first rising of true liberty.

"High hopes, that shone like stars sublime,
Go down i' the heavens of Freedom,
And true hearts perish in the time
We bitterliest need 'em!"

Such has been and such ever will be the case with more or less of earth's nations, till the dawning of the glorious day of universal Freedom—till the time that the great God shall emancipate the down-trodden. In this present life there can be no perfection of freedom, no perfection of joy. This is the state of preparation, the condition of trial.

"This life's a stage, the prologue tears,
The acts, vain hopes and varied fears;
The scene shuts up with loss of breath,
And leaves no epilogue but death."

But there will be a change of scene. A new government will be established—a government for the whole world. The subjects of that government will all be free. There will be no over-bearing aristocracy there, either monied or by birth. The King will be the choice of the people, the beloved Guardian of the nation. Freedom will be perfected there; joy and happiness will be the boon of all. The luxuriant verdure, the flowered beauty, the most excellent glory, the lovely splendor that decked earth in its Eden hours, will again be spread out like a mantle, and from every mount, and hill, and plain, shall burst forth the chorus of rejoicing; and the universal host shall send forth a glad shout, hailing the glorious morn of emancipation—the bright day of perfect freedom! And they salute their King—hear them:—"Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb for ever and ever!"

Letter from "Carrie."

Dear Brethren and sisters in Christ:—I have just received two numbers of the Crisis, and, looking over their pages, I find a letter to myself which reminds me of my long-neglected duty. I should have written long ago, but feeling my weakness and inability to say any thing that would instruct or encourage, I have neglected that which I should have done. The Crisis has lately become very dear to me, and as from week to week I peruse its columns, I am encouraged, strengthened and enabled to rejoice, and praise God for the rich treasures it contains. Every number is read and re-read with a great deal of interest and, I hope, with profit.

Only the next day after I first wrote, begging an interest in your prayers, as I sat alone with sorrowing heart and tearful eyes, searching for the "pearl" I had lost, the dear Savior appeared to bless. My mouth was filled with praises and my eyes shed fears of joy, and perfect bliss pervaded my soul. And to-day I am rejoicing in the hope of the gospel, and striving to do the will of God. Dear brethren and sisters, help me to declare his praises, and tell of his wonderful works. O work! while the day lasts; surely there is no time to slumber now, when the judgment is but just before us. Let us be willing to go without the camp, bearing the reproach for Christ's sake, fearing not "the scoffs and frowns of the world," but with the eye fixed on the "bright morning star," move forward in the great work before us.

Dear sister "Hattie," I thank you very much for your answer to my request—your advice and your prayers; and may I ask you still to remember me at the throne of grace? I still need the prayers of God's children. I feel every day the need of a deeper work of grace in my heart. I feel there is a great deal of sin hidden there, and I know that it all must be eradicated ere I can behold him who is holy.

You ask, sister dear, if my mind is made up to stand for Christ? I answer yes! let the storm of persecution still drive on, let every earthly friend forsake, the world frown; for, with the good old apostle, I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature be able to separate from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. He who has promised is faithful, and will bring us off conquerors at last.

I noticed in the index that some one beside you had responded to my letter, but I have not seen it, for that number, with one or two more never came to the office or were lost in some way.

You were mistaken, sister Hattie, with regard to my living in the same city with yourself; in Rochester, Mass., is my home. It was wrong in the paper. I should be very happy to hear from you or see you, my sister. It would be very pleasant to meet and mingle our songs and prayers here upon the earth, but if not permitted, God grant that we may meet in that "better home."

"O, I long to be there,
Where no sorrow nor care,
Shall disturb that heavenly rest."

May God bless you all, and crown you at last with immortality and eternal life, is the prayer of Carrie.

From Eld. P. B. Morgan.

Bro. Grant:—Our Conference has concluded its session, and I am happy to report to you that, although the season has been so unpropitious, we have nevertheless had a good gathering and a good session. Ministering brethren present were Elders M. Chandler, W. Pratt, A. S. Calkins, H. H. Janes, G. W. Rathburn, Johnson and Morgan of Illinois, with Eld. I. Morgan from Ct. and Eld. J. Hemenway of Mass.; beside a good number of delegates from churches. The reports were cheering and the prospect seemed most encouraging. Eld. M. Chandler was appointed Conference Evangelist and agent for the ensuing year.

But purposing to prepare a digest of the minutes for the Crisis and Herald shortly, I will add no more except to say—it was resolved the minutes of the Conference be published in full and bound, with our plan of arrangements in pamphlet form for gratuitous circulation, orders for which may be addressed to myself, Secretary of the Conference.

And I am fraternally yours,
P. B. Morgan.

From Bro. C. F. Churchill.

Dear Bro Grant:—It is with pleasure I write a few lines to let the dear brethren and sisters know how we fare in this part of God's vineyard. The good Lord has heard the cry of his weeping few in this land, and sent us Bible men and Bible tracts; and, blessed be his heavenly Name, the truth has taken effect,—good done in the name of the Holy Child Jesus,—mourners been comforted, the weary and heavy laden found rest in Jesus,—strangers to God by wicked works have been brought nigh by the precious blood of Christ, and made heirs of immortality and eternal life. Seventeen have been baptized since the first of January, fifteen of whom found Jesus since that time.

Brn. Reid, Ingraham and Clifford have visited us. The same evening Brn. Reed and Clifford came here, Brn. Pitcher and Durgan (Christian ministers,) arrived. About the same time Eld. Ingraham came. It seems as if the good Lord made it a set time to favor his children. We had union meetings. God was present and blessed the word of life. Eld. Reed was here some two weeks—preached some five or six times and visited other places. Elds. Ingraham and Pitcher have had two baptisms together. This had a good effect.

Eld. Ingraham is here now, preaching the good news of the kingdom. O! how it harmonizes the word of God, dear brethren. We have made up our minds to

"Face the storm, it can't be long;
We'll anchor by and by."

And in the glorious world to come we shall live no more to die. O, ye tried ones, pray on a little longer; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. The heavenly mansions are already prepared. The Life Giver cometh quickly, and his reward is with him. Immortality, eternal life, a kingdom for his children, is to be awarded at his appearing. Let us rejoice. Redemption draweth nigh! From your brother in hope of life through Jesus,

Christian F. Churchill.

From Z. Grovier.

Dear Brethren: We read that the whole world is to be deceived, except the elect; and "shall I find faith on earth, (says Jesus,) when I come?" It appears to me that Spiritualism and the doctrine of going to heaven or hell at death, are systems now deceiving the whole world. The people are falling by thousands every day. The like has not been known for centuries. Now, brethren, is the time of trial for true saints; for what fellowship has Christ with Belial? If we wish them God speed we are partakers with them. If God has called us out, why turn back? O brethren, stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, and be not again entangled!

I believe God has called out a few to proclaim the end of all things near, and the effect of every vision. Let us hold fast a little longer, and we shall see the salvation of God. May the great Head of the church keep one and all of us that love his appearing steadfast, immovable, till we see him in the clouds of heaven who will save us with an everlasting salvation. Amen.

From Sr. E. H. Cotton.

Bro. Grant:—I take this time to pen a few lines for the Crisis. I feel thankful for your good paper that comes weekly laden with light and love. It manifests a spirit of sympathy, and I love to hear from my dear brethren and sisters in the Lord; it is like a prayer meeting when I read the communications. I am looking for and I hope loving the appearing of the blessed Savior. I believe that the hope of the church is in the resurrection from the dead. I do not hear much preaching in accordance with my faith, except what I hear through the Crisis.

Your sister in the Lord,

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 9, 1858.

Queries.

1. Bro. T. Mansfield wishes our opinion on Isa. 65: 20,—"The child shall die an hundred years old," &c. We would refer him to an article in No. 18 of the Crisis, for an exposition of this verse.

2. "Whom will the immortal saints reign over?"

We see no reason why they should not reign over other immortal saints, or in other words, their brethren. We believe that all the saints will be under some kind of government; if so, it is proper that some should be governors. The fact that some act as rulers, does not prove that they are placed over their inferiors. We have elders to rule in the church, not because the others are inferior, or are wicked and need to be judged, but to serve the church in good deeds. We are taught to "be subject one to another." We learn from Eph. 5: 24, that the "church is subject to Christ;" and in 1 Cor. 15: 28, we are taught that Christ is "subject" unto God; hence we are all subjects; but some among these subjects may act as officers, but be such as the prophet mentions when he says, "I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness." Christ is to be our king, and at the same time christians are his brethren, and joint heirs with him. We are rejoiced to learn that Jesus is to reign over us, and be the head of the great family of the redeemed. We ardently desire to be his subjects, and be directed by any officer whom he may appoint to see to the welfare of the righteous family, in the everlasting kingdom.

Query.

A brother inquires:—

"What do you understand St. Paul to mean when he talks of being 'absent from the body, and present with the Lord?'" 2 Cor. 5: 6.

In the preceding five verses, Paul uses several figures to illustrate our condition in this world and our future one in the world to come. Such as, "earthly house," "tabernacle," "dissolved," "clothed," "naked," &c.; and we think he uses the word "body" in the sixth verse, in a similar sense.

Let Paul explain himself. Rom. 12: 5. "So we, being many are one body in Christ, and every one members of another." This passage shows that the whole church is denominated a "body."

Paul writes the same thing to the Corinthian brethren, as to the Roman. 1 Cor. 12: 27, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."

In writing to the Ephesians he says in chap. 1: 22–23, "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body."

To the Colossian brethren he says, chap. 1: 18, "And he is the head of the body, the church." We can easily conceive why Paul was "willing rather to be absent from the body, (the church) and to be present with the Lord." But he most plainly shows us that he does not expect to be with the Lord till the resurrection of the dead. It is evident Paul did not consider Christ as personally in this world, because he declares that while he is here in "the body," (the church) he is "absent from the Lord." He shows us in 1 Thess 4: 13–17, how we shall be present with the Lord; to wit, by a resurrection of the dead, or if alive when Jesus comes, by being translated, like Enoch and Elijah. He gives us no idea that he expects to go to Christ spiritually at death, as some at the present day assume to believe. He says, "If after the manner of men I have fought with the beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."—No hope of future life unless the dead rise again.

For the Crisis.

This Same Jesus.

I am thankful to God that my feet were ever guided into his testimony. For the word of God is as a lamp to my feet and a light to my path. It is left upon record, in plain language, by the two men in white apparel,—"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." The same Jesus, and not something else. In the same manner, personally, not spiritually. "Every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." And all the tribes of the earth mourn when the sign of the Son of man appears in heaven. "And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels," &c. He went away in a cloud, (of glory) he comes with clouds, in great glory and power. Angels escorted him upwards to the throne of God, and angels will accompany him back to earth, when he comes to gather together his elect from the four quarters of the earth. Angels will gather the harvest home. When Jesus comes, all the people of the earth and seas will know it.

But some have become impatient waiting for the Lord, and begin to think that "this same Jesus" has come—in some of the inventions of the nineteenth century; others that he has appeared and is manifested in some of the sects of the day; others that he may never come; and some think he came at the destruction of Jerusalem, and that his kingdom is now set up in the believer's heart. Many believe he comes at the day of our death.

Thus the human family, put them all together, have got a great many different comings of the same Jesus. But there is only one coming, and one manner of his coming. He was seen to go away into heaven. The men of Galilee had no doubt as to the reality of the whole affair. Neither will the inhabitants of this world have any more doubts when Jesus appears the second time, than the men of Galilee had when they saw the Savior ascend up into heaven. There will be such a clear and visible manifestation of the second advent of our Savior, that no one will have to ask his neighbor, is this the day of Christ's appearing? Is this the great day of his wrath? No, no! All the tribes of the earth will mourn and wail when he comes. The great and rich as well as the poor man will cry for rocks and mountains to fall upon them. The great white throne will appear, and He that sits thereon, from whose face the earth and the heaven will flee away, that there will be no place found for them. The dead will hear his voice and come forth; that voice which once spake comfort to the sorrowing sons of men, will then shake the solid ground, and be heard through this universal world as when he cried on the cross—"My God, why hast thou foasaken me?"

Yes, he will come—the same Jesus—the man of sorrows and who was acquainted with grief. He who was rich, but for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. The Lord Jesus who raised Lazarus and the widow's son to life, and who blest little children and said, "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven." The same Jesus who was laid in the manger, the son of Joseph and Mary; who confounded the doctors of the law in the temple at the age of twelve years, and after a life of suffering and trials was taken by wicked hands and crowned with thorns, and mocked, and led away to Mount Calvary and crucified.

"He dies, the friend of sinners dies."

The same Jesus who laid three days and nights in Joseph's new tomb; who arose the third day, immortal, and invested with all power in heaven and in earth; who appeared unto the disciples while worshiping, and said, "Peace be unto you;" he also appeared to over five hundred brethren at once; they knew it was the Lord. Peter knew it was the Lord, after toiling all night, having caught nothing. He saw a man standing on the shore (for it was morning) who said, "Cast your net on the right side of the ship;" and they obey and could not draw it for the multitude of fishes. Then Peter exclaimed, "It is the Lord!" and swam to meet him. Peter knew it was the Lord.

Thomas knew it, when Jesus told him to thrust his hand into his side and to put his finger into the print of the nails. Said Thomas, "My Lord and my God!" And so did the men of Galilee know it, when Jesus ascended up into heaven in their light. Said the two men clad in white, "He will come in like manner as you have seen him go up into heaven;" the same Jesus who said to John on Patmos isle, "I am he who was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore; and have the keys of death and hell." The same Jesus who said when here, "If I go away I will come and receive you unto myself."

It is this same real, personal, immortal Jesus, that will appear the second time without sin unto salvation to all those who look for him. In a little while he will come. There is great need of it. When he comes he will give his people immortality; will free them from sickness, sorrow, pain and death; he will cause this groaning creation to cease its groans, and sighs, and tears; he will cleanse the earth from sin, and clothe it in Eden beauty; and it will be filled with God's glory. Then will men and angels meet, and peace and harmony reign through all the earth, Jesus being King on David's throne forever.

I. E. Clark.

The Paper.

Do you like it? Why don't you get your neighbor to take it, then? "He won't." Guess you haven't tried him yet. Try again. "He says he's poor?" Tell him to quit tobacco, tea and coffee. Sit down by him and reckon how much they cost, and argue the case with him. You'll fetch him if you try hard—pray about it before you begin, remember that.

You "like the paper?" Why don't you order it sent to two or three of your distant friends? Wouldn't fifty-two such visiters do them good in the course of a year? "Can't afford it?" O, I see, you drink tea? "Yes." Coffee? "Yes." Use tobacco? "Yes." Have a snuff-box? "Yes." Buy ribbons and gew-gaws? "Yes." Have ear rings and finger rings for the chidren? "Yes." Ah, poor soul, I pity you! Look here, sell off that old cast off jewelry; that'll pay for the paper a while. Correct your bad habits and save your health and money; stop the little leaks in your pocket, and then you'll have money enough so you can afford to take the paper, and send half a dozen copies to your friends. Try it and see.

For the Crisis.

Home.

In this world of tribulation, of trial, perplexity and woe, how sweet to reflect on those joys that await the weary saints when they shall arrive at home, in the paradise of God. Here we have thorns and briars to intercept our pathway; there we will range the fields of glory with untiring steps. Here we mourn and weep; then there will be joy when that bright morning of the resurrection shall dawn; and the whole house of Israel leave their dusty beds, clothed with immortality, to die no more. Here we suffer with Jesus; there we shall reign with him. Here we bear the cross up Calvery's rugged mountain; there we shall wear the crown of never-fading glory. The christian in this life has the bitter things; in the world to come the good. First the cross and then the crown. O, then, in patience may we possess our souls. The tokens thicken; the day is near!

"We're going home, we soon shall be
Where the sky is clear and the soil is free."

Class Meetings.

Bro. Grant:—I think these most important of all meetings for christians are too much overlooked and neglected by our Advent brethren. It is a common saying among the Methodists, that there is no danger of a person backsliding from God who is a regular attendant of the class meetings, and the first symptoms of a coldness in religion is generally seen in a neglect of this and other means of grace.

I hardly think there could be a better plan devised to strengthen new converts than the class meeting. Every one who attends is expected to disclose his present experience, if he is growing in grace and the knowledge of God, that the other members may be strengthened and encouraged, and if he is in trial or darkness, that they may sympathize with and pray for him. Thus by a mutual interchange of thought and experience the whole body may be edified and grow up into Christ their living head. Christian experience will constitute the passport into the city of the New Jerusalem. The love of God shed abroad in the heart will endure, while gifts, prophecy and knowledge will vanish away. The class meeting is the anchor, chain, and cable of the Methodist church; and had it not been continued by them, it is doubtful whether they would at this day be any more numerous than any other denomination. "They that fear the Lord speak often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written for them that feared and thought upon his name; and they shall be mine when I make up my jewels."

D. N. Smith.

Difference in Wives.

Two weeks since, we were riding in the cars, when a gentleman came and spoke to a lady directly in front of us, who was seated beside a sickly man whom we tho't was her husband. The conversation turned upon the health of her companion, who was evidently a consumptive. "Last winter," said she, "I went to Kansas with him. The winter before we spent in Florida; and now we are thinking of removing to Wisconsin or Minnesota for the benefit of his health." The gentleman expressed some thoughts relative to her hardships in thus going away from her home and friends, and travelling so much abroad. "Oh!" she replied, "I do not mind that at all, if he can only regain his health. I like New England better than any other part of the country, for it is home; but I am willing to live any where for his sake." Her husband made no remarks as he heard these words, but volumes were in his eyes. The incident, however, did not particularly impress us until we stopped at a station about a half hour afterwards. Then a friend entered the car and took a seat by our side. He was troubled with a bronchial and lung difficulty of some years' standing. In course of conversation we recommended a residence in a certain Western State, to which he replied, in substance, "I should have been there months ago, if my wife had been willing to go. But all her friends are here in Massachusetts, and no consideration could induce her to go so far away." We looked at once at the stranger woman whose conversation we have cited. "Noble wife!" we said. "One of a thousand, doubtless, in this spirit of self-denial for her husband's sake." There is, certainly, a great difference between these two wives.—Happy Home.

The Teacher's First Prayer.

FROM THE AMERICAN MESSENGER.

E—— L——, the daughter of pious parents, but herself without a Christian hope, was about leaving her home to engage, for the first time in teaching.

She was young, and though possessing uncommon energy and hopefulness, the responsibility which she was to assume pressed heavily upon her. "How can I hope to succeed without God's blessing?" was a question she pondered more and more as the time drew near for her to go; and before leaving home she resolved solemnly before God to make it her first concern to seek his favor and the way of eternal life.

Thus resolving, she met her pupils on the first morning of school. She had not definitely considered how she should begin her work, but as she looked upon the group around her, as she felt her need of a higher wisdom to direct, and as she tho't of the resolution she had made, conscience whispered that she ought to begin her school with prayer.

But how could she? Young and inexperienced, with no hope that she was a Christian, surrounded by an ungodly neighborhood, where there was no one to whom she could look for help in religious duties, how could she take so bold a stand?

But there was no time for delay; the school was waiting; the first step must be taken, and if that step was a wrong one, she felt that all after steps would be wrong also. "If I shrink from this duty will God hear me when I ask him to lead me to himself?" was her thought, and this decided her. She led the school in prayer, and then she was enabled to go on with quietness to her remaining duties. And thus she continued from day to day, asking before her scholars for the blessing of God, although for two full weeks no light dawned upon her soul as to her acceptance with him. At the close of that time Christ appeared, and she could rejoice in him as her light and her salvation. Speaking of this afterward she said, "I believe it was that decided act that turned the scale with me. Had I refused to do what my conscience told me I ought to do, I am sure I could have had no heart and no hope to continue seeking my own salvation. I should have felt that God looked upon me as a mocker, and that he could not consistently grant me his aid." Does not this example speak to others who are inquiring the way of life? The way of obedience is the way of light, and to such as humbly and penitently walk in that way, trusting in the merits of Christ for acceptance, will the true light appear.

Letter from "Carrie."

Dear Brethren and sisters in Christ:—I have just received two numbers of the Crisis, and, looking over their pages, I find a letter to myself which reminds me of my long-neglected duty. I should have written long ago, but feeling my weakness and inability to say any thing that would instruct or encourage, I have neglected that which I should have done. The Crisis has lately become very dear to me, and as from week to week I peruse its columns, I am encouraged, strengthened and enabled to rejoice, and praise God for the rich treasures it contains. Every number is read and re-read with a great deal of interest and, I hope, with profit.

Only the next day after I first wrote, begging an interest in your prayers, as I sat alone with sorrowing heart and tearful eyes, searching for the "pearl" I had lost, the dear Savior appeared to bless. My mouth was filled with praises and my eyes shed tears of joy, and perfect bliss pervaded my soul. And to-day I am rejoicing in the hope of the gospel, and striving to do the will of God. Dear brethren and sisters, help me to declare his praises, and tell of his wonderful works. O work! while the day lasts; surely there is no time to slumber now, when the judgment is but just before us. Let us be willing to go without the camp, bearing the reproach for Christ's sake, fearing not "the scoffs and frowns of the world," but with the eye fixed on the "bright morning star," move forward in the great work before us.

Dear sister "Hattie," I thank you very much for your answer to my request—your advice and your prayers; and may I ask you still to remember me at the throne of grace? I still need the prayers of God's children. I feel every day the need of a deeper work of grace in my heart. I feel there is a great deal of sin hidden there, and I know that it all must be eradicated ere I can behold him who is holy.

You ask, sister dear, if my mind is made up to stand for Christ? I answer yes! let the storm of persecution still drive on, let every earthly friend forsake, the world frown; for, with the good old apostle, I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature be able to separate from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. He who has promised is faithful, and will bring us off conquerors at last.

I noticed in the index that some one beside you had responded to my letter, but I have not seen it, for that number, with one or two more never came to the office or were lost in some way.

You were mistaken, sister Hattie, with regard to my living in the same city with yourself; in Rochester, Mass., is my home. It was wrong in the paper. I should be very happy to hear from you or see you, my sister. It would be very pleasant to meet and mingle our songs and prayers here upon the earth, but if not permitted, God grant that we may meet in that "better home."

"O, I long to be there,
Where no sorrow nor care,
Shall disturb that heavenly rest."

May God bless you all, and crown you at last with immortality and eternal life, is the prayer of

CARRIE.

From Eld. P. B. Morgan.

BRO. GRANT:—Our Conference has concluded its session, and I am happy to report to you that, although the season has been so unpropitious, we have nevertheless had a good gathering and a good session. Ministering brethren present were Elders M. Chandler, W. Pratt, A. S. Calkins, H. H. Janes, G. W. Rathburn, Johnson and Morgan of Illinois, with Eld. I. Morgan from Ct. and Eld. J. Hemenway of Mass.; beside a good number of delegates from churches. The reports were cheering and the prospect seemed most encouraging. Eld. M. Chandler was appointed Conference Evangelist and agent for the ensuing year.

But purposing to prepare a digest of the minutes for the Crisis and Herald shortly, I will add no more except to say—it was resolved the minutes of the Conference be published in full and bound, with our plan of arrangements in pamphlet form for gratuitous circulation, orders for which may be addressed to myself, Secretary of the Conference.

And I am fraternally yours,
P. B. MORGAN.

From Bro. C. F. Churchill.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—It is with pleasure I write a few lines to let the dear brethren and sisters know how we fare in this part of God's vineyard. The good Lord has heard the cry of his weeping few in this land, and sent us Bible men and Bible-tracts; and, blessed be his heavenly Name, the truth has taken effect,—good done in the name of the Holy Child Jesus,—mourners been comforted, the weary and heavy laden found rest in Jesus,—strangers to God by wicked works have been brought nigh by the precious blood of Christ, and made heirs of immortality and eternal life. Seventeen have been baptized since the first of January, fifteen of whom found Jesus since that time.

Brn. Reid, Ingraham and Clifford have visited us. The same evening Brn. Reed and Clifford came here, Brn. Pitcher and Durgan (Christian ministers,) arrived. About the same time Eld. Ingraham came. It seems as if the good Lord made it a set time to favor his children. We had union meetings. God was present and blessed the word of life. Eld. Reed was here some two weeks—preached some five or six times and visited other places. Elds. Ingraham and Pitcher have had two baptisms together. This had a good effect.

Eld. Ingraham is here now, preaching the good news of the kingdom. O! how it harmonizes the word of God, dear brethren. We have made up our minds to

"Face the storm, it can't be long;
We'll anchor by and by."

And in the glorious world to come we shall live no more to die. O, ye tried ones, pray on a little longer; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. The heavenly mansions are already prepared. The Life Giver cometh quickly, and his reward is with him. Immortality, eternal life, a kingdom for his children, is to be awarded at his appearing. Let us rejoice. Redemption draweth nigh! From your brother in hope of life through Jesus,

CHRISTIAN F. CHURCHILL.

From Z. Grovier.

Dear Brethren: We read that the whole world is to be deceived, except the elect; and "shall I find faith on earth, (says Jesus,) when I come?" It appears to me that Spiritualism and the doctrine of going to heaven or hell at death, are systems now deceiving the whole world. The people are falling by thousands every day. The like has not been known for centuries. Now, brethren, is the time of trial for true saints; for what fellowship has Christ with Belial? If we wish them God speed we are partakers with them. If God has called us out, why turn back? O brethren, stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, and be not again entangled!

I believe God has called out a few to proclaim the end of all things near, and the effect of every vision. Let us hold fast a little longer, and we shall see the salvation of God. May the great Head of the church keep one and all of us that love his appearing steadfast, immovable, till we see him in the clouds of heaven who will save us with an everlasting salvation. Amen.

From Sr. E. H. Cotton.

BRO. GRANT:—I take this time to pen a few lines for the Crisis. I feel thankful for your good paper that comes weekly laden with light and love. It manifests a spirit of sympathy, and I love to hear from my dear brethren and sisters in the Lord; it is like a prayer meeting when I read the communications. I am looking for and I hope loving the appearing of the blessed Savior. I believe that the hope of the church is in the resurrection from the dead. I do not hear much preaching in accordance with my faith, except what I hear through the Crisis.

Your sister in the Lord,

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 9, 1858.

Queries.

1. Bro. T. Mansfield wishes our opinion on Isa. 65: 20,—"The child shall die an hundred years old," &c. We would refer him to an article in No. 18 of the Crisis, for an exposition of this verse.

2. "Whom will the immortal saints reign over?"

We see no reason why they should not reign over other immortal saints, or in other words, their brethren. We believe that all the saints will be under some kind of government; if so, it is proper that some should be governors. The fact that some act as rulers, does not prove that they are placed over their inferiors. We have elders to rule in the church, not because the others are inferior, or are wicked and need to be judged, but to serve the church in good deeds. We are taught to "be subject one to another." We learn from Eph. 5: 24, that the "church is subject to Christ;" and in 1 Cor. 15: 28, we are taught that Christ is "subject" unto God; hence we are all subjects; but some among these subjects may act as officers, but be such as the prophet mentions when he says, "I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness." Christ is to be our king, and at the same time christians are his brethren, and joint heirs with him. We are rejoiced to learn that Jesus is to reign over us, and be the head of the great family of the redeemed. We ardently desire to be his subjects, and be directed by any officer whom he may appoint to see to the welfare of the righteous family, in the everlasting kingdom.

Query.

A brother inquires:—

"What do you understand St. Paul to mean when he talks of being 'absent from the body, and present with the Lord?'" 2 Cor. 5: 6.

In the preceding five verses, Paul uses several figures to illustrate our condition in this world and our future one in the world to come. Such as, "earthly house," "tabernacle," "dissolved," "clothed," "naked," &c.; and we think he uses the word "body" in the sixth verse, in a similar sense.

Let Paul explain himself. Rom. 12: 5. "So we, being many are one body in Christ, and every one members of another." This passage shows that the whole church is denominated a "body."

Paul writes the same thing to the Corinthian brethren, as to the Roman. 1 Cor. 12: 27, "Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular."

In writing to the Ephesians he says in chap. 1: 22–23, "And hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body."

To the Colossian brethren he says, chap. 1: 18, "And he is the head of the body, the church." We can easily conceive why Paul was "willing rather to be absent from the body, (the church) and to be present with the Lord." But he most plainly shows us that he does not expect to be with the Lord till the resurrection of the dead. It is evident Paul did not consider Christ as personally in this world, because he declares that while he is here in "the body," (the church) he is "absent from the Lord." He shows us in 1 Thess 4: 13–17, how we shall be present with the Lord; to wit, by a resurrection of the dead, or if alive when Jesus comes, by being translated, like Enoch and Elijah. He gives us no idea that he expects to go to Christ spiritually at death, as some at the present day assume to believe. He says, "If after the manner of men I have fought with the beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."—No hope of future life unless the dead rise again.

For the Crisis.

This Same Jesus.

I am thankful to God that my feet were ever guided into his testimony. For the word of God is as a lamp to my feet and a light to my path. It is left upon record, in plain language, by the two men in white apparel,—"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." The same Jesus, and not something else. In the same manner, personally, not spiritually. "Every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." And all the tribes of the earth mourn when the sign of the Son of man appears in heaven. "And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels," &c. He went away in a cloud, (of glory) he comes with clouds, in great glory and power. Angels escorted him upwards to the throne of God, and angels will accompany him back to earth, when he comes to gather together his elect from the four quarters of the earth. Angels will gather the harvest home. When Jesus comes, all the people of the earth and seas will know it.

But some have become impatient waiting for the Lord, and begin to think that "this same Jesus" has come—in some of the inventions of the nineteenth century; others that he has appeared and is manifested in some of the sects of the day; others that he may never come; and some think he came at the destruction of Jerusalem, and that his kingdom is now set up in the believer's heart. Many believe he comes at the day of our death.

Thus the human family, put them all together, have got a great many different comings of the same Jesus. But there is only one coming, and one manner of his coming. He was seen to go away into heaven. The men of Galilee had no doubt as to the reality of the whole affair. Neither will the inhabitants of this world have any more doubts when Jesus appears the second time, than the men of Galilee had when they saw the Savior ascend up into heaven. There will be such a clear and visible manifestation of the second advent of our Savior, that no one will have to ask his neighbor, is this the day of Christ's appearing? Is this the great day of his wrath? No, no! All the tribes of the earth will mourn and wail when he comes. The great and rich as well as the poor man will cry for rocks and mountains to fall upon them. The great white throne will appear, and He that sits thereon, from whose face the earth and the heaven will flee away, that there will be no place found for them. The dead will hear his voice and come forth; that voice which once spake comfort to the sorrowing sons of men, will then shake the solid ground, and be heard through this universal world as when he cried on the cross—"My God, why hast thou foasaken me?"

Yes, he will come—the same Jesus—the man of sorrows and who was acquainted with grief. He who was rich, but for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. The Lord Jesus who raised Lazarus and the widow's son to life, and who blest little children and said, "Of such is the kingdom of Heaven." The same Jesus who was laid in the manger, the son of Joseph and Mary; who confounded the doctors of the law in the temple at the age of twelve years, and after a life of suffering and trials was taken by wicked hands and crowned with thorns, and mocked, and led away to Mount Calvary and crucified.

"He dies, the friend of sinners dies."

The same Jesus who laid three days and nights in Joseph's new tomb; who arose the third day, immortal, and invested with all power in heaven and in earth; who appeared unto the disciples while worshiping, and said, "Peace be unto you;" he also appeared to over five hundred brethren at once; they knew it was the Lord. Peter knew it was the Lord, after toiling all night, having caught nothing. He saw a man standing on the shore (for it was morning) who said, "Cast your net on the right side of the ship;" and they obey and could not draw it for the multitude of fishes. Then Peter exclaimed, "It is the Lord!" and swam to meet him. Peter knew it was the Lord.

Thomas knew it, when Jesus told him to thrust his hand into his side and to put his finger into the print of the nails. Said Thomas, "My Lord and my God!" And so did the men of Galilee know it, when Jesus ascended up into heaven in their light. Said the two men clad in white, "He will come in like manner as you have seen him go up into heaven;" the same Jesus who said to John on Patmos isle, "I am he who was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore; and have the keys of death and hell." The same Jesus who said when here, "If I go away I will come and receive you unto myself."

It is this same real, personal, immortal Jesus, that will appear the second time without sin unto salvation to all those who look for him. In a little while he will come. There is great need of it. When he comes he will give his people immortality; will free them from sickness, sorrow, pain and death; he will cause this groaning creation to cease its groans, and sighs, and tears; he will cleanse the earth from sin, and clothe it in Eden beauty; and it will be filled with God's glory. Then will men and angels meet, and peace and harmony reign through all the earth, Jesus being King on David's throne forever.

The Paper.

Do you like it? Why don't you get your neighbor to take it, then? "He won't." Guess you haven't tried him yet. Try again. "He says he's poor?" Tell him to quit tobacco, tea and coffee. Sit down by him and reckon how much they cost, and argue the case with him. You'll fetch him if you try hard—pray about it before you begin, remember that.

You "like the paper." Why don't you order it sent to two or three of your distant friends? Wouldn't fifty-two such visiters do them good in the course of a year? "Can't afford it?" O, I see, you drink tea? "Yes." Coffee? "Yes." Use tobacco? "Yes." Have a snuff-box? "Yes." Buy ribbons and gew-gaws? "Yes." Have ear rings and finger rings for the chidren? "Yes." Ah, poor soul, I pity you! Look here, sell off that old cast off jewelry; that'll pay for the paper a while. Correct your bad habits and save your health and money; stop the little leaks in your pocket, and then you'll have money enough so you can afford to take the paper, and send half a dozen copies to your friends. Try it and see.

For the Crisis.

Home.

In this world of tribulation, of trial, perplexity and woe, how sweet to reflect on those joys that await the weary saints when they shall arrive at home, in the paradise of God. Here we have thorns and briars to intercept our pathway; there we will range the fields of glory with untiring steps. Here we mourn and weep; then there will be joy when that bright morning of the resurrection shall dawn; and the whole house of Israel leave their dusty beds, clothed with immortality, to die no more. Here we suffer with Jesus; there we shall reign with him. Here we bear the cross up Calvery's rugged mountain; there we shall wear the crown of never-fading glory. The christian in this life has the bitter things; in the world to come the good. First the cross and then the crown. O, then, in patience may we possess our souls. The tokens thicken; the day is near!

"We're going home, we soon shall be
Where the sky is clear and the soil is free."

Class Meetings.

BRO. GRANT:—I think these most important of all meetings for christians are too much overlooked and neglected by our Advent brethren. It is a common saying among the Methodists, that there is no danger of a person backsliding from God who is a regular attendant of the class meetings, and the first symptoms of a coldness in religion is generally seen in a neglect of this and other means of grace.

I hardly think there could be a better plan devised to strengthen new converts than the class meeting. Every one who attends is expected to disclose his present experience, if he is growing in grace and the knowledge of God, that the other members may be strengthened and encouraged, and if he is in trial or darkness, that they may sympathize with and pray for him. Thus by a mutual interchange of thought and experience the whole body may be edified and grow up into Christ their living head. Christian experience will constitute the passport into the city of the New Jerusalem. The love of God shed abroad in the heart will endure, while gifts, prophecy and knowledge will vanish away. The class meeting is the anchor, chain, and cable of the Methodist church; and had it not been continued by them, it is doubtful whether they would at this day be any more numerous than any other denomination. "They that fear the Lord speak often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written for them that feared and thought upon his name; and they shall be mine when I make up my jewels."

Difference in Wives.

Two weeks since, we were riding in the cars, when a gentleman came and spoke to a lady directly in front of us, who was seated beside a sickly man whom we tho't was her husband. The conversation turned upon the health of her companion, who was evidently a consumptive. "Last winter," said she, "I went to Kansas with him. The winter before we spent in Florida; and now we are thinking of removing to Wisconsin or Minnesota for the benefit of his health." The gentleman expressed some thoughts relative to her hardships in thus going away from her home and friends, and travelling so much abroad. "Oh!" she replied, "I do not mind that at all, if he can only regain his health. I like New England better than any other part of the country, for it is home; but I am willing to live any where for his sake." Her husband made no remarks as he heard these words, but volumes were in his eyes. The incident, however, did not particularly impress us until we stopped at a station about a half hour afterwards. Then a friend entered the car and took a seat by our side. He was troubled with a bronchial and lung difficulty of some years' standing. In course of conversation we recommended a residence in a certain Western State, to which he replied, in substance, "I should have been there months ago, if my wife had been willing to go. But all her friends are here in Massachusetts, and no consideration could induce her to go so far away." We looked at once at the stranger woman whose conversation we have cited. "Noble wife!" we said. "One of a thousand, doubtless, in this spirit of self-denial for her husband's sake." There is, certainly, a great difference between these two wives.—Happy Home.

The Teacher's First Prayer.

FROM THE AMERICAN MESSENGER.

E—— L——, the daughter of pious parents, but herself without a Christian hope, was about leaving her home to engage, for the first time in teaching.

She was young, and though possessing uncommon energy and hopefulness, the responsibility which she was to assume pressed heavily upon her. "How can I hope to succeed without God's blessing?" was a question she pondered more and more as the time drew near for her to go; and before leaving home she resolved solemnly before God to make it her first concern to seek his favor and the way of eternal life.

Thus resolving, she met her pupils on the first morning of school. She had not definitely considered how she should begin her work, but as she looked upon the group around her, as she felt her need of a higher wisdom to direct, and as she tho't of the resolution she had made, conscience whispered that she ought to begin her school with prayer.

But how could she? Young and inexperienced, with no hope that she was a Christian, surrounded by an ungodly neighborhood, where there was no one to whom she could look for help in religious duties, how could she take so bold a stand?

But there was no time for delay; the school was waiting; the first step must be taken, and if that step was a wrong one, she felt that all after steps would be wrong also. "If I shrink from this duty will God hear me when I ask him to lead me to himself?" was her thought, and this decided her. She led the school in prayer, and then she was enabled to go on with quietness to her remaining duties. And thus she continued from day to day, asking before her scholars for the blessing of God, although for two full weeks no light dawned upon her soul as to her acceptance with him. At the close of that time Christ appeared, and she could rejoice in him as her light and her salvation. Speaking of this afterward she said, "I believe it was that decided act that turned the scale with me. Had I refused to do what my conscience told me I ought to do, I am sure I could have had no heart and no hope to continue seeking my own salvation. I should have felt that God looked upon me as a mocker, and that he could not consistently grant me his aid." Does not this example speak to others who are inquiring the way of life? The way of obedience is the way of light, and to such as humbly and penitently walk in that way, trusting in the merits of Christ for acceptance, will the true light appear.

Inconsistencies.

There are some human inconsistencies and foibles so very terrible and degrading that we greet them with a laughter which is akin to tears. The wisely foolish skepticism of a young man is ludicrous in its vanity; yet very terrible when viewed in another and a clearer light. It seems so unnatural that we can claim no kindred with him, and his doubts repel the better nature and loves which are the prerogative of youth, the divinity of which is harnessed in a dark and heavy burden, under which it cannot rise nor be got rid of except by earnest and terrible struggles.—Exch.

Contentment.—Content is the tranquility of the heart; prayer is its aliment. It is satisfied under every dispensation of Providence, and takes thankfully its allotted portion; never inquiring whether a little more would not be a little better; knowing that if God had so judged, it would have been as easy for him to have given the more as the less. That is not content which does not enjoy, as the gift of Infinite Wisdom, what it has; nor is that true patience which does not suffer meekly the loss of what it had, because it is not His will that it should have it longer.—Hannah More.

A Definition of Baptism.—The Tennessee Baptist has put forth a definition of "Baptism," which goes somewhat further back than the definitions usually given and received by the Baptist churches. It says:

"Genuine baptism is not immersion by an unauthorized minister, nor is it immersion by a Presbyterian or a Methodist preacher, even though he may have been immersed; nor is it immersion by a Baptist preacher. Christian Baptism is immersion by a Baptist preacher who himself has been regularly immersed by a regularly immersed Baptist minister."

THE REVIVAL.

God is moving—God is working
By his Spirit's mighty power,
In the broad bright dreams of daylight,
And at midnight's silent hour;
Moving on the heart of manhood,
Breathing soft in childhood's ear,
And the cheek of age bedewing
With the penitential tear.

God is moving! List at morning
To the earnest cry of prayer
Going forth from hundreds, thousands—
Vocal seems the very air;
Praises are borne up to heaven
Hourly from the gather'd throng,
While the sinner's cry for mercy
Mingles with the convert's song.

God is working by his Spirit
Out upon the mighty sea;
'Mid the vessel's masts and rigging
Many a sailor bends the knee:
And in lieu of angry cursing
Borne upon the mighty air,
With the sea-bird's song ascendeth
Now the seaman's fervent prayer.

Men engaged in active conflict,
Busy in commercial strife,
Turn to this most solemn question—
How to gain eternal life:
E'en the gay and thoughtless listen
To the words of truth divine,
While in this blest work all christians
Whatsoe'er their name combine.

God is moving! God is calling!
Listen to that voice of love;
It may be the last great message
Sent in mercy from above—
Sinner turn, the Lord is gracious,
With the heart his word believe;
See! the Savior stands before thee,
Look O! dying one, and live.

For the Children.

The Winds of Spring.

"Flora, how pleasantly the wind sings in the warm spring days, when it has to sing almost alone. It does not sound lonely, but it seems just as if the sparrows, and blue birds, and robins, came flying to the bare fields on purpose to keep the cheerful breezes company. Every morning there is a new song among our elm trees. And, Flora, it seems, too, as if the wind coaxed the blossoms out of their hard, scaly buds on the trees. After the boughs have been dancing in the sunshine, with the wind playing and whispering around them, their blossoms are a great deal thicker and fresher than before. Hark! how the pine trees rock! and there is a sound in them like the sea! Don't you love to listen to the wind, cousin Flora?"

"Who can help it, Bell? The wind of spring is like a sweet, loving spirit. We cannot see it, but we love it for what it does."

"I think, sometimes, that I can hear what the wind says, when it runs along through the dry fields, and over the brown hill-sides. It creeps in where the violets and anemones are hidden beneath dry bunches of weeds, and says, 'Come out, Violet! come out, Anemone! The place for flowers is up here in the air and sunshine. Don't stay shut up under ground, when you are wanted to make the world bright and beautiful.' And when the flowers hear that soft voice through the loose earth, they know that their prison-doors are open, and that Jack Frost, their jailor, will not dare come back to shut them up again. I think this happy wind does not feel quite at home, till it has hundreds of birds to run flying races with, and hundreds of blossoms to sing to, making them open their sleepy eyes into the sunshine. Flora, what is that verse you used to say to me about the flowers keeping house under ground in the winter?"

"You mean the verse of good old George Herbert, I think. He is speaking about himself."

"Who would have thought my shrivelled heart
Could have recovered greenness? It was gone
Quite under ground, as flowers depart
To see their mother-root, when they have blown,
Where they together
All that hard weather
Dead to the world, keep house alone."

"Well, Flora, the wind will not let the flowers keep house quietly now,—although without the dew and the rain, they would never get up to see the light, would they?"

"No; but the light itself is what they most need. The warm sun of spring must send its rays down to their weak roots, to make them strong. Do you not see, Bell, that the sun, the rain, and the breezes work among the little plants, to free them from their earth-prison, just as God works among human hearts, to set them free from all that is dark and earthly, and to make them bud and blossom in holiness? God is Light; and every good thought is warmed into being by Him. His love falls like dew or rain upon our souls; and it is by His Spirit, breathing through us, that the germs of truth and goodness are awakened and kept alive."

"Why, that is like what the Bible says, Flora. 'The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit.' The flowers cannot blossom, nor keep themselves fresh and alive by their own power. Is that what good people mean, when they say that every good thing in them is not of themselves, but of God?"

"Yes, little Bell, the Spirit of God alone can waken our hearts from the death-sleep of sin; and we must have His life within us, or we are not truly alive. Never, till this Spirit breathes upon us, can that life be revealed. But when that heavenly breath passes over the world, what seemed only dry roots, become green and lovely plants in the garden of God."

"Now the wind sounds sweeter than ever to me, cousin Flora, for making me think of these things."

"And there is something else that the wind of spring is like;—the voice of God, which shall at last awaken the dead. The Apostle Paul says that the bodies of saints are sown like seed in the ground; and when His voice shall pass like this soft wind among the graves, the dead shall come forth, the holy dead, with bodies as much surpassing in beauty their earthly ones, as the full-blown flower surpasses the insignificant seed. And then, in Paradise, where these spiritual forms blossom in God's smile, there will fall no blight, there will be no more death."

"Oh, Flora, the wind teaches as well as sings! I shall never hear it now, without remembering the beautiful lessons it bids me learn. Certainly, the wind is one of the voices of God."—Congregationalist.

The Stomach and the Brain.

Dr. Bayard, of New York, recently delivered a lecture upon medical treatment, from which we take the following paragraph, showing the condition of mind as resulting from what is taken into the stomach:—

Every drug had its peculiar power, and some drugs had the power of disturbing the physical, mental, and even moral dispositions of man. Mercury, for example, would cause ill humor, distrustfulness, suspicion, distraction and disgust of life. What a sad reflection to the parent who had allowed such tampering with the constitution and the leaving of such baneful impressions upon the sensorium of his child, whom he found fretful and unable to control the mental manifestation! The child was whipped when its will was shackled, and oftentimes grave consequences followed. The normal condition of the mind was perverted by repeated large doses of drugs. Dr. Bayard instanced in illustration the case of a murderer in Glasgow, whose body was examined after death, and it was discovered that the febrile organs were afflicted, and arsenic was found interwoven in the tissues of the brain; consequently new traits of character were given to the man; camomile would also affect the moral symptoms, causing stupidity, taciturnity, apathy, hypochondria, and a mischievous disposition in children. The lecturer cited the case of a lady hypochondriac, whose manner was changed from a congenial to a sensitive humor; she knew her weakness, but could not control her unhappy infirmity; she had no power over her will. This lady was in the habit of taking a wine glass full of a decoction of camomile daily, but was restored to health by abandoning the practice. Orsini and Pierri's execution was spoken of; Orsini appeared to die with fortitude, in the possession of all his faculties; Pierri was volatile, his tongue never being still a minute. He would sooner say the first died heroically and that the second was gabbling and weak, but the truth was that coffee being offered them previous to their expiation, Orsini declined and Pierri drank freely. Hahneman's opinion of the effect of coffee drinking was that it excited the mental and physical powers and excessive loquacity was a consequence.

Hon. Thomas H. Benton, in a speech in New York, turned to the ladies, and referring to his mother, said:—

"My mother asked me never to use tobacco, and I have never touched it from that time to the present day. She asked me not to game, and I have never gamed; and I cannot tell this day who is winning and who is losing in games that can be played. She admonished me, too, against hard drink; and whatever capacity for endurance I may have at present, and whatever usefulness I may attain in life, I attribute to having complied with her pious and earnest wishes. When seven years of age, she asked me not to drink, and I made then a resolution of total abstinence. I formed an abstinence society at a time when I was the sole constituent member of my own body, and that I have adhered to it through all time, I owe to my mother."

Foreign News.

THE DUKE OF HAMILTON KISSING THE POPE'S TOE.

The Glasgow Free Press (Roman Catholic Organ) contains a letter from "Our Roman Correspondent," denouncing the rude conduct of some ill-bred visitors in the holy city. The letter, however, concludes with the following statement, which we give as we find it: "It is relieving to know that at least every one that comes here from England is not disorderly, overbearing, or arrogant. We have very often some of the best specimens of refinement and morality coming from England to this place; and it gives me the greatest pleasure that could be afforded to me in this way to be able to point to a bright example of this kind from your own door.—His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, on his arrival here lately, went to kiss the Pope's foot. The holy father, rising from his seat found a gift of twelve thousand scudi lying at his feet. His Grace attended at all the holy offices performed at St. Peter's and the Sistine church during holy week, and at the solemn mass and benediction of the blessed sacrament of the mass on Easter Sunday. I saw him afterwards, mounted, along with General Goyon, at the head of the Roman army. He wore a red coat and Tartan trowsers."

THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH CABLE.

A recent number of the London Times, in a long notice of this undertaking says, that the apparatus for paying out the cable may be regarded as perfect. About the middle of next month the Agamemnon and Niagara will swim away into deep water and try every known test which can be attempted to prove the efficiency of the paying-ont machinery. The machinery thus obtained will be applied to improving any little defects which may exist in the apparatus before the final starting of the expedition in June next.

THE CONDITION OF AFFAIRS AT CALCUTTA.

The following is an extract from a letter recently received by Mr. H. A. Loomis of this city, from a relative in Calcutta, dated Mar. 15, 1858:

* * * "Vessels are anchered off the city, and boats all manned with sailors, cannon and every thing ready to give the insurgents a warm reception if they attack Calcutta. Five hundred more distressed families have arrived here from Lucknow; where they are to be 'stowed' I cannot say. Calcutta is crowded to suffocation. 'Dacoits,' or bands of robbers have come down also, and their operations have already commenced. Many houses have been robbed in Howrah, a village opposite Calcutta, and a few days since a gentleman was killed with his family, and his money, plate, jewels, &c., stolen.—These Dacoits send their victims to the spirit world by a method called 'gole hottya.'—They clasp their two hands around the victim's neck and strangle him. Robbery, famine and murder all follow in the train of war. The French now make open threatenings against the English. The Burmese hate them as well as the Russians, and all the hill tribes are against them.

* * * A feeling of uneasiness still exists here as to the Sepoys at Barrackpore.—There are a goodly number of them and it is well known that they are constantly plotting. General Hersey, however, has a good intelligence department, and is never long ignorant of what is on foot. On the nihgt of Tuesday last there was some little excitement in Calcutta in consequence of an order being circulated among the volunteers to hold themselves in readiness to turn out at a moment's notice. This warning was given at ten o'clock, and the impression it created was that immediate danger was apprehended by the authorities. Information which was considered worthy of belief was received at Barrackpore, of the purport that those Sepoys which were on that day to march to Calcutta to relieve the Guards there, were to receive arms on the road through a native of rank, after which they and their brethren in Calcutta, whom they were supposed to relieve, were conjointly to try what they could do in the way of mischief. Early that evening the Nawab of Rampore, who had just returned from England, was arrested at Calcutta, and with several of his suite, placed in the common jail."

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

New York, June 1.

Steamship Hammonia has arrived at her dock.

Later news from India has been received. Azingier has been relieved.

The rebels have been defeated near Futtyghur and many killed.

At Bheels the rebels were also defeated, 500 taken prisoners, with a loss to the British of 70.

There has been a battle between the Turks and Montenegrins at Grahovo. The Turks were totally defeated, their commander killed, with the loss of Cannon, baggage, &c., and then fled to Klobach where they remained in a state of seige.

Telegraphic dispatches from Bombay, received at Malta, state that Azinghur was relieved April 15, by Gen. Lugard, with but trifling loss.

Brigadier Seaton defeated the rebels near Futtyghur, killing and wounding three hundred, and capturing their guns and ammunition.

A body of rebels in the Maltapoora Mountains had also been defeated.

A large body of Bheels had also been defeated in the Sautpore Hills, and five hundred captured. The British loss was severe, including five officers.

Gen. Ros had delayed his advance upon Calpee in consequence of the advance of the rebels upon Jhansi.

A Vienna dispatch states the Montenegrins had attacked the Turks near Grahovo, and nearly annihilated their whole force, killing their commander, Kiamil Pasha, and capturing all their guns. The Montenegrins lost two hundred killed and wounded. The Turks numbered seven thousand strong, and the Montenegrins five thousand.

The London Times says rumors are prevalent in political circles concerning the intentions of France toward Belgium.

Washington, June 1.

Lord Napier has desired his dispatches to Admiral Stewart, sent from Washington yesterday, to be forwarded from Halifax by special steamer to Bermudo. He has advised the Admiral to order the discontinuance of the visitation of American vessels, pending the instructions of Her Majesty's government.

Domestic Summary.

REVOLUTION IN NEW ORLEANS.

Alarmed at the great increase of vice and crime in their midst, a large number of the best, the most honorable, and justice-loving citizens of New Orleans, forming themselves into a Vigilance Committee, took possession of the Arsenal in Jackson Square, on the evening of the 2d inst.

The committee is composed equally of the Democratic and American parties. They have issued an uninflamable, yet resolute proclamation, in which they state their determination to no longer submit tamely to the indignities and crimes perpetrated by lawless ruffians, but, taking the law into their own hands, are resolved to give every offender the punishment due his crime.

The Mayor and Council proceeded to the head-quarters of the Vigilance Committee and read the riot act, but the committee paid no attention to it. A battle between the Vigilance Committee and the City Government seems likely. A slight skirmish occurred between some of the committee and the opposition on Friday night, but no one was killed. The committee have made several arrests, and some individuals obnoxious to them have had orders to leave the city.

The proclamation of the Vigilance Committee concludes thus: "The ruffians who have dyed our streets with the gore of unoffending citizens, and spread terror among the peaceable, orderly, and well-disposed, must leave or perish. So the people have determined."

Later.—Since the above was in type, we have received later news. Four of the Vigilance party had been killed by the accidental discharge of a cannon. The Mayor is not fully committed to either party as yet, but vascilates. At the election on Monday, Gerard Stith, the candidate of the American party, is said to have been elected.

The Difficulties in Kansas.—St. Louis, May 31.—Thirty boxes of muskets have been shipped from Jefferson City to the border country, in charge of the Quartermaster, Gen. Hackney, and Inspector Gen. Blakey, with the inferred design of repelling the invasion of Missouri by marauding bands from Kansas. It is probable that the militia in some of the western counties may be called out.

The Bible in the Public Schools.—New York, June 1.—The recent action of the School Trustees in some of our wards, in banishing the Bible from the schools is creating much excitement. The United Americans have taken the matter up, and a meeting was held last night of delegates from all the chapels to determine on measures for opposing this alleged attempt of Roman Catholics to get control of our public schools. It is understood that a general committee of the Protestant American Associations is organized for the same purpose.

Notice.—The brethren and sisters in Carmel, Me., have established a regular conference at Robinson school-house, near Bro. Geo. L. Robinson's, the third Saturday in each month, and will, if they can, have preaching. Give them a call.

In behalf of the church.

N. F. Nason.

The Maine Conference of Adventists.

This conference is to be holden in Richmond, Reed Meeting-house, to commence on Thursday, 10 o'clock, A. M., June 17th, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that those who are specially interested in the great truths which have called us out as a distinct class, sufficiently see and feel that the cause they have espoused, and which has already benefited so many, demands their continued and more united efforts to sustain and increase the interest upon the all-important theme of the day of the Lord, the judgment, and the kingdom of God at hand. Never, since we became a people, has there been a time when we could labor so understandingly and effectually as now. Let us try to unite all our strength given by the Lord, and encourage all who are inclined to the truth. Come, brethren, all who can consistently, and let us see each other again in the flesh; talk, pray, sing, and consult how we may best act to save our fellow men and ourselves by the instrumentalities God has put in our hands. The meeting is 2 miles from the Rail Road station and from steamboat wharf. Those coming from the North can arrive at 12 M. Those from the South and West at 3 P. M. Brethren in the vicinity, though few, will do all they can to provide for them, and will furnish pasturing for the horses. As this meeting is intended for the benefit of the cause generally, in all parts of the State, churches and lay brethren should furnish means to defray the expenses of the ministers, or come prepared to contribute at the meeting; as those in the place will do all their duty in taking care of those who come, and they will be glad to see all who can come. Call for Eld. I. C. Wellcome, at the village, or David Robinson, Low Curtis, or John Umberhind in the vicinity.

We take the liberty to sign the names to this call of several of our ministers whom we know to be anxious for the meeting, as time has not permitted us to notify them of its arrangement. Will all other ministers interested, send their names to the offices to be added?

CONTENTMENT.—Content is the tranquility of the heart; prayer is its aliment. It is satisfied under every dispensation of Providence, and takes thankfully its allotted portion; never inquiring whether a little more would not be a little better; knowing that if God had so judged, it would have been as easy for him to have given the more as the less. That is not content which does not enjoy, as the gift of Infinite Wisdom, what it has; nor is that true patience which does not suffer meekly the loss of what it had, because it is not His will that it should have it longer.—Hannah More.

A DEFINITION OF BAPTISM.—The Tennessee Baptist has put forth a definition of "Baptism," which goes somewhat further back than the definitions usually given and received by the Baptist churches. It says:

"Genuine baptism is not immersion by an unauthorized minister, nor is it immersion by a Presbyterian or a Methodist preacher, even though he may have been immersed; nor is it immersion by a Baptist preacher. Christian Baptism is immersion by a Baptist preacher who himself has been regularly immersed by a regularly immersed Baptist minister."

THE REVIVAL.

God is moving—God is working
By his Spirit's mighty power,
In the broad bright dreams of daylight,
And at midnight's silent hour;
Moving on the heart of manhood,
Breathing soft in childhood's ear,
And the cheek of age bedewing
With the penitential tear.

God is moving! List at morning
To the earnest cry of prayer
Going forth from hundreds, thousands—
Vocal seems the very air;
Praises are borne up to heaven
Hourly from the gather'd throng,
While the sinner's cry for mercy
Mingles with the convert's song.

God is working by his Spirit
Out upon the mighty sea;
'Mid the vessel's masts and rigging
Many a sailor bends the knee:
And in lieu of angry cursing
Borne upon the mighty air,
With the sea-bird's song ascendeth
Now the seaman's fervent prayer.

Men engaged in active conflict,
Busy in commercial strife,
Turn to this most solemn question—
How to gain eternal life?
E'en the gay and thoughtless listen
To the words of truth divine,
While in this blest work all christians
Whatsoe'er their name combine.

God is moving! God is calling!
Listen to that voice of love;
It may be the last great message
Sent in mercy from above—
Sinner turn, the Lord is gracious,
With the heart his word believe;
See! the Savior stands before thee,
Look O! dying one, and live.

The Winds of Spring.

"Flora, how pleasantly the wind sings in the warm spring days, when it has to sing almost alone. It does not sound lonely, but it seems just as if the sparrows, and blue birds, and robins, came flying to the bare fields on purpose to keep the cheerful breezes company. Every morning there is a new song among our elm trees. And, Flora, it seems, too, as if the wind coaxed the blossoms out of their hard, scaly buds on the trees. After the boughs have been dancing in the sunshine, with the wind playing and whispering around them, their blossoms are a great deal thicker and fresher than before. Hark! how the pine trees rock! and there is a sound in them like the sea! Don't you love to listen to the wind, cousin Flora?"

"Who can help it, Bell? The wind of spring is like a sweet, loving spirit. We cannot see it, but we love it for what it does."

"I think, sometimes, that I can hear what the wind says, when it runs along through the dry fields, and over the brown hill-sides. It creeps in where the violets and anemones are hidden beneath dry bunches of weeds, and says, 'Come out, Violet! come out, Anemone! The place for flowers is up here in the air and sunshine. Don't stay shut up under ground, when you are wanted to make the world bright and beautiful.' And when the flowers hear that soft voice through the loose earth, they know that their prison-doors are open, and that Jack Frost, their jailor, will not dare come back to shut them up again. I think this happy wind does not feel quite at home, till it has hundreds of birds to run flying races with, and hundreds of blossoms to sing to, making them open their sleepy eyes into the sunshine. Flora, what is that verse you used to say to me about the flowers keeping house under ground in the winter?"

"You mean the verse of good old George Herbert, I think. He is speaking about himself:"

"Who would have thought my shrivelled heart
Could have recovered greenness? It was gone
Quite under ground, as flowers depart
To see their mother-root, when they have blown,
Where they together
All that hard weather
Dead to the world, keep house alone."

"Well, Flora, the wind will not let the flowers keep house quietly now,—although without the dew and the rain, they would never get up to see the light, would they?"

"No; but the light itself is what they most need. The warm sun of spring must send its rays down to their weak roots, to make them strong. Do you not see, Bell, that the sun, the rain, and the breezes work among the little plants, to free them from their earth-prison, just as God works among human hearts, to set them free from all that is dark and earthly, and to make them bud and blossom in holiness? God is light; and every good thought is warmed into being by Him. His love falls like dew or rain upon our souls; and it is by His Spirit, breathing through us, that the germs of truth and goodness are awakened and kept alive."

"Why, that is like what the Bible says, Flora, 'The wind bloweth where it listeth, [illegible] the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit.' The flowers cannot blossom, nor keep themselves fresh and alive by their own power. Is that what good people mean, when they say that every good thing in them is not of themselves, but of God?"

"Yes, little Bell, the Spirit of God alone can waken our hearts from the death-sleep of sin; and we must have His life within us, or we are not truly alive. Never, till this Spirit breathes upon us, can that life be revealed. But when that heavenly breath passes over the world, what seemed only dry roots, become green and lovely plants in the garden of God."

"Now the wind sounds sweeter than ever to me, cousin Flora, for making me think of these things."

"And there is something else that the wind of spring is like;—the voice of God, which shall at last awaken the dead. The Apostle Paul says that the bodies of saints are sown like seed in the ground; and when His voice shall pass like this soft wind among the graves, the dead shall come forth, the holy dead, with bodies as much surpassing in beauty their earthly ones, as the full-blown flower surpasses the insignificant seed. And then, in Paradise, where these spiritual forms blossom in God's smile, there will fall no blight, there will be no more death."

"Oh, Flora, the wind teaches as well as sings! I shall never hear it now, without remembering the beautiful lessons it bids me learn. Certainly, the wind is one of the voices of God."—Congregationalist.

Health Department.

The Stomach and the Brain.

Dr. Bayard, of New York, recently delivered a lecture upon medical treatment, from which we take the following paragraph, showing the condition of mind as resulting from what is taken into the stomach:—

Every drug had its peculiar power, and some drugs had the power of disturbing the physical, mental, and even moral dispositions of man. Mercury, for example, would cause ill humor, distrustfulness, suspicion, distraction and disgust of life. What a sad reflection to the parent who had allowed such tampering with the constitution and the leaving of such baneful impressions upon the sensorium of his child, whom he found fretful and unable to control the mental manifestation! The child was whipped when its will was shackled, and oftentimes grave consequences followed. The normal condition of the mind was perverted by repeated large doses of drugs. Dr. Bayard instanced in illustration the case of a murderer in Glasgow, whose body was examined after death, and it was discovered that the febrile organs were afflicted, and arsenic was found interwoven in the tissues of the brain; consequently new traits of character were given to the man; camomile would also affect the moral symptoms, causing stupidity, taciturnity, apathy, hypochondria, and a mischievous disposition in children. The lecturer cited the case of a lady hypochondriac, whose manner was changed from a congenial to a sensitive humor; she knew her weakness, but could not control her unhappy infirmity; she had no power over her will. This lady was in the habit of taking a wine glass full of a decoction of camomile daily, but was restored to health by abandoning the practice. Orsini and Pierri's execution was spoken of; Orsini appeared to die with fortitude, in the possession of all his faculties; Pierri was volatile, his tongue never being still a minute. He would sooner say the first died heroically and that the second was gabbling and weak, but the truth was that coffee being offered them previous to their expiation, Orsini declined and Pierri drank freely. Hahneman's opinion of the effect of coffee drinking was that it excited the mental and physical powers and excessive loquacity was a consequence.

HON. THOMAS H. BENTON, in a speech in New York, turned to the ladies, and referring to his mother, said:—

"My mother asked me never to use tobacco, and I have never touched it from that time to the present day. She asked me not to game, and I have never gamed; and I cannot tell this day who is winning and who is losing in games that can be played. She admonished me, too, against hard drink; and whatever capacity for endurance I may have at present, and whatever usefulness I may attain in life, I attribute to having complied with her pious and earnest wishes. When seven years of age, she asked me not to drink, and I made then a resolution of total abstinence. I formed an abstinence society at a time when I was the sole constituent member of my own body, and that I have adhered to it through all time, I owe to my mother."

Foreign News.

THE DUKE OF HAMILTON KISSING THE POPE'S TOE.

The Glasgow Free Press (Roman Catholic Organ) contains a letter from "Our Roman Correspondent," denouncing the rude conduct of some ill-bred visiters in the holy city. The letter, however, concludes with the following statement, which we give as we find it: "It is relieving to know that at least every one that comes here from England is not disorderly, overbearing, or arrogant. We have very often some of the best specimens of refinement and morality coming from England to this place, and it gives me the greatest pleasure that could be afforded to me in this way to be able to point to a bright example of this kind from your own door.—His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, on his arrival here lately, went to kiss the Pope's foot. The holy father, rising from his seat found a gift of twelve thousand scudi lying at his feet. His Grace attended at all the holy offices performed at St. Peter's and the Sistine church during holy week, and at the solemn mass and benediction of the blessed sacrament of the mass on Easter Sunday. I saw him afterwards, mounted, along with General Goyon, at the head of the Roman army. He wore a red coat and Tartan trowsers."

THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH CABLE.

A recent number of the London Times, in a long notice of this undertaking says, that the apparatus for paying out the cable may be regarded as perfect. About the middle of next month the Agamemnon and Niagara will swim away into deep water and try every known test which can be attempted to prove the efficiency of the paying-out machinery. The machinery thus obtained will be applied to improving any little defects which may exist in the apparatus before the final starting of the expedition in June next.

THE CONDITION OF AFFAIRS AT CALCUTTA.

The following is an extract from a letter recently received by Mr. H. A. Loomis of this city, from a relative in Calcutta, dated Mar. 15, 1858:

* * * "Vessels are anchered off the city, and boats all manned with sailors, cannon and every thing ready to give the insurgents a warm reception if they attack Calcutta. Five hundred more distressed families have arrived here from Lucknow; where they are to be 'stowed' I cannot say. Calcutta is crowded to suffocation. 'Dacoits,' or bands of robbers have come down also, and their operations have already commenced. Many houses have been robbed in Howrah, a village opposite Calcutta, and a few days since a gentleman was killed with his family, and his money, plate, jewels, &c., stolen.—These Dacoits send their victims to the spirit world by a method called 'gole hottya.'—They clasp their two hands around the victim's neck and strangle him. Robbery, famine and murder all follow in the train of war. The French now make open threatenings against the English. The Burmese hate them as well as the Russians, and all the hill tribes are against them.

* * * A feeling of uneasiness still exists here as to the Sepoys at Barrackpore.—There are a goodly number of them and it is well known that they are constantly plotting. General Hersey, however, has a good intelligence department, and is never long ignorant of what is on foot. On the nihgt of Tuesday last there was some little excitement in Calcutta in consequence of an order being circulated among the volunteers to hold themselves in readiness to turn out at a moment's notice. This warning was given at ten o'clock, and the impression it created was that immediate danger was apprehended by the authorities. Information which was considered worthy of belief was received at Barrackpore, of the purport that those Sepoys which were on that day to march to Calcutta to relieve the Guards there, were to receive arms on the road through a native of rank, after which they and their brethren in Calcutta, whom they were supposed to relieve, were conjointly to try what they could do in the way of mischief. Early that evening the Nawab of Rampore, who had just returned from England, was arrested at Calcutta, and with several of his suite, placed in the common jail."

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

NEW YORK, June 1.

Steamship Hammonia has arrived at her dock.

Later news from India has been received. Azingier has been relieved.

The rebels have been defeated near Futtyghur and many killed.

At Bheels the rebels were also defeated, 500 taken prisoners, with a loss to the British of 70.

There has been a battle between the Turks and Montenegrins at Grahovo. The Turks were totally defeated, their commander killed, with the loss of Cannon, baggage, &c., and then fled to Klobach where they remained in a state of seige.

Telegraphic dispatches from Bombay, received at Malta, state that Azinghur was relieved April 15, by Gen. Lugare, with but trifling loss.

Brigadier Seaton defeated the rebels near Futtyghur, killing and wounding three hundred, and capturing their guns and ammunition.

A body of rebels in the Maltapoora Mountains had also been defeated.

A large body of Bheels had also been defeated in the Sautpore Hills, and five hundred captured. The British loss was severe, including five officers.

Gen. Ros had delayed his advance upon Calpee in consequence of the advance of the rebels upon Jhansi.

A Vienna dispatch states the Montenegrins had attacked the Turks near Grahovo, and nearly annihilated their whole force, killing their commander, Kiamil Pasha, and capturing all their guns. The Montenegrins lost two hundred killed and wounded. The Turks numbered [illegible] thousand strong, and the Montenegrins five thousand.

The London Times says rumors are prevalent in political circles concerning the intentions of France toward Belgium.

WASHINGTON, June 1.

Lord Napier has desired his dispatches to Admiral Stewart, sent from Washington yesterday, to be forwarded from Halifax by special steamer to Bermuda. He has advised the Admiral to order the discontinuance of the visitation of American vessels, pending the instructions of Her Majesty's government.

Domestic Summary.

REVOLUTION IN NEW ORLEANS.

Alarmed at the great increase of vice and crime in their midst, a large number of the best, the most honorable, and justice-loving citizens of New Orleans, forming themselves into a Vigilance Committee, took possession of the Arsenal in Jackson Square, on the evening of the 2d inst.

The committee is composed equally of the Democratic and American parties. They have issued an uninflamable, yet resolute proclamation, in which they state their determination to no longer submit tamely to the indignities and crimes perpetrated by lawless ruffians, but, taking the law into their own hands, are resolved to give every offender the punishment due his crime.

The Mayor and Council proceeded to the head-quarters of the Vigilance Committee and read the riot act, but the committee paid no attention to it. A battle between the Vigilance Committee and the City Government seems likely. A slight skirmish occurred between some of the committee and the opposition on Friday night, but no one was killed. The committee have made several arrests, and some individuals obnoxious to them have had orders to leave the city.

The proclamation of the Vigilance Committee concludes thus: "The ruffians who have dyed our streets with the gore of unoffending citizens, and spread terror among the peaceable, orderly, and well-disposed, must leave or perish. So the people have determined."

LATER.—Since the above was in type, we have received later news. Four of the Vigilance party had been killed by the accidental discharge of a cannon. The Mayor is not fully committed to either party as yet, but vascilates. At the election on Monday, Gerard Stith, the candidate of the American party, is said to have been elected.

THE DIFFICULTIES IN KANSAS.—St. Louis, May 31.—Thirty boxes of muskets have been shipped from Jefferson City to the border country, in charge of the Quartermaster, Gen. Hackney, and Inspector Gen. Blakey, with the inferred design of repelling the invasion of Missouri by marauding bands from Kansas. It is probable that the militia in some of the western counties may be called out.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—New York, June 1.—The recent action of the School Trustees in some of our wards, in banishing the Bible from the schools is creating much excitement. The United Americans have taken the matter up, and a meeting was held last night of delegates from all the chapels to determine on measures for opposing this alleged attempt of Roman Catholics to get control of our public schools. It is understood that a general committee of the Protestant American Associations is organized for the same purpose.

NOTICE.—The brethren and sisters in Carmel, Me., have established a regular conference at Robinson school-house, near Bro. Geo. L. Robinson's, the third Saturday in each month, and will, if they can, have preaching. Give them a call.

In behalf of the church.

N. F. NASON.

The Maine Conference of Adventists.

This conference is to be holden in Richmond, Reed Meeting-house, to commence on Thursday, 10 o'clock, A. M., June 17th, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that those who are specially interested in the great truths which have called us out as a distinct class, sufficiently see and feel that the cause they have espoused, and which has already benefited so many, demands their continued and more united efforts to sustain and increase the interest upon the all-important theme of the day of the Lord, the judgment, and the kingdom of God at hand. Never, since we became a people, has there been a time when we could labor so understandingly and effectually as now. Let us try to unite all our strength given by the Lord, and encourage all who are inclined to the truth. Come, brethren, all who can consistently, and let us see each other again in the flesh; talk, pray, sing, and consult how we may best act to save our fellow men and ourselves by the instrumentalities God has put in our hands. The meeting is 2 miles from the Rail Road station and from steamboat wharf. Those coming from the North can arrive at 12 M. Those from the South and West at 3 P. M. Brethren in the vicinity, though few, will do all they can to provide for them, and will furnish pasturing for the horses. As this meeting is intended for the benefit of the cause generally, in all parts of the State, churches and lay brethren should furnish means to defray the expenses of the ministers, or come prepared to contribute at the meeting; as those in the place will do all their duty in taking care of those who come, and they will be glad to see all who can come. Call for Eld. I. C. Wellcome, at the village, or David Robinson, Low Curtis, or John Umberhind in the vicinity.

We take the liberty to sign the names to this call of several of our ministers whom we know to be anxious for the meeting, as time has not permitted us to notify them of its arrangement. Will all other ministers interested, send their names to the offices to be added?

CONTENTMENT.—Content is the tranquility of the heart; prayer is its aliment. It is satisfied under every dispensation of Providence, and takes thankfully its allotted portion; never inquiring whether a little more would not be a little better; knowing that if God had so judged, it would have been as easy for him to have given the more as the less. That is not content which does not enjoy, as the gift of Infinite Wisdom, what it has; nor is that true patience which does not suffer meekly the loss of what it had, because it is not His will that it should have it longer.—Hannah More.

A DEFINITION OF BAPTISM.—The Tennessee Baptist has put forth a definition of "Baptism," which goes somewhat further back than the definitions usually given and received by the Baptist churches. It says:

"Genuine baptism is not immersion by an unauthorized minister, nor is it immersion by a Presbyterian or a Methodist preacher, even though he may have been immersed; nor is it immersion by a Baptist preacher. Christian Baptism is immersion by a Baptist preacher who himself has been regularly immersed by a regularly immersed Baptist minister."

THE REVIVAL.

God is moving—God is working
By his Spirit's mighty power,
In the broad bright dreams of daylight,
And at midnight's silent hour;
Moving on the heart of manhood,
Breathing soft in childhood's ear,
And the cheek of age bedewing
With the penitential tear.

God is moving! List at morning
To the earnest cry of prayer
Going forth from hundreds, thousands—
Vocal seems the very air;
Praises are borne up to heaven
Hourly from the gather'd throng,
While the sinner's cry for mercy
Mingles with the convert's song.

God is working by his Spirit
Out upon the mighty sea;
'Mid the vessel's masts and rigging
Many a sailor bends the knee;
And in lieu of angry cursing
Borne upon the mighty air,
With the sea-bird's song ascendeth
Now the seaman's fervent prayer.

Men engaged in active conflict,
Busy in commercial strife,
Turn to this most solemn question—
How to gain eternal life?
E'en the gay and thoughtless listen
To the words of truth divine,
While in this blest work all christians
Whatsoe'er their name combine.

God is moving! God is calling!
Listen to that voice of love;
It may be the last great message
Sent in mercy from above—
Sinner turn, the Lord is gracious,
With the heart his word believe;
See! the Savior stands before thee,
Look O! dying one, and live.

The Winds of Spring.

"Flora, how pleasantly the wind sings in the warm spring days, when it has to sing almost alone. It does not sound lonely, but it seems just as if the sparrows, and blue birds, and robins, came flying to the bare fields on purpose to keep the cheerful breezes company. Every morning there is a new song among our elm trees. And, Flora, it seems, too, as if the wind coaxed the blossoms out of their hard, scaly buds on the trees. After the boughs have been dancing in the sunshine, with the wind playing and whispering around them, their blossoms are a great deal thicker and fresher than before. Hark! how the pine trees rock! and there is a sound in them like the sea! Don't you love to listen to the wind, cousin Flora?"

"Who can help it, Bell? The wind of spring is like a sweet, loving spirit. We cannot see it, but we love it for what it does."

"I think, sometimes, that I can hear what the wind says, when it runs along through the dry fields, and over the brown hill-sides. It creeps in where the violets and anemones are hidden beneath dry bunches of weeds, and says, 'Come out, Violet! come out, Anemone! The place for flowers is up here in the air and sunshine. Don't stay shut up under ground, when you are wanted to make the world bright and beautiful.' And when the flowers hear that soft voice through the loose earth, they know that their prison-doors are open, and that Jack Frost, their jailor, will not dare come back to shut them up again. I think this happy wind does not feel quite at home, till it has hundreds of birds to run flying races with, and hundreds of blossoms to sing to, making them open their sleepy eyes into the sunshine. Flora, what is that verse you used to say to me about the flowers keeping house under ground in the winter?"

"You mean the verse of good old George Herbert, I think. He is speaking about himself."

"Who would have thought my shrivelled heart
Could have recovered greenness? It was gone
Quite under ground, as flowers depart
To see their mother-root, when they have blown,
Where they together
All that hard weather
Dead to the world, keep house alone."

"Well, Flora, the wind will not let the flowers keep house quietly now,—although without the dew and the rain, they would never get up to see the light, would they?"

"No; but the light itself is what they most need. The warm sun of spring must send its rays down to their weak roots, to make them strong. Do you not see, Bell, that the sun, the rain, and the breezes work among the little plants, to free them from their earth-prison, just as God works among human hearts, to set them free from all that is dark and earthly, and to make them bud and blossom in holiness? God is Light; and every good thought is warmed into being by Him. His love falls like dew or rain upon our souls; and it is by His Spirit, breathing through us, that the germs of truth and goodness are awakened and kept alive."

"Why, that is like what the Bible says, Flora. 'The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, nor whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit.' The flowers cannot blossom, nor keep themselves fresh and alive by their own power. Is that what good people mean, when they say that every good thing in them is not of themselves, but of God?"

"Yes, little Bell, the Spirit of God alone can waken our hearts from the death-sleep of sin; and we must have His life within us, or we are not truly alive. Never, till this Spirit breathes upon us, can that life be revealed. But when that heavenly breath passes over the world, what seemed only dry roots, become green and lovely plants in the garden of God."

"Now the wind sounds sweeter than ever to me, cousin Flora, for making me think of these things."

"And there is something else that the wind of spring is like;—the voice of God, which shall at last awaken the dead. The Apostle Paul says that the bodies of saints are sown like seed in the ground; and when His voice shall pass like this soft wind among the graves, the dead shall come forth, the holy dead, with bodies as much surpassing in beauty their earthly ones, as the full-blown flower surpasses the insignificant seed. And then, in Paradise, where these spiritual forms blossom in God's smile, there will fall no blight, there will be no more death."

"Oh, Flora, the wind teaches as well as sings! I shall never hear it now, without remembering the beautiful lessons it bids me learn. Certainly, the wind is one of the voices of God."—Congregationalist.

Health Department.

The Stomach and the Brain.

Dr. Bayard, of New York, recently delivered a lecture upon medical treatment, from which we take the following paragraph, showing the condition of mind as resulting from what is taken into the stomach:—

Every drug had its peculiar power, and some drugs had the power of disturbing the physical, mental, and even moral dispositions of man. Mercury, for example, would cause ill humor, distrustfulness, suspicion, distraction and disgust of life. What a sad reflection to the parent who had allowed such tampering with the constitution and the leaving of such baneful impressions upon the sensorium of his child, whom he found fretful and unable to control the mental manifestation! The child was whipped when its will was shackled, and oftentimes grave consequences followed. The normal condition of the mind was perverted by repeated large doses of drugs. Dr. Bayard instanced in illustration the case of a murderer in Glasgow, whose body was examined after death, and it was discovered that the febrile organs were afflicted, and arsenic was found interwoven in the tissues of the brain; consequently new traits of character were given to the man; camomile would also affect the moral symptoms, causing stupidity, taciturnity, apathy, hypochondria, and a mischievous disposition in children. The lecturer cited the case of a lady hypochondriac, whose manner was changed from a congenial to a sensitive humor; she knew her weakness, but could not control her unhappy infirmity; she had no power over her will. This lady was in the habit of taking a wine glass full of a decoction of camomile daily, but was restored to health by abandoning the practice. Orsini and Pierri's execution was spoken of; Orsini appeared to die with fortitude, in the possession of all his faculties; Pierri was volatile, his tongue never being still a minute. He would sooner say the first died heroically and that the second was gabbling and weak, but the truth was that coffee being offered them previous to their expiation, Orsini declined and Pierri drank freely. Hahneman's opinion of the effect of coffee drinking was that it excited the mental and physical powers and excessive loquacity was a consequence.

HON. THOMAS H. BENTON, in a speech in New York, turned to the ladies, and referring to his mother, said:—

"My mother asked me never to use tobacco, and I have never touched it from that time to the present day. She asked me not to game, and I have never gamed; and I cannot tell this day who is winning and who is losing in games that can be played. She admonished me, too, against hard drink; and whatever capacity for endurance I may have at present, and whatever usefulness I may attain in life, I attribute to having complied with her pious and earnest wishes. When seven years of age, she asked me not to drink, and I made then a resolution of total abstinence. I formed an abstinence society at a time when I was the sole constituent member of my own body, and that I have adhered to it through all time, I owe to my mother."

Foreign News.

THE DUKE OF HAMILTON KISSING THE POPE'S TOE.

The Glasgow Free Press (Roman Catholic Organ) contains a letter from "Our Roman Correspondent," denouncing the rude conduct of some ill-bred visitors in the holy city. The letter, however, concludes with the following statement, which we give as we find it: "It is relieving to know that at least every one that comes here from England is not disorderly, overbearing, or arrogant. We have very often some of the best specimens of refinement and morality coming from England to this place; and it gives me the greatest pleasure that could be afforded to me in this way to be able to point to a bright example of this kind from your own door.—His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, on his arrival here lately, went to kiss the Pope's foot. The holy father, rising from his seat found a gift of twelve thousand scudi lying at his feet. His Grace attended at all the holy offices performed at St. Peter's and the Sistine church during holy week, and at the solemn mass and benediction of the blessed sacrament of the mass on Easter Sunday. I saw him afterwards, mounted, along with General Goyon, at the head of the Roman army. He wore a red coat and Tartan trowsers."

THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH CABLE.

A recent number of the London Times, in a long notice of this undertaking says, that the apparatus for paying out the cable may be regarded as perfect. About the middle of next month the Agamemnon and Niagara will swim away into deep water and try every known test which can be attempted to prove the efficiency of the paying-out machinery. The machinery thus obtained will be applied to improving any little defects which may exist in the apparatus before the final starting of the expedition in June next.

THE CONDITION OF AFFAIRS AT CALCUTTA.

The following is an extract from a letter recently received by Mr. H. A. Loomis of this city, from a relative in Calcutta, dated Mar. 15, 1858:

* * * "Vessels are anchored off the city, and boats all manned with sailors, cannon and every thing ready to give the insurgents a warm reception if they attack Calcutta. Five hundred more distressed families have arrived here from Lucknow; where they are to be 'stowed' I cannot say. Calcutta is crowded to suffocation. 'Dacoits,' or bands of robbers have come down also, and their operations have already commenced. Many houses have been robbed in Howrah, a village opposite Calcutta, and a few days since a gentleman was killed with his family, and his money, plate, jewels, &c., stolen.—These Dacoits send their victims to the spirit world by a method called 'gole hottya.'—They clasp their two hands around the victim's neck and strangle him. Robbery, famine and murder all follow in the train of war. The French now make open threatenings against the English. The Burmese hate them as well as the Russians, and all the hill tribes are against them.

* * * A feeling of uneasiness still exists here as to the Sepoys at Barrackpore.—There are a goodly number of them and it is well known that they are constantly plotting. General Hersey, however, has a good intelligence department, and is never long ignorant of what is on foot. On the nihgt of Tuesday last there was some little excitement in Calcutta in consequence of an order being circulated among the volunteers to hold themselves in readiness to turn out at a moment's notice. This warning was given at ten o' clock, and the impression it created was that immediate danger was apprehended by the authorities. Information which was considered worthy of belief was received at Barrackpore, of the purport that those Sepoys which were on that day to march to Calcutta to relieve the Guards there, were to receive arms on the road through a native of rank, after which they and their brethren in Calcutta, whom they were supposed to relieve, were conjointly to try what they could do in the way of mischief. Early that evening the Nawab of Rampore, who had just returned from England, was arrested at Calcutta, and with several of his suite, placed in the common jail."

THREE DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

NEW YORK, June 1.

Steamship Hammonia has arrived at her dock.

Later news from India has been received. Azingier has been relieved.

The rebels have been defeated near Futtyghur and many killed.

At Bheels the rebels were also defeated, 500 taken prisoners, with a loss to the British of 70.

There has been a battle between the Turks and Montenegrins at Grahovo. The Turks were totally defeated, their commander killed, with the loss of Cannon, baggage, &c., and then fled to Klobach where they remained in a state of seige.

Telegraphic dispatches from Bombay, received at Malta, state that Azinghur was relieved April 15, by Gen. Lugare, with but trifling loss.

Brigadier Seaton defeated the rebels near Futtyghur, killing and wounding three hundred, and capturing their guns and ammunition.

A body of rebels in the Maltapoora Mountains had also been defeated.

A large body of Bheels had also been defeated in the Santpora Hills, and five hundred captured. The British loss was severe, including five officers.

Gen. Ros had delayed his advance upon Calpee in consequence of the advance of the rebels upon Jhansi.

A Vienna dispatch states the Montenegrins had attacked the Turks near Grahovo, and nearly annihilated their whole force, killing their commander, Kiamil Pasha, and capturing all their guns. The Montenegrins lost two hundred killed and wounded. The Turks numbered seven thousand strong, and the Montenegrins five thousand.

The London Times says rumors are prevalent in political circles concerning the intentions of France toward Belgium.

WASHINGTON, June 1.

Lord Napier has desired his dispatches to Admiral Stewart, sent from Washington yesterday, to be forwarded from Halifax by special steamer to Bermudo. He has advised the Admiral to order the discontinuance of the visitation of American vessels, pending the instructions of Her Majesty's government.

Domestic Summary.

REVOLUTION IN NEW ORLEANS.

Alarmed at the great increase of vice and crime in their midst, a large number of the best, the most honorable, and justice-loving citizens of New Orleans, forming themselves into a Vigilance Committee, took possession of the Arsenal in Jackson Square, on the evening of the 2d inst.

The committee is composed equally of the Democratic and American parties. They have issued an uninflamable, yet resolute proclamation, in which they state their determination to no longer submit tamely to the indignities and crimes perpetrated by lawless ruffians, but, taking the law into their own hands, are resolved to give every offender the punishment due his crime.

The Mayor and Council proceeded to the head-quarters of the Vigilance Committee and read the riot act, but the committee paid no attention to it. A battle between the Vigilance Committee and the City Government seems likely. A slight skirmish occurred between some of the committee and the opposition on Friday night, but no one was killed. The committee have made several arrests, and some individuals obnoxious to them have had orders to leave the city.

The proclamation of the Vigilance Committee concludes thus: "The ruffians who have dyed our streets with the gore of unoffending citizens, and spread terror among the peaceable, orderly, and well-disposed, must leave or perish. So the people have determined."

LATER.—Since the above was in type, we have received later news. Four of the Vigilance party had been killed by the accidental discharge of a cannon. The Mayor is not fully committed to either party as yet, but vascilates. At the election on Monday, Gerard Stith, the candidate of the American party, is said to have been elected.

THE DIFFICULTIES IN KANSAS.—St. Louis, May 31.—Thirty boxes of muskets have been shipped from Jefferson City to the border country, in charge of the Quartermaster, Gen. Hackney, and Inspector Gen. Blakey, with the inferred design of repelling the invasion of Missouri by marauding bands from Kansas. It is probable that the militia in some of the western counties may be called out.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—New York, June 1.—The recent action of the School Trustees in some of our wards, in banishing the Bible from the schools is creating much excitement. The United Americans have taken the matter up, and a meeting was held last night of delegates from all the chapels to determine on measures for opposing this alleged attempt of Roman Catholics to get control of our public schools. It is understood that a general committee of the Protestant American Associations is organized for the same purpose.

In behalf of the church.

N. F. NASON.

The Maine Conference of Adventists.

This conference is to be holden in Richmond, Reed Meeting-house, to commence on Thursday, 10 o'clock, A. M., June 17th, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that those who are specially interested in the great truths which have called us out as a distinct class, sufficiently see and feel that the cause they have espoused, and which has already benefited so many, demands their continued and more united efforts to sustain and increase the interest upon the all-important theme of the day of the Lord, the judgment, and the kingdom of God at hand. Never, since we became a people, has there been a time when we could labor so understandingly and effectually as now. Let us try to unite all our strength given by the Lord, and encourage all who are inclined to the truth. Come, brethren, all who can consistently, and let us see each other again in the flesh; talk, pray, sing, and consult how we may best act to save our fellow men and ourselves by the instrumentalities God has put in our hands. The meeting is 2 miles from the Rail Road station and from steamboat wharf. Those coming from the North can arrive at 12 M. Those from the South and West at 3 P. M. Brethren in the vicinity, though few, will do all they can to provide for them, and will furnish pasturing for the horses. As this meeting is intended for the benefit of the cause generally, in all parts of the State, churches and lay brethren should furnish means to defray the expenses of the ministers, or come prepared to contribute at the meeting; as those in the place will do all their duty in taking care of those who come, and they will be glad to see all who can come. Call for Eld. I. C. Wellcome, at the village, or David Robinson, Low Curtis, or John Umberhind in the vicinity.

We take the liberty to sign the names to this call of several of our ministers whom we know to be anxious for the meeting, as time has not permitted us to notify them of its arrangement. Will all other ministers interested, send their names to the offices to be added?

PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

Another year is numbered with the past,
With all its disappointments, hopes and fears,
And in eternity's deep ocean vast,
Immeasurable, lo! it disappears.
To some it gladness brought—to others tears,—
To some it rang a merry marriage bell,—
To others death and shrouds and gloomy biers
In ghastly march, to which the passing bell
And funeral dirge the while kept time surpassing well.

The sage philosophers, with anxious brow,
Which tells of study ardent, long and deep,
As they dive into Nature, seeking how
She moves and is, and climb the slippery steep
To proud pre-eminence, whilst still they keep
The longing eye upon some distant star,
As if they grudged the necessary sleep,
Lest other hand should pluck from their tiar
The spangle called renown, so sought for from afar!

Warrior and statesman, merchant, prince and king,
With all their glory, craft and sovereignty,
Which in their train so much [illegible] bring,
In one short year have been by death set free,
If the dark numbness of the grave might be Called liberation—where, in gloom profound,
Unconscious they await the time when He
Shall bid th' archangel his dread tocsin sound,
Which shall awake from sleep the myriads under ground!

Then shall the meek, who long have borne the cross,
Unshrinking at and unabashed by scorn,
And counted worldly gain as worthless dross,
Shall wake to gladness on that glorious morn
With all who from the Gospel womb are born,
To greet their Lord triumphant from the skies,
So long expected by the few who mourn
At his long tarrying—but now their eyes
Behold the glorious Sun of Righteousness arise.

May we, who by the mercy of our God
Have been preserved to see another year,
Be not ashamed to spread the truth abroad,
Undaunted by that kind of slavish fear
Which makes us dread the scorner's laugh and sneer;
But boldly spread Emmanuel's banner free,
That all may see and from our lips may hear
The tidings of Redemption, and that we
May gather many souls to serve and worship Thee.

No. VI.

To UNCLE FRED;—Allow me, dear uncle, to present to you another class of evidences, which go to establish my position, in regard to the kingdom of God. I have already cited to you Scriptures that show plainly the locality of this kingdom; viz., "under the whole heaven;" but I wish to introduce to you further evidence touching the future and eternal abode of the saints, for it is generally believed, (and I think that you entertain the same view,) that the saints go to heaven at death—then, at the resurrection, they may return and assume their natural bodies, and ascend again to heaven, there to remain forever.

That man had the dominion over the earth, and all that God created therein, before his fall, I suppose you do not for a moment question. "Thou madest him to have dominion over the work of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea," says the Psalmist.

Paul, when commenting on this declaration, after quoting it to show that man once had universal dominion, adds; "But now we see not yet all things put under him." Man, by transgression, had forfeited his title to the kingdom. Satan had usurped the dominion, and Christ had come to save that which was lost, and restore it back again to man. To this the apostle seems to have reference when he says, "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak." He then refers to man's former exalted condition and dominion—remarks that he hath it not now, and then points us to Jesus, tasting death in order to bring many sons unto glory, and destroy him, who from the fall of man, had "had the power of death, that is, the devil."

When this work is fully accomplished, man will be reinstated in his former exalted and kingly position; hence, we hear the King, when seated upon the throne of his glory, [illegible] every man according to his works, saying to those upon his right hand, Come, ye blessed, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of [illegible] [illegible] of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion, the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." What the first dominion was, we have clearly shown from the Scriptures. If it be the first dominion, then its locality must be the same—the earth.

Another evidence of this fact is derived from the promise made to David and sanctioned by the prophets, and by the angel to Mary—viz. in regard to Christ's preparing the throne of David and reigning thereon forever. In 2 Sam. 7: 16, we find a promise that David's throne shall be established forever. In Ps. 69: 20–44, we find promises made to David which can be fulfilled in none other than Christ. The subjugation of his enemies; his exalted state; the immortality of his seed, and eternity of his throne, with its present abasement, are all brought to view.

The prophet Isaiah, speaking of Christ and the titles that shall be given him, says, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom. Many talk about Christ's kingdom as being now increasing; but I would ask, Does Christ now sit on David's throne? Is his seat of government at Mount Zion?

In Jer. 33: 17, we find a promise that David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of Israel. This cannot refer to the present world, for that throne has been vacated ever since Zedekiah, the last prince of Israel sat upon it. God then said, remove the diadem and take off the crown; this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. 21: 26, 27.

Who was that? Hear the words of the angel to Mary respecting him to whom she should give birth. "He shall be great, and he shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Is not this the rightful heir? Is not he of whom Isaiah said, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom?"

Do you not see a perfect harmony between the prophets and the declaration of the angel?

Now, Uncle Fred, the question turns just on this point—were those predictions accomplished at the first advent of Jesus Christ?

Was he received by the Jewish nation, and welcomed to David's throne as the rightful heir? Or did they say, "Behold this is the heir, come let us kill him and the inheritance shall be ours?" If Jesus sat on the throne of David, and reigned over the house of Israel then—he reigns there to-day, for he was to reign there forever. But you will not for a moment admit that this was literally accomplished, and probably as do many others, suppose that it refers to a spiritual reign.

If this be so, Christ then spiritually sat on David's spiritual throne, (query, where was it?) and spiritually reigned over the spiritual house of spiritual Jacob! I must confess that this is too much spiritualism for me!

I cannot think that Peter understood it to be thus spiritual, when he said that God spake with an oath unto David, that of the fruit of his body, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne. Acts 2: 29.

If the throne of David was a literal throne, if literal men sat upon it and received literal authority over literal subjects, so will all the nature of Christ's kingdom be. And that he is to sway the princely sceptre of the house of David, from the same seat of royalty, even Mount Zion, is so plainly and positively affirmed, that none but those who spiritualize the word of God can evade it.

Yours in love,

KATE.

"Lord, Remember Me."

What a prayer! and at what a time! when the Son of God hung between the heaven and the earth, expiring on the cross; when in sharp and excruciating pains from the nails in his hands and feet, his lacerated back yet smarting with the scourging which he had recently borne from the hands of his enemies; with the [illegible] him saying, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom!" Why did he ask it then? It was his last, his only chance! Amid the darkness of that hour; amid the sound of the quaking earth; amid the rending of the rocks and the opening of the graves; amid all the scenes of that day, enough to make the stoutest heart faint, went forth that prayer, "Lord, remember me!" And the answer,—how glorious, how merciful, how precious to the supplicant! There was one, who had transgressed the laws of his country, made whole, washed in the gushing blood of the Son of God. The first to receive the blood of the atonement was a thief, a transgresser doomed to die.

Now, dear reader, what think you? If one so vile could receive pardon from him, do you not think he can pardon now? Yes. If he could hear then, he can now; his arm is not shortened that he cannot save; it is long enough to reach you amid all the moral darkness that has covered the land, and amid the convulsions of earth he can hear that cry, "Lord, remember me," when it is put forth in earnestness as it was then. Will you not make one effort to save yourself by the atoning blood of Jesus? He will hear. Do try, dear friends; try yourself, and earnestly, for time is short. God help you to try, and then I hope you will know what it is to be remembered with favor, so that you may escape the wrath to come.

"I own I'm guilty, own I'm vile,
Yet thy salvation's free;
Then in thy all-abounding grace,
Dear Lord, remember me!"

"WHOM THE LORD LOVETH HE CHASTENETH."

How often hath my wayward heart,
Wearied with this world's wrong and strife,
Prayed for some balm to heal its smart,
Some strength to nerve its feeble life,
That it, unshrinking, still might bear
Its weighty load of pain and care,
And yet repeat the "Savior's prayer."

How often hath it, weak and worn,
In thankless mood, said, God forgets
The many burdens I have borne,
And round my thorny pathway sets
No lovesome light, no gladsome ray
To lead me, so I may not stray
From the straight path and "narrow way."

Ah! I forget that truth to heed,
Gethsemane's sad wail hath taught!
Not as our work, shall be our meed,
Not earth shall praise for what we've wrought;
Forget the chastening rod is given
By Him, who fondest hopes hath riven,
To bring us earlier home to Heaven.

My Religious Belief.

Belief, says Webster, is credit given to evidence, full persuasion of mind; or to have faith in given testimony. My religious belief is that God's holy word is all true, or truth. Do you wish to know why I believe thus? I will tell you; Jesus says it is truth. "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." Another says that holy men wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." So that it is the same as though God spake every word of it himself. I believe that the heavens and the earth which are now, by the word of God, are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgement;—I believe that the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat;—I believe the Lord will create new heavens and a new earth wherein the righteous will dwell forever;—I believe also that the kingdom and dominion under (not above) the whole heaven, shall (future tense) be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, &c.

II. I believe that there are but two advents of the Savior to this earth; that both are personal and visible; that the first took place in the days of Herod; that the Savior was vailed in humanity, went about doing good, suffered on the cross, died, was buried, arose again the third day, and finally ascended into heaven; where he must remain until the times of restitution of all things, spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets;—I believe that the second coming of Christ will take place when he shall descend from heaven at the sounding of the last trump, to give his people rest; and that he will then judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom.

III. I believe that the second coming of Christ [illegible]

[illegible]

2. By the fulfillment of prophecy; and

3. By the signs of the times.

Hence, the Master of the house will soon rise up and shut to the door of mercy!—Much scripture proof might be given here.

IV. I believe the condition of salvation is repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; and that those who have true repentance and faith, will, and do, live soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ.

V. I believe that there will be a resurrection of all the dead, both saints and sinners; that those who are Christ's will be raised at his coming; and that the rest of the dead will not live again until after a thousand years; and that the saints shall not all sleep, but those that are alive, and remain shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the sounding of the last trump.

VI. I believe that the only Millenium taught in the Bible, is the thousand years which are to intervene between the first resurrection and that of the rest of the dead, as taught in the 20th chap. of Revelations. And I believe that the many passages of Scripture which refer to the Millenial state, are to have their fulfillment after the resurrection of all the saints who sleep in Jesus.

VII. I believe that the promise that Abraham should be heir of the world was not to him or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith; that there is no difference under the gospel dispensation between Jews and Gentiles; that God will render to every man according to his deeds; that if we are Christ's, then are we Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise.

VIII. I do believe that there is no promise of this world's conversion; or of a temporal millenium. The wheat and tares must grow together until the harvest.—Hence, the children of the kingdom, and the children of the wicked one, will continue together until the end of the gospel age, when all things that offend, and them which do iniquity shall be gathered out of the kingdom, and the righteous nation, which shall then inhabit the earth in its restituted capacity, shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Then the Man of sin will be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. Glorious era! Oh blessed abode!

IX. I believe it is the duty of the ministers of the word, and also the lay members of the church of Christ, to continue faithful in the duty of serving God and doing good in the world, until Christ's second advent into the world. Occupy till I come, says Christ. Then, oh what a time of rejoicing with the dear saints!

X. I do sincerely believe that the departed saints do not enter upon their inheritance or receive their crown till death. That their inheritance, which will be incorruptible and undefiled, and that will never fade, is reserved in heaven, ready to be revealed in the last time. That there is laid up a crown for all the truly faithful, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give you at the day of his second appearing. Then they will be satisfied when they awake in Christ's likeness. Then I believe the saint's of God will be equal to the angels, being the children of God and of the resurrection.

It is said by a eminent divine, that "the earliest creeds, and all creeds of all denominations in Christendom, from the apostles to this day, recognize no other millenium than that glorious one on the renovated earth at the coming again of Christ and the resurrection of the dead." "It must be confessed by intelligent divines, that the popular doctrine of the millenium is a modern one totally unknown to the primitive and martyr church." "Consider further," says the same writer, "that neither St. Peter nor St. Paul, nor St. Justin, nor St. Cyprian, nor St. Cyrel, nor Jerome, nor any other saint, or father, or eminent man in the primitive church, received or admitted the doctrine of the temporal or spiritual millenium for one moment; except it was in the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ with the resurrection of the dead.

And now let us inquire for the good old paths to heavenly bliss our fathers trod; and to the true millenium through Jesus and the Resurrection. May the Lord by his Holy Spirit guide us into all truth.—[illegible]

Something "New under the Sun."

Editors are prayed for! Reader, can you believe it? Was such a thing ever? Strange as it is, marvelous as it is, editors are prayed for publicly. A petition was recently sent into a union prayer meeting soliciting prayer for editors. This is the wonder of the age.

Every other subject, society and institution, has been remembered at a throne of grace, but whoever before heard a public prayer for editors, that God would give them wisdom, truth, love, grace, salvation—keep them from the evil to come? and that now is? Sure there is hope, joyous hope! What is pending? What have editors to do touching the world's salvation, or damnation? Look abroad and see! Look! open your eyes.

What is type set for? for good or for evil, for righteousness or unrighteousness? What the special motive power of our paper mills, steam presses, the foldings and mailings?

Satan has taken mainly the superintendency of this whole machinery for years. Our mail bags are pressed down with evil tidings. The great mass of our book and periodical literature hitherto, has been to poison the community, to curse it, and not to bless it. The world is set on fire, even the fires of hell, through the instrumentality of a corrupt and infidel press. Editors have done their full share in this work of death. Look at our dailies, where is there one in our city that does not advertise and puff theatres? and what is a theatre?

Archbishop Tillotson pronounces the theatre "a nursery of licentiousness and vice, the devil's chapel, a recreation which ought not to be allowed among a civilized, much less a christian people."

And yet the half is not told. And is the theatre all the vile things these dailies publish? Ask yourself, parent, if these are safe mediums of instruction for the rising age? Then turn to the miscellaneous weeklies, monthlies and semi-monthlies, the light popular readings of the day. What are they doing? O what a curse! what a curse!! Come nearer home—take a peep into our religious periodicals, so called—are there no dark spots here? no catering to a corrupt public taste! Was there ever a petition for prayer more important—fraught with consequences so momentous? Suppose all these editors, daily editors, weekly editors, monthly editors, political, religious, miscellaneous, should repent in dust and ashes—put on sackcloth, turn to God with full purpose of heart, "lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset them," and write henceforth for God and only for God? What now? Hallelujahs would ring from pole to pole! All heaven would be in jubilee—"Glory to God in the highest."

"Salvation, O the joyful sound." Pray for editors! cease not, pray on. Pray for editors, publishers, printers, booksellers. Give us everywhere a pure, wholesome, sanctified, Bible literature, and the world is saved.—Golden Rule.

A Lay Revivalist in Scotland.

The Glasgow correspondent of the Presbyterian Herald gives the following account of the history and labors of Mr. Brownlow North, a lay preacher lately converted from a life of profligacy, and now freely admitted into orthodox pulpits of the straitest sect:

"In the early part of the year, our city enjoyed the ministrations of Mr. Brownlow North, a lay gentleman of independent means, who has devoted himself to the preaching of the Gospel. He is an Episcopalian, but addresses all who choose to listen to him wherever he finds an open door. His object is to deliver the simple Gospel message, which he does with overpowering earnestness. He speaks with fluency and even elegance, makes no attempt at exegetical preaching, says that he has but one doctrine to expound and enforce, and disavows the ministerial character and authority. But such is the fervor of his earnestness, that the largest edifice in town was not capable of containing the multitude who flocked to hear him, from the highest to the lowest, nor were two addresses on the Sabbath sufficient to meet the demand upon his ministrations, which were continued throughout the week. Our Presbyterian ministers of the Free Church and United Presbyterian Church, and one of the Established clergy, admitted him to their pulpits; and the ministers of all our churches received from the example of this good man a lesson on the importance of earnest preaching. Many inquiries who had been awakened by the addresses of Mr. North, visited and conversed with him during the week. His visit, there is reason to believe, was productive of much spiritual good.

This gentleman, a few years ago, was a terrible reprobate. He had a shooting lodge in the Highlands, where he indulged in very loose and profligate practices. After his conversion he devoted his labors as a christian man exclusively to those districts where he had formerly rendered himself most notorious and obnoxious by his profligacy. In his expressions of self-reproach, which of course must be taken with considerable limitation, he has repeatedly declared that he had been guilty of all the sins in the Decalogue except murder. Mr. North is no fanatic. He is a calm-minded man, thoroughly imbued with christian principle, and profoundly impressed with a sense of the [illegible] [illegible] his simple and earnest pleading [illegible] very impressive and memorable. No preaching, I dare say, since the days of Whitfield, has produced such a powerful effect upon the popular mind as this remarkable man's addresses; and their power lies not in their logical structure, but in their earnestness.

A friend of mine, who has seen Mr. North in his wild days, on the stage as an amateur player, once dined in his Highland lodge along with a gay party. The wine was circling freely, and a Highland boy, whom Mr. North had engaged as a domestic servant, entered with a fresh supply of liquor, and in setting it before his master, whispered something to him, upon which North instantly withdrew from the table and took a cigar, refusing to indulge longer in his cups. Turning to my informant, he said, 'P——, that boy is a christian; I could trust him with untold gold.' Whether that poor Highland boy's humble influence as a child of God was instrumental in touching the wicked heart of his master, my friend could not tell. But on the occasion referred to, his warning whisper arrested North in his bacchanalian career, and probably he was in the habit of using the same liberty with his master on other festive occasions."

CHEERFULNESS.—Try for a single day, I beseech you, to preserve yourself in an easy and cheerful frame of mind. Be but for one day, instead of a fire-worshiper of passion and hell, the sun-worshiper of clear self-possession; and compare the day in which you have rooted out the weed of dissatisfaction with that on which you have allowed it to grow up—and you will find your heart open to every good motive, your life strengthened, and your breast armed with a panoply against every trick of fate—truly you will wonder at your own improvement.—Richter.

Seek Riches.

Reader, I should like you to be very rich. Perhaps you would like it yourself. But the riches you want are probably not the riches which I mean. I should like you to be rich in grace, rich in faith, and rich in heavenly treasure. Oh, seek these riches.

I am very sorrow for those who have nothing but gold and silver and bank-notes and land, and no grace. They are not truly rich. I feel deeply for those who have no better portion than this world can give them, and no place in that kingdom that cannot be removed. In reality they are very poor. Their treasures only last for a few years. They die and carry nothing with them beyond the grave. They rise again in a world where money is of no use, and all who die without grace will be paupers forever. Oh, they are very poor!

Take advice of a minister of Christ this very day. Seek durable riches, a treasure that cannot be taken from you, a city which hath lasting foundations. Give yourself to the Lord Jesus Christ, and seek that incorruptible crown he is ready to bestow. Take his yoke upon you, and learn of him. Come away from a world which will never really satisfy you, and from sin which will bite like a serpent at last. Come to the Lord Jesus as a lowly sinner, and he will receive you, pardon you, give you his renewing Spirit, fill you with peace. This shall give you more real comfort than the world has ever done. There is a gulf in your heart which nothing but the peace of Christ can fill. Enter in and share our privileges. Come with us and sit down by our side.

Reader, if you want riches, I offer you the riches of Christ—a free, full, immediate supply of wealth. Oh, do not let the offer be made in vain. COME AND BE RICH.—Rev. J. C. Ryle, B. A.

TO UNCLE FRED;—Allow me, dear uncle, to present to you another class of evidences, which go to establish my position, in regard to the kingdom of God. I have already cited to you Scriptures that show plainly the locality of this kingdom; viz., "under the whole heaven;" but I wish to introduce to you further evidence touching the future and eternal abode of the saints, for it is generally believed, (and I think that you entertain the same view,) that the saints go to heaven at death—then, at the resurrection, they may return and assume their natural bodies, and ascend again to heaven, there to remain forever.

That man had the dominion over the earth, and all that God created therein, before his fall, I suppose you do not for a moment question. "Thou madest him to have dominion over the work of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet: all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the sea," says the Psalmist.

Paul, when commenting on this declaration, after quoting it to show that man once had universal dominion, adds; "But now we see not yet all things put under him." Man, by transgression, had forfeited his title to the kingdom. Satan had usurped the dominion, and Christ had come to save that which was lost, and restore it back again to man. To this the apostle seems to have reference when he says, "For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak." He then refers to man's former exalted condition and dominion—remarks that he hath it not now, and then points us to Jesus, tasting death in order to bring many sons unto glory, and destroy him, who from the fall of man, had "had the power of death, that is, the devil."

When this work is fully accomplished, man will be reinstated in his former exalted and kingly position; hence, we hear the King when seated upon the throne of his glory, to reward every man according to his works, saying to those upon his right hand, "Come, ye blessed, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." The very same kingdom [illegible]

[illegible] of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." What the first dominion was, we have clearly shown from the Scriptures. If it be the first dominion, then its locality must be the same—the earth.

Another evidence of this fact is derived from the promise made to David and sanctioned by the prophets, and by the angel to Mary—viz. in regard to Christ's preparing the throne of David and reigning thereon forever. In 2 Sam. 7: 16, we find a promise that David's throne shall be established forever. In Ps. 69: 20–44, we find promises made to David which can be fulfilled in none other than Christ. The subjugation of his enemies; his exalted state; the immortality of his seed, and eternity of his throne, with its present abasement, are all brought to view.

The prophet Isaiah, speaking of Christ and the titles that shall be given him, says, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom. Many talk about Christ's kingdom as being now increasing; but I would ask, Does Christ now sit on David's throne? Is his seat of government at Mount Zion?

In Jer. 33: 17, we find a promise that David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of Israel. This cannot refer to the present world, for that throne has been vacated ever since Zedekiah, the last prince of Israel sat upon it. God then said, remove the diadem and take off the crown; this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. 21: 26, 27.

Who was that? Hear the words of the angel to Mary respecting him to whom she should give birth. "He shall be great, and he shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Is not this the rightful heir? Is not he of whom Isaiah said, "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom?"

Do you not see a perfect harmony between the prophets and the declaration of the angel?

Now, Uncle Fred, the question turns just on this point—were those predictions accomplished at the first advent of Jesus Christ?

Was he received by the Jewish nation, and welcomed to David's throne as the rightful heir? Or did they say, "Behold this is the heir, come let us kill him and the inheritance shall be ours?" If Jesus sat on the throne of David, and reigned over the house of Israel then—he reigns there to-day, for he was to reign there forever. But you will not for a moment admit that this was literally accomplished, and probably as do many others, suppose that it refers to a spiritual reign.

If this be so, Christ then spiritually sat on David's spiritual throne, (query, where was it?) and spiritually reigned over the spiritual house of spiritual Jacob! I must confess that this is too much spiritualism for me!

I cannot think that Peter understood it to be thus spiritual, when he said that God spake with an oath unto David, that of the fruit of his body, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne. Acts 2: 29.

If the throne of David was a literal throne, if literal men sat upon it and received literal authority over literal subjects, so will all the nature of Christ's kingdom be. And that he is to sway the princely sceptre of the house of David, from the same seat of royalty, even from Zion, is as plainly and positively affirmed, that none but those who spiritualize the word of God can [illegible]

"Lord, Remember Me."

What a prayer! and at what a time! when the Son of God hung between the heaven and the earth, expiring on the cross; when in shame and excruciating pains, [illegible] his lacerated back [illegible] scoffing [illegible] from the hands of [illegible] reviling [illegible] him saying, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom!" Why did he ask it then? It was his last, his only chance! Amid the darkness of that hour; amid the sound of the quaking earth; amid the rending of the rocks and the opening of the graves; amid all the scenes of that day, enough to make the stoutest heart faint, went forth that prayer, "Lord, remember me!" And the answer,—how glorious, how merciful, how precious to the supplicant! There was one, who had transgressed the laws of his country, made whole, washed in the gushing blood of the Son of God. The first to receive the blood of the atonement was a thief, a transgresser doomed to die.

Now, dear reader, what think you? If one so vile could receive pardon from him, do you not think he can pardon now? Yes. If he could hear then, he can now; his arm is not shortened that he cannot save; it is long enough to reach you amid all the moral darkness that has covered the land, and amid the convulsions of earth he can hear that cry, "Lord, remember me," when it is put forth in earnestness as it was then. Will you not make one effort to save yourself by the atoning blood of Jesus? He will hear. Do try, dear friends; try yourself, and earnestly; for time is short. God help you to try, and then I hope you will know what it is to be remembered with favor, so that you may escape the wrath to come.

"I own I'm guilty, own I'm vile,
Yet thy salvation's free;
Then in thy all-abounding grace,
Dear Lord, remember me!"

"WHOM THE LORD LOVETH HE CHASTENETH."

How often hath my wayward heart,
Wearied with this world's wrong and strife,
Prayed for some balm to heal its smart,
Some strength to nerve its feeble life,
That it, unshrinking, still might bear
Its weighty load of pain and care,
And yet repeat the "Savior's prayer."

How often hath it, weak and worn,
In thankless mood, said, God forgets
The many burdens I have borne,
And round my thorny pathway sets
No lovesome light, no gladsome ray
To lead me, so I may not stray
From the straight path and "narrow way."

Ah! I forget that truth to heed,
Gethsemane's sad wail hath taught!
Not as our work, shall be our meed,
Not earth shall praise for what we've wrought;
Forget the chastening rod is given
By Him, who fondest hopes hath riven,
To bring us earlier home to Heaven.

My Religious Belief.

Belief, says Webster, is credit given to evidence, full persuasion of mind; or to have faith in given testimony. My religious belief is that God's holy word is all true, or truth. Do you wish to know why I believe thus? I will tell you; Jesus says it is truth. "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." Another says that holy men wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." So that it is the same as though God spake every word of it himself. I believe that the heavens and the earth which are now, by the word of God, are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgement;—I believe that the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat;—I believe the Lord will create new heavens and a new earth wherein the righteous will dwell forever;—I believe also that the kingdom and dominion under (not above) the whole heaven, shall (future tense) be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, &c.

II. I believe that there are but two advents of the Savior to this earth; that both are personal and visible; that the first took place in the days of Herod; that the Savior was vailed in humanity, went about doing good, suffered on the cross, died, was buried, arose again the third day, and finally ascended into heaven; where he must remain until the times of restitution of all things, spoken of by the mouth of all the holy prophets;—I believe that the second coming of Christ will take place when he shall descend from heaven at the sounding of the last trump, to give his people rest; [illegible]

III. I believe that [illegible]

2. By the fulfillment of prophecy; and

3. By the signs of the times.

Hence, the Master of the house will soon rise up and shut to the door of mercy!—Much scripture proof might be given here.

IV. I believe the condition of salvation is repentance towards God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; and that those who have true repentance and faith, will, and do, live soberly, and righteously, and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ.

V. I believe that there will be a resurrection of all the dead, both saints and sinners; that those who are Christ's will be raised at his coming; and that the rest of the dead will not live again until after a thousand years; and that the saints shall not all sleep, but those that are alive, and remain shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the sounding of the last trump.

VI. I believe that the only Millenium taught in the Bible, is the thousand years which are to intervene between the first resurrection and that of the rest of the dead, as taught in the 20th chap. of Revelations. And I believe that the many passages of Scripture which refer to the Millenial state, are to have their fulfillment after the resurrection of all the saints who sleep in Jesus.

VII. I believe that the promise that Abraham should be heir of the world was not to him or to his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith; that there is no difference under the gospel dispensation between Jews and Gentiles; that God will render to every man according to his deeds; that if we are Christ's, then are we Abraham's seed, and heirs according to promise.

VIII. I do believe that there is no promise of this world's conversion; or of a temporal millenium. The wheat and tares must grow together until the harvest.—Hence, the children of the kingdom, and the children of the wicked one, will continue together until the end of the gospel age, when all things that offend, and them which do iniquity shall be gathered out of the kingdom, and the righteous nation, which shall then inhabit the earth in its restituted capacity, shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Then the Man of sin will be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming. Glorious era! Oh blessed abode!

IX. I believe it is the duty of the ministers of the word, and also the lay members of the church of Christ, to continue faithful in the duty of serving God and doing good in the world, until Christ's second advent into the world. Occupy till I come, says Christ. Then, oh what a time of rejoicing with the dear saints!

X. I do sincerely believe that the departed saints do not enter upon their inheritance or receive their crown till death. That their inheritance, which will be incorruptible and undefiled, and that will never fade, is reserved in heaven, ready to be revealed in the last time. That there is laid up a crown for all the truly faithful, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give you at the day of his second appearing. Then they will be satisfied when they awake in Christ's likeness. Then I believe the saint's of God will be equal to the angels, being the children of God and of the resurrection.

It is said by a eminent divine, that "the earliest creeds, and all creeds of all denominations in Christendom, from the apostles to this day, recognize no other millenium than that glorious one on the renovated earth at the coming again of Christ and the resurrection of the dead." "It must be confessed by intelligent divines, that the popular doctrine of the millenium is a modern one totally unknown to the primitive and martyr church." "Consider further," says the same writer, "that neither St. Peter nor St. Paul, nor St. Justin, nor St. Cyprian, nor St. Cyrel, nor Jerome, nor any other saint, or father, or eminent man in the primitive church, received or admitted the doctrine of the temporal or spiritual millenium for one moment; except it was in the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ with the resurrection of the dead."

And now let us inquire for the good old paths to heavenly bliss our fathers trod; and to the true millenium through Jesus and the Resurrection. May the Lord by his Holy Spirit guide us into all truth.—[illegible]

Yours in hope of redemption when Christ comes.

Something "New under the Sun."

Editors are prayed for! Reader, can you believe it? Was such a thing ever? Strange as it is, marvelous as it is, editors are prayed for publicly. A petition was recently sent into a union prayer meeting soliciting prayer for editors. This is the wonder of the age.

Every other subject, society and institution, has been remembered at a throne of grace, but whoever before heard a public prayer for editors, that God would give them wisdom, truth, love, grace, salvation—keep them from the evil to come? and that now is? Sure there is hope, joyous hope! What is pending? What have editors to do touching the world's salvation, or damnation? Look abroad and see! Look! open your eyes.

What is type set for? for good or for evil, for righteousness or unrighteousness? What the special motive power of our paper mills, steam presses, the foldings and mailings?

Satan has taken mainly the superintendency of this whole machinery for years. Our mail bags are pressed down with evil tidings. The great mass of our book and periodical literature hitherto, has been to poison the community, to curse it, and not to bless it. The world is set on fire, even the fires of hell, through the instrumentality of a corrupt and infidel press. Editors have done their full share in this work of death. Look at our dailies, where is there one in our city that does not advertise and puff theatres? and what is a theatre?

Archbishop Tillotson pronounces the theatre "a nursery of licentiousness and vice, the devil's chapel, a recreation which ought not to be allowed among a civilized, much less a christian people."

And yet the half is not told. And is the theatre all the vile things these dailies publish? Ask yourself, parent, if these are safe mediums of instruction for the rising age? Then turn to the miscellaneous weeklies, monthlies and semi-monthlies, the light popular readings of the day. What are they doing? O what a curse! what a curse!! Come nearer home—take a peep into our religious periodicals, so called—are there no dark spots here? no catering to a corrupt public taste! Was there ever a petition for prayer more important—fraught with conseqences so momentous? Suppose all these editors, daily editors, weekly editors, monthly editors, political, religious, miscellaneous, should repent in dust and ashes—put on sackcloth, turn to God with full purpose of heart, "lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset them," and write henceforth for God and only for God? What now? Hallelujahs would ring from pole to pole! All heaven would be in jubilee—"Glory to God in the highest."

"Salvation, O the joyful sound." Pray for editors! cease not, pray on. Pray for editors, publishers, printers, booksellers. Give us everywhere a pure, wholesome, sanctified, Bible literature, and the world is saved.—Golden Rule.

A Lay Revivalist in Scotland.

The Glasgow correspondent of the Presbyterian Herald gives the following account of the history and labors of Mr. Brownlow North, a lay preacher lately converted from a life of profligacy, and now freely admitted into orthodox pulpits of the straitest sect:

"In the early part of the year, our city enjoyed the ministrations of Mr. Brownlow North, a lay gentleman of independent means, who has devoted himself to the preaching of the Gospel. He is an Episcopalian, but addresses all who choose to listen to him wherever he finds an open door. His object is to deliver the simple Gospel message, which he does with overpowering earnestness. He speaks with fluency and even elegance, makes no attempt at exegetical preaching, says that he has but one doctrine to expound and enforce, and disavows the ministerial character and authority. But such is the fervor of his earnestness, that the largest edifice in town was not capable of containing the multitude who flocked to hear him, from the highest to the lowest, nor were two addresses on the Sabbath sufficient to meet the demand upon his ministrations, which were continued throughout the week. Our Presbyterian ministers of the Free Church and United Presbyterian Church, and one of the Established clergy, admitted him to their pulpits; and the ministers of all our churches received from the example of this good man a lesson on the importance of earnest preaching. Many inquiries who had been awakened by the addresses of Mr. North, visited and conversed with him during the week. His visit, there is reason to believe, was productive of much spiritual good.

This gentleman, a few years ago, was a terrible reprobate. He had a shooting lodge in the Highlands, where he indulged in very loose and profligate practices. After his conversion he devoted his labors as a christian man exclusively to those districts where he had formerly rendered himself most notorious and obnoxious by his profligacy. In his expressions of self-reproach, which of course must be taken with considerable limitation, he has repeatedly declared that he had been guilty of all the sins in the Decalogue except murder. Mr. North is no fanatic. He is a calm-minded man, thoroughly imbued with christian principle, and profoundly impressed with a sense of the duty laid upon him of making known the great salvation. I heard him address about three thousand people, who were admitted by ticket to the City Hall, and the effect of his simple and earnest pleading was very impressive and memorable. Nothing, I dare say, since the days of Whitefield, has produced such a powerful effect upon the popular mind as this remarkable man's addresses; and their power lies not in their logical structure, but in their earnestness.

A friend of mine, who has seen Mr. North in his wild days, on the stage as an amateur player, once dined in his Highland lodge along with a gay party. The wine was circling freely, and a Highland boy, whom Mr. North had engaged as a domestic servant, entered with a fresh supply of liquor, and in setting it before his master, whispered something to him, upon which North instantly withdrew from the table and took a cigar, refusing to indulge longer in his cups. Turning to my informant, he said, 'P——, that boy is a christian; I could trust him with untold gold.' Whether that poor Highland boy's humble influence as a child of God was instrumental in touching the wicked heart of his master, my friend could not tell. But on the occasion referred to, his warning whisper arrested North in his bacchanalian career, and probably he was in the habit of using the same liberty with his master on other festive occasions."

CHEERFULNESS.—Try for a single day, I beseech you, to preserve yourself in an easy and cheerful frame of mind. Be but for one day, instead of a fire-worshiper of passion and hell, the sun-worshiper of clear self-possession; and compare the day in which you have rooted out the weed of dissatisfaction with that on which you have allowed it to grow up—and you will find your heart open to every good motive, your life strengthened, and your breast armed with a panoply against every trick of fate—truly you will wonder at your own improvement.—Richter.

Seek Riches.

Reader, I should like you to be very rich. Perhaps you would like it yourself. But the riches you want are probably not the riches which I mean. I should like you to be rich in grace, rich in faith, and rich in heavenly treasure. Oh, seek these riches.

I am very sorrow for those who have nothing but gold and silver and bank-notes and land, and no grace. They are not truly rich. I feel deeply for those who have no better portion than this world can give them, and no place in that kingdom that cannot be removed. In reality they are very poor. Their treasures only last for a few years. They die and carry nothing with them beyond the grave. They rise again in a world where money is of no use, and all who die without grace will be paupers forever. Oh, they are very poor!

Take advice of a minister of Christ this very day. Seek durable riches, a treasure that cannot be taken from you, a city which hath lasting foundations. Give yourself to the Lord Jesus Christ, and seek that incorruptible crown he is ready to bestow. Take his yoke upon you, and learn of him. Come away from a world which will never really satisfy you, and from sin which will bite like a serpent at last. Come to the Lord Jesus as a lowly sinner, and he will receive you, pardon you, give you his renewing Spirit, fill you with peace. This shall give you more real comfort than the world has ever done. There is a gulf in your heart which nothing but the peace of Christ can fill. Enter in and share our privileges. Come with us and sit down by our side.

Reader, if you want riches, I offer you the riches of Christ—a free, full, immediate supply of wealth. Oh, do not let the offer be made in vain. COME AND BE RICH.—Rev. J. C. Ryle, B. A.

RAISED IN GLORY.

A seed found in the hand of a mummy two thousand years old, when planted bloomed into a beautiful flower.

Two thousand years ago, a flower
Bloomed brightly in a far-off land;
Two thousand years ago its seed
Was placed within a dead man's hand.

Before the Savior came to earth,
That man had lived, and toiled, and died;
And even in that far-off time
That flower had shed its perfume wide.

Suns rose and set, years came and went;
The dead had kept its treasure well:
Nations were born and turned to dust,
While life was hidden in that shell.

The senseless hand is robbed at last;
The seed is buried in the earth;
When lo! the life long sleeping there
Into a lovely flower bursts forth.

Just such a plant as that which grew
From such a seed when buried low—
Just such a flower in Egypt bloomed
And died two thousand years ago.

And will not He who watched the seed
And kept the life within the shell,
When those he loves are laid to rest,
Watch o'er his buried saints as well?

And will he not from 'neath the sod
Cause something glorious to arise?
Aye, though it sleeps two thousand years,
Yet all that sleeping dust shall rise.

Just such a face as greets you now,
Just such a form as here we wear,
But yet more glorious far, will rise
To meet the Savior in the air.

Then will I lay me down in peace,
When called to leave this vale of tears;
For "in my flesh I shall see God,"
E'en though I sleep two thousand years.

The Birth of the Spirit.

BY R. ROBBINS.

No. I.

"So is every one that is born of the Spirit."—John 3: 8.

The birth of the Spirit, as the key stone in the economy of God, is a subject of infinite importance to the Bible student. It is a subject respecting which a few who profess to love God and his truth widely differ from the mass; thus showing, that one or the other of the two classes have misunderstood the truth on this point: in view whereof, we propose the following question, viz., in what does the birth of the Spirit consist? In subjoining an answer to this question, we shall in the first place, present the negative side, and endeavor to show by the light of inspiration that the birth of the Spirit does not consist in conversion. Says the Savior, "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit." If it is true that conversion constitutes the birth of the Spirit, we shall do the inspired word no violence, if we substitute the word converted for the phrase, "born of the Spirit;" thus: the wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is converted. Nay, if it is true that conversion constitutes the birth of the Spirit, truth demands this change in the reading of this text. But, in order that we may test this view of the subject, let us examine the history of the past, and see if we can find among all the sons and daughters of Adam one converted person.

We will make the apostolic age our first landing place, and, if we fail here in the object of our pursuit, we may abandon our task as a fruitless one. Well, we make examples of the apostles themselves. We follow them in their travels; as they stand before assembled multitudes, holding forth the words of life we watch them; as they are brought before kings and rulers, our eye is upon them; we see them scourged, and incarcerated in loathsome prisons; [illegible] of these persons under the superintendence of angels; yea, through the whole course of their life, we subject them to the closest scrutiny; yet in not a single instance do we find them coming and going, and, like the wind, unseen in their movements. But thus it must be with every one that is "born of the Spirit." [Or, converted! if the popular theory of the new birth is true.] The quality of being like the wind in coming and going, is given as a sign, by which it may be known who has been born of the Spirit. But, says one, it is that Spirit by which the new birth is effected, that is like the wind; the sound of which may be heard, but cannot be seen coming or going. And, for proof of which, reference is had to the descent of the Holy Ghost, (Spirit) on the day of Pentecost. Well, really! this interpretation would make Christ mean to say, the wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth; so is the Spirit by which every one, without exception, is converted! As good an interpretation as the Universalist could ask for! But, than which, nothing can be more absurd! But the Savior's words positively declare, that it is the man; that same physical, organic being, that has been born of the flesh, and must be born again—of the Spirit—that is to be constituted like the wind in respect to coming and going.

Again, we object to the popular view of the new birth, because, according to it, we have three births; while the Savior declares but two. Hence it would make him say, except a man be born again, and after that be born AGAIN, he cannot see the kingdom of God! Let us listen to the injunction of the Wise Man;—"Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee." The following text, "And be renewed in the spirit of your mind," (Eph. 4: 23,) is often quoted in support of the popular theory of the new birth. But we turn to Chap. 1: 1, and we see that the apostle addressed his epistle to "saints;"—"faithful in Christ Jesus;"—those who had been previously converted. And when we learn that the art of renewing may be repeated at pleasure, and that the mind is renewed in knowledge, we are led to conclude that this text has nothing to do with conversion; but that it implies the same as,—"The eyes of your understanding being enlightened;" (eyes of the understanding and spirit of the mind being the same,) and is equivalent to;—"But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." (2 Pet. 3: 18.) Therefore, as often as there is an advancement in grace and in knowledge, so often is the renewing of the spirit of the mind repeated.

Again, says Jesus, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." That every generative being propagates its own nature, none will deny. Hence, as God is not flesh, but Spirit, the fact that Jesus was born of the flesh, would forever exclude him from being the veritable Son of God, unless he could be born again, under circumstances different from those connected with his first birth, and of a different nature, producing an entire change in the quality of his physical constitution. But, says one, what has this to do with the birth of the Spirit? I answer; much, every way! And if we can prove that, while Christ was in the flesh, he was not the veritable Son of God, we shall also prove that man cannot remain mortal after having been born of the Spirit. We shall also establish the fact that even converted mortality is a child of God only by virtue of having been begotten of him, by the word of truth; that it is in a state of embryo; and will prove an abortion, unless it experiences another birth which will change it from the corruptible nature in which it now is, to the incorruptible nature of eternal life. When Christ asked the Jews, concerning himself, whose son he was, and was answered by them that he was the son of David; he next asked of them, with what propriety David could call him Lord while he was his son? This was a hard question for them. They [illegible] the Scripture said that Christ [illegible] of the seed of David. But with what propriety David could call his own son Lord, was more than they could see through. Well, here comes the point. And we affirm that David did not, in fact, call his own son Lord. He was not the son of David, in fact, and the Son of God, in fact, at the same time. He, being born of the flesh, and in the lineage of David, was the son of David so long as he was in the flesh, and no longer. Having been begotten of God, he was the Son of God in prospect, but, as it respects his being the Son of God in fact, or by virtue of birth, he was in a state of embryo.

Hope unto the End.

Hope, the anticipation of future good, is natural to mankind. And the hope of future blessings and blessedness is an essential portion of scriptural Christianity. The assured anticipation of future glory for the christian, rests upon no precarious or uncertain foundation. For whatsoever things were written were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. God being abundantly willing to show unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his counsel, has confirmed it by an oath; that by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us.

No other hope has or can have such a basis of everlasting strength as this. It rests upon impregnable foundations. The immutable purposes of Deity,—the explicit promises of the God of truth,—the eternal covenant of Jehovah with his obedient people,—the Oath of God who cannot lie, and who when he could swear by no greater sware by himself,—these are the massive and immutable foundations of the christian's hope.

"Thine Oath and promise, mighty God,
Recorded in thy word,
Become our HOPE'S foundation broad
And confidence afford."

The hypocrite has his hopes,—it is like a spider's web; the worldling has his hope,—like a fleeting dream; the sinner has his hope feeble as a dying gasp; but the christian has his hope like "an anchor to the soul!" Their rock is not like our rock, and though the lee-shore of ages is strewn with the wrecks of those who rested upon worldly hopes, the christian's alone abides in perpetual steadfastness and unperishable strength.

But there are various expectations cherished by good men, which still are not the christian's hope, from the fact that they are based upon no promise of God—confirmed by no oath, and revealed in no passage of sacred truth.

For example, there is the hope of many that at death the saints of God ascend immediately to heaven. Now this hope, however pleasing, is not the christian hope. Concerning it we are well contented to use the language of John Wesley, who says in his sermon on Luke 16: 31, "It is, indeed, very generally supposed that the souls of good men, as soon as they are dislodged from the body, go directly to heaven. This opinion has not the least foundation in the Oracles of God." We would not, however, be willing to admit with Wesley that Paradise is an underground place for the spirits of the dead, for recent geological investigations afford considerable evidence that the interior of the earth is one mass of liquid fire, which would render it a very ineligible locality for the abode of the people of God. And besides, the tree of Life is "in the midst of the Paradise of God;" Rev. 2: 7. But the "tree of Life" is far from being in some underground region of the dead, for it is in the midst of the street of the Holy Jerusalem and on either side of the river of Life. Rev. 22: 1, 2. So, as there is no foundation for the idea that souls go to heaven at death, and as the underground paradise has only a fancied existence, we are just as ignorant of the state of the dead as was Job, when he said, "man dieth and wasteth away, yea, man giveth up the ghost and where is he?" Job 14: [illegible] Hence all speculations upon the state of the dead, and all hopes based upon contradictory inferences, Papal traditions, Protestant fancies, Spiritual Rappings and Ghost stories are no part of the christian's hope.

Again, there is a wide-spread anticipation that this world is to glide calmly onward to a condition of millennial peace and glory—a good time that's coming. But this is no part of the christian's hope, for scripture nowhere certifies it as such. We may speak of it as did Martin Luther in his commentary on John 10: 11–16. (Voice of the Church, p. 158.) "Some in explaining this passage say, that before the latter days, the whole world shall become christians. This is a falsehood, forged by Satan, that he might darken sound doctrine, that we might not rightly understand it. Beware of this delusion." With this statement of the fearless reformer we leave others to combat. We believe that every jot and tittle of it may be reaffirmed without doing violence to the word of God. This then is no component of the christian's hope. An expectation so vague, so various, so baseless and so tinged by the fancy of its many-systemed adherents, cannot be that hope which rests upon the broad platform of the divine promises and which to the faithful is a source of constant joy.

What then is this "good hope through grace" which is a fountain of such "ever lasting consolation" to the church of God?

1. This hope is a hope of being saved by the grace of Christ.

In the darkness and fury of faith's most dreadful conflicts, we are to take "for an helmet the Hope of Salvation." This confidence that God hath not appointed us to wrath, but that we may at last obtain salvation by Christ, gives us safety beneath those powerful assaults which would otherwise crush us in the very dust and darkness of despair. Of this great Salvation the prophets searched and inquired diligently in ancient time, while they contemplated the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow.

For this salvation the patriarchs and pilgrims of every age have longed "with eager hope and strong desire." This salvation is at present incipient, not perfected. We are saved by hope, but the salvation is incomplete. We may be saved from the guilt and condemnation and thralldom of sin and Satan,—we may be delivered from the fear of death which has so long enchained and harassed our race,—we may be saved from fear which hath torment, and which bringeth a snare, but still our foes are not entirely vanquished and destroyed. Still oppression and violence and iniquity prevail; still sin grieves the heart and fills the eyes with tears; still the dark tide of ungodliness rolls down to death; still disease riots, and death, the grim monster, arrayed in terrors, goes forth to blast and wither and devour, to chill our hearts, and blight our hopes, and desolate our homes, and rob us of our friends, and crush out from our trembling hearts the last dim spark of life that yet remains.

The Salvation for which we hope, includes full and final and eternal deliverance from all these ills and woes that afflict and burden our hearts and waste our lives. It lifts man from the depths of sin and misery up to the heights of glory and rapture at Christ's own right hand in the kingdom to come.

II. Again, the christian's hope comprehends the second glorious appearing of the Lord Jesus Christ. To them that look for him he shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. Long have the mourning children of the Lord expected and longed for the appearing of him whom having not seen they love, and in whom, though now they see him not, yet believing, they rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. O! with what intense desire have the myriads of martyrs and of saints expected that joyful day. They have cried "thy kingdom come" with an unparalleled intensity of love. Said the faithful pilgrim Rutherford, "His absence hangs like a mountain of iron on my heavy heart." The church can never rest in its desolate condition; the bride cannot rejoice in the bridegroom's absence; the victory cannot be achieved until the great Captain of their salvation shall come with voices of triumph and shouts of joy. O what a day will that be, when the weary and desolate church shall meet their Lord, no more despised and rejected of men, but crowned with many crowns and covered with the glories of his everlasting reign.

III. The christian's hope includes the resurrection of the dead. Without this all faith and hope are vain. For the hope and resurrection of the dead they have often been called in question, but still they have hope toward God that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust. Around this hope cluster the tenderest sympathies of their bleeding hearts. They are afflicted, but they sorrow not as those who have no hope. They have listened to the words of Him who, standing in the midst of a death-stricken race, proclaimed "I am the Resurrection and the Life," and they have taken these words as their joy and consolation. Hence they rejoice that their leader is death's conqueror. And they rejoice as he exclaims, "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore . . . and have the keys of hell and of death." Hence they hope for the day when he shall waken with the resurrection-trumpet his unnumbered myriads, and lead them upward on wings of light, while they shall roll back the lofty and triumphant song, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" How blessed this anticipation. "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth," and "in my flesh shall I see God." When He shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is, and every one that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure.

IV. The christian's hope is a hope of eternal life. The resurrection alone is not sufficient for the saints; they must be secured forever from the destroyer's power. Hence they have hope of eternal life, which God that cannot lie promised before the world began. Being justified by grace, they are made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. This eternal life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord. We fight the good fight of faith and lay hold on eternal life. We have the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come, and we hope at the great day of separation to go with the righteous unto life eternal. O the thought of living on, and on, and ON, throughout the mighty roll of everlasting ages! Of living when sorrow, and tears, and woes are forgotten in the far distance of the receding past, of living in all the vigor of eternal youth, in all the glories of immortality! O God, let me live eternally in thy presence! O, when the sinner shall die amid the anguish of the second death, let me live in bright glory through everlasting ages!

Thus have we in a few words mentioned some of the exceeding great and precious blessings which become objects of the christian's hope; we might go on and portray the glorious inheritance, the everlasting kingdom, the unfading crown, the eternal rest, the everlasting glory, the many mansions, and all the treasured joys that are laid up for the redeemed of the Lord. But the time would fail to consider them all. But in view of the blessings that we have noticed, how important that we hope unto the end! We must not despair. We must not sink when the harbor is in view! We must not faint when the journey is so near its end! Hope unto the end, the end of sin, and sorrow, and toil, and pain, and temptation, and death, and trial, and tears, —the end of persecution, and tribulation, and affliction! of scoffing, and mocking, and malice, and spite;—the end of every sorrow, the beginning of every joy. O then thy triumph will begin! Then thy dejection will end, and the crown of light shall sparkle on thy brow forever more! Hope unto the end, O, thou poor weeping saint, hope on, hope ever, the rest is just ahead. A few more weary steps, and the angels shall greet you with their joyous welcome and lead you to your rest! A few more tossing billows and your bark shall touch the holy strand where tempests [illegible] end! Hope in the Lord, [illegible] ye praise him!

But, poor sinner, what shall I say to you? You who are shut up in darkness! You who have no hope, and are without God in the world! You who are out of Christ and under condemnation! O dear friend, turn to the Lord! Turn to the strong hold, ye prisoners of hope! Come to Jesus—flee to the cross—lay hold on the hope set before you! O! come while God invites, the spirit strives, and mercy lingers to receive you—come and grasp this "BLESSED HOPE." Come and be saved! Hope in the Savior, the sinner's friend.—Hope unto the end! Hope till hope is lost in sight, and eternal glory shall reward your toils. God bless you. Amen.

What is the Sanctuary?

Dan. 8: 14. "And he said unto me, unto twenty-three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Prior to and at the time of the utterance of this prophecy, the sanctuary was located at Jerusalem. It was said (ver. 11) that heathen arms should cast down the place of his sanctuary, which place was Palestine. Dan. 9: 26; "And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and sanctuary; . . . and unto the end of the war desolations are determined." Truly the city and the sanctuary have suffered desolation to the uttermost. Ver. 27; "And for the overspreading of abominations (or wickedness of the Jewish people) he shall make it desolate (make what desolate? The city and sanctuary. Forever?) even unto the consummation, (or restoration) and that determined shall be poured out upon the desolate." What was the desolate? The city and sanctuary. What was determined? To punish the city and sanctuary for the sins of the people.

It is believed by some that the true sanctuary is in heaven. To such we would say that any sanctuary that may be in heaven has never been defiled, certainly never trodden under foot. Who was to tread down the sanctuary? Dan. 8: 20, Media, Persia, Grecia, and Rome. For how long? Twenty-three hundred days (years). It is a fact that each of these powers have oppressed the city of Jerusalem, the place of the sanctuary of the most high God, with an iron heel. And Jesus says (Luke 21: 24,) Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles till the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

Again. There are others who believe that the whole earth is the sanctuary; and this is the ground taken by Bro. Miller, as well as a large portion of his followers.

Allow me to call your attention to three of our best witnesses. Saith Moses (Ex. 15: 17,) "Thou shalt bring them in and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance in the place, O Lord, which (in the sanctuary, O Lord, which) thy hands have established. And David saith, Ps. 78: 54, "And he brought them to the borders of his sanctuary, even to this mountain which his right hand hath purchased." Daniel also saith, (9: 16, 17) "Let thine anger and thy fury be taken away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain. . . and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate."

Let me modestly affirm that here lies the mistake of millenarians with reference to the twenty-three hundred days; a mistake not in time, but in the event. To illustrate. If the sanctuary is the whole earth, then are we authorized to say, unto twenty-three hundred days, then shall the earth be cleansed by fire, &c. &c. But on the contrary, if the place of his sanctuary be Palestine, we are not authorized to make the foregoing proclamation.

How will the sanctuary be cleansed? How was it defiled? By the [illegible] of heathen armies; by the [illegible] of a false system of worship in the place that God had chosen to put his name; to [illegible] the powers [illegible]

key, or in the expressive symbol of the Revelator (19, 20) "And the beast (Latin kingdom) was taken, and with him the false prophet; (Mohammedan kingdom) these both were cast alive into the lake of fire. They are there to-day; both are held together as matters of policy by the allied powers of Europe; to cause the dominion to pass from those powers that have trodden down the sanctuary; to procure the repeal of those laws that interdicted its restoration; and the premonitory signs of God's returning favor to Zion. Ps. 102: 13, "Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her, YEA, THE SET TIME IS COME." Is not a reference had to the twenty-three hundred days? Ver. 16; "When the Lord shall build up Zion he shall appear in his glory." This would appear to be the true sanctuary or tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man. We have no account of a tabernacle being pitched by the Lord in heaven; But he has told us that he will pitch one at Jerusalem. Rev. 21. 3; "Behold the tabernacle of God is with men and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God."

We would call the attention of those who claim that the sanctuary is contained within their own persons, to the phrase—"God himself;" as if he had said, "I will not dwell with you through an agent, but personally." Ex. 33: 2; "And I will send an angel before thee, and will drive out," &c. Ver. 3; "For I will not go up in the midst of thee . . . lest I consume thee," &c. "And Moses said unto the Lord (Ver. 15,) if thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence." "And the Lord said unto Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken." Ex. 29: 45. "And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God." Ex. 33: 11; and the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend." Ver. 23; "Thou shalt see my back parts, but my face shall not be seen."

The above quotations prove that altho' the Lord dwells with his people by or through his Spirit, yet the time was when the mighty God dwelt with his people personally, bodily; and he has permitted that the time shall come when he shall dwell with them. Ps. 132: 13, 14; "For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation. This is my rest for ever, here will I dwell for I have desired it." Joel 3; 16–21; "The Lord also shall roar out of Zion and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel, so shall ye know that I am the Lord your God, dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain. Then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more. And it shall come to pass in that day that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk; and all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters; and a fountain shall come forth of the Lord and shall water the valley of Shittim . . . Judah shall dwell forever, and Jerusalem from generation to generation. For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed; for the Lord dwelleth in Zion." Isa. 60: 12, 13; "For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted. The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree, the pine tree and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary, and I will make the place of my feet glorious."

From Bro. S. S. Brewer.

BRO. GRANT:—Frequently of late I have heard the inquiry has been made—"What has become of Bro. Brewer?—has he renounced his faith?—has he backslidden?—has he quit preaching?" Neither; thanks be to my heavenly Father who has kept me from any disposition to do any of the three.

As it regards the first, I am still looking for the promise at the ending of the days, believing there will be a resurrection of the dead both of the just and the unjust; that the dead are dead and will remain dead until then, and then they will inherit the kingdom, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven forever and ever. Amen.

With regard to the second, let me with [illegible] religion has in [illegible] trials afforded [illegible] to think of displeasing [illegible] tried and [illegible] backslidden in heart in times like these. O Lord, preserve me lest I fall, is my constant prayer; and so let it remain until Jesus comes, or I sleep in death. Amen.

With regard to the third and last question, I can, to the praise of the Searcher of hearts, say, I never saw or felt so much the necessity of being in season and out of season, in the proclamation of the last great message to this last doomed generation, which, in my humble opinion, will very soon behold the definite realities of the Judgment. The coming of Jesus, and a preparation to meet him in peace, does in very deed and truth seem to me to be the present truth. Oh! what a thought to the poor disciple—I shall see Jesus and be like him in a few short days. How desirable the consummation of Hope. Yes, my dear friends, this is thy poor brother's expectation and desire. Amen.

I have for a year past been trying to preach the Gospel to the church in Fairhaven, Mass., on Lord's day; and, as my health would admit, to present the word as I understand it in regions round about, with various success, which will be made known when the Lord maketh up his jewels. Further, at present, thy Bro. sayeth not.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 16, 1858.

Our Visit.

No. I.

We have again enjoyed a pleasant visit among our friends in Connecticut, on our way to the Indians on Long Island.

We left Boston May 29th, and with rapid speed hastened through beautiful landscape scenes, covered with the most verdant foliage, wild flowers, and orchards in full bloom. It is rarely that fruit trees blossom so beautifully as they have done this spring. There is a flattering prospect of a rich fruit harvest at the time of the ingathering. All nature seems in earnest to produce such a result. But when we consider that man will surely pervert and abuse these rich bounties of Providence, if nature fills his basket with her store of rich fruits, it darkens the lovely prospect before us, and makes us sigh for the land of the good, where man will appreciate his blessings, and use them to the glory of the bountiful Giver. O let the day come when Paradise shall bloom again, and the fair and good of earth shall enjoy the rich fragrance of its lovely flowers, and like the happy pair, once more roam in innocence through Eden bowers, singing angelic songs in heaven's sweetest harmony, basking in the wide spread glory of our elysian home.

On our way to the Indian settlement, we stopped at Danielsonville, Ct., and spent four days with the church in that place. We had very interesting meetings. Four were baptized, and others resolved to become the followers of Christ. This is a living church. They are letting their light shine. They have just opened a Sabbath School of about fifty scholars. New ones are becoming interested in the great truths of the Bible, and are receiving them into joyful hearts. This church has adopted the covenant published a short time since in the Crisis, and is trying to carry it out practically. We think it may be truly said, it is a church in Bible order.

We are satisfied that many of the churches, who are looking for the speedy return of our Savior, have been too negligent about church order and discipline, as set forth in the New Testament. Many of us were connected where a kind of cast creed had been adopted, binding us to believe so much, no more, no less, on penalty of excommunication; and when the theological rubbish was removed, and the truth, diamond like, beamed in all its brilliance upon our minds, we supposed that all would see it and rejoice with us in the discovery; but to our sad disappointment, we found ourselves tied to a creed, like a prisoner to a cannon ball, which would allow us to go only so far as to believe only just what that taught. We struggled for freedom, but were charged with rebellion, tried, condemned, and cast over the wall as an object of detestation, unworthy of their association; but when thus forsaken, the Lord took us up, and led us into green pastures, and by the side of still waters; and we resolved we should never be confined in another such sectarian pen; but, as we had been made free in the Lord, we should, by his help, keep so. Since that time, we have been so fearful of getting into prison again, we have refused to go into any building, lest some one fasten the door upon us. Like the horse which sees a hole on one side of the bridge, and in his care to shun it, runs off on the other side; so we, in our extra caution against church creeds, have run out of church order, and have fallen into a state of church anarchy. But we are glad that, after so long a time, most of our brethren and sisters see the importance, not of forming church creeds again, but of coming into Bible order, being subject one to another in love.

The following is the covenant as adopted by the church in Danielsonville, and several other places.

"CHRISTIAN COVENANT."

"We, whose names are subjoined, do hereby covenant and agree, by the help of the Lord, to walk together as a church of Christ; faithfully maintaining its ordinances, taking the Bible as our only rule of faith and practice church order and discipline; making christian character the only test of fellowship and communion.

We further agree, with christian fidelity and meekness, to exercise mutual watchcare, to counsel, admonish or reprove, as duty may require, and to receive the same from each other as becometh the household of faith."

We see no reason why every christian in the world cannot sign this covenant. If it was so worded as to cut off one whom the Lord accepts, or receive one whom he rejects, we would not sign it. As it is, we sign it with a hearty good will, feeling the approval of the great Head of the church. Would it not be well for all to adopt the same, and thus encourage the spirit of christian union, for the want of which, some of the best efforts of the church have been greatly crippled. In Danielsonville, and elsewhere where the covenant has been adopted, happy results have followed. We all feel the need of christian association, and the closer our union, the stronger the bond, and the less likely to be broken by the enemy. While the powers of darkness are marshalling their forces, well knowing the importance of united effort, shall we totally ignore all the teachings of our Savior on this point, and the wonderful results which have followed a union of action in all ages of the world, whether for or against the truth? We hope otherwise. The time has come when we should cease our petty war about words and non-essentials, and unite in solid phalanx against the swelling tide of error now sweeping over our land, and the wide world, engulphing millions in the vortex of eternal ruin. Come, brother, give us your hand, and in the name of the Lord, we'll press the battle to the very gates of the enemy. The victory is sure.

THE readers of "Debt and Grace" are anxious to know something of its author, C. F. Hudson. He is a Congregational minister; but now employed as a Professor in the New York Central College.

☞ Many thanks to friends who sent us Nos. 28 and 42 of the first volume of the Crisis to complete our set for binding.

☞ If GUY W. RATHBONE, who wrote from near MONMOUTH, ILL., Feb. 2d, '58, will send his address, or if some friend will do it for him, I will send him a book that he ordered and paid for; viz., Cummings on Daniel. Address H. L. Hastings, Rochester, N. Y.

WE would call the attention of our Brn. and Srs. in Vermont and vicinity to the notice of the Conference to be held in Rutland. Come if you can, and come praying. The field is one of interest. We purpose to be present.—ED.

Christ Formed Within.

We hear much said about Christ in the various stages of his life; Christ in the manger; Christ in the Temple, among the doctors; Christ at the river Jordan; Christ in the wilderness; Christ at the tomb of Lazarus; Christ in the garden; Christ on the cross; Christ ascending to heaven; Christ's second coming and reign on the earth; but the most important relation in which he stands to us at present is, to be formed within, the hope of glory. If he does not reign in and rule over us, of what benefit will it be to us to understand every thing in relation to him from his birth to the end of his reign in his Kingdom? We are assured from his own words that many will come to him in that day and ask admission to his kingdom, to whom he will say, "Depart, I never knew you;" and this leads to the inquiry, What is it to be known of Christ? He says, "I know my sheep, and am known of mine." We also read about the Spirit being given to them that obey him and of the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry Abba, Father; and the Spirit witnessing with ours that we are the children of God. There is such a union with Christ to a humble follower of him, that all doubts and fears are banished, and he feels that his own will is swallowed up in Christ.

This I believe is what constitutes being formed within, the hope of glory. Give me this witness in preference to gifts prophetic, or any other kind of knowledge which will not stand the test at that great day.

Yours in hope,

D. N. SMITH.

To Bro. I. C. Wellcome.

The Address from the Advent Churches in New York and Newark, N. J., was sent forth by the body of brethren constituting those two churches, and represents the faith, so far as the time is concerned, of those brethren. If the arguments presented are erroneous, let us have the truth, and a favor will be conferred on those who are still clinging to the interpretations taught us by Bro. Miller, Litch, and a host of others.

Yours truly, M. E. GREEN.

From Sr. B. L. Clark.

BRO. GRANT:—My lot being cast in the far West, and while meditating on my lonely situation, my mind was led toward the rising of the sun, where my Advent brethren and sisters enjoy great privileges of which I am wholly deprived. I have no one of like precious faith to converse with, no Advent meetings nearer than forty or fifty miles; no privilege of speaking my sentiments only in private, and then their minds are blinded to the great and glorious truths of the precious Bible. I am told that I have embraced some new doctrine; they cannot see that it is plain Bible doctrine. When I speak of the sleep of the dead and the glorious resurrection, it seems as if I could tell them so that they might see, but, alas, I can only speak to the ear; God must speak to the heart. My prayer is, Lord, enlighten the minds of thy children, that they may know more of thy truth. As for me, I wish to sit at the feet of Jesus and learn of him, for his examples are worthy of imitation. But when I look into this sinful heart I see so much there that is unlike my blessed Savior, I feel truly to reach out my hand of faith toward Jesus and cry like sinking Peter, "Save, Lord, or I perish!" Blessed be God, he is ever near to his children to hear them when they cry unto him in faith. I desire to be stripped of self-righteousness and every thing which would prevent my Savior's dwelling in this heart; that I may know of mine own self that Christ is within me the hope of glory, the hope of immortal glory. I rejoice in this hope. The resurrection will soon come; then will Jesus change these vile bodies; and as we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Bro. and Srs. [illegible] altars, remember us who are in this western wild.

Your sister, seeking to know more of Christ and his truth,

—"As poor, yet making many rich!" Strange paradox, yet strictly true! Look at Christ, who for our sake became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich. Look at the fishermen of Gallilee; how poor, how wretched and obscure, how despicable among men, yet how rich in faith and every Christian grace, and how do they enrich the world by their heavenly doctrines.—Ex.

—The moss grows upon the sterile rock; the mistletoe flourishes upon the naked branches; the ivy clings to the mouldering ruin; and, Heaven be praised, something green, something beautiful to see, will, in the darkest hour of fate, still twine its tendrils around the broken altars and crumbling arches of the desolate temple of the human heart.—*W. The Great Clock.

A traveler in Europe thus describes the great clock in the cathedral, at Strasburg:—

"The priests and military have retired, and I am now sitting in a chair facing the gigantic clock—from the bottom to the top not less than one hundred feet, and about thirty feet wide and fifteen deep. Around me are many strangers waiting to see the working of this clock, as it strikes the hour of noon. Every eye is upon the clock. It now wants five minutes to twelve. The clock has struck and the people are gone, except a few whom the sexton or head man with a wand and sword is conducting round the building. The clock has struck in this way: The dial is some twenty feet from the floor, on each side of which is a cherub, or little boy, with a mallet, and over the dial is a small bell; the cherub on the left strikes the first quarter, that on the left the second quarter. Some fifty feet over the dial in a large niche, is a huge figure of Time, a bell in his left, a sythe in his right hand. In front stands a figure of a young man with a mallet, who strikes the third quarter on the bell in the hand of Time, and then turns and glides, with a slow step, round behind Time, comes out an old man with a mallet, and places himself in front of him.

As the hour of twelve comes the old man raises his mallet, and deliberately strikes twelve times on the bell, that echoes through the building and is heard all round the region of the church. The old man glides slowly behind Father Time, and the young man comes round readily to perform his part, as the time comes round again. Soon as the old man has struck twelve and disappeared, another set of machinery is put in motion some twenty feet higher still, and is thus: there is a high cross, with the image of Christ on it. The instant twelve is struck one of the apostles walks out from behind, comes in front, turns, bows, and passes in. So twelve apostles, figures as large as life, walk round, bow, and pass on. As the last appears, an enormous cock, perched on the pinnacle of the clock, slowly flaps its wings, stretches its neck, and crows three times, so loud as to be heard outside the church to some distance, and so naturally as to be mistaken for a real cock. Then all is silent as death. No wonder that this clock is the admiration of Europe. It was made in 1571, and has performed these mechanical wonders ever since, except about fifty years, when it stood out of repair."

The Quaker's Corn Crib.

A man had been in the habit of stealing corn from his neighbor, who was a Quaker. Every night he would go softly to the crib and fill his bag with the ears which the good old Quaker's toil had placed there. Every morning the old gentleman observed a diminution of his corn pile. This was very annoying and must be stopped, but how? Many a one would have said, "Take a gun, conceal yourself, wait till he comes, and fire." Others would have said, "Catch the villain and have him sent to jail." But the Quaker was not prepared to enter into any such severe measures. He wanted to punish the offender and at the same time bring about his reformation, if possible. So he fixed a sort of trap close to the hole thro' which the offender would thrust his arm in getting the corn.

The wicked neighbor proceeded on his unholy errand at the hour of midnight, with bag in hand. [illegible] eat, when lo! he found himself unable to withdraw it! In vain he tugged, and pulled, and sweated, and alternately cried and cursed. His hand was fast, and every effort to remove it only made it more secure. After a time the tumult in his breast measurably subsided. He gave over his useless struggles and began to look around him. All was silence and repose. Good men were sleeping comfortably in their beds, while he was compelled to keep a dreary, disgraceful watch the remainder of that long and tedious night, his hand in constant pain from the pressure of the trap which held it. His tired limbs compelled to sustain his weary body would have sunk beneath him, and his heavy eyes would have closed in slumber, but lo! there was no rest, no sleep for him. There he must stand and watch the progress of the night, and at once desire and dread the approach of morning. Morning came at last and the Quaker looked out of his window and found he had "caught his man."

What was to be done? Some would say, "Go and give him a good cowhiding, just as he stands, and then release him; that'll cure him." But not so said the Quaker. Such a course would have sent the man away embittered, and muttering curses of revenge. The old man hurried on his clothes, and started at once in relief and punishment of the prisoner.

"Good morning, friend," said he, as he came in speaking distance. "How does thee do?"

The poor culprit made no answer, but burst into tears.

"O fie!" said the Quaker, as he proceeded to release him. "I am sorry that thee has got thy hand fast. Thee put it in the wrong place or it would not have been so."

The man looked crestfallen, and begging forgiveness, hastily turned to make his retreat. "Stay," said his persecuter, for he was now becoming such to the offender, who could have received a blow with much better grace than the kind words that were falling from the Quaker's lips, "stay, friend, thy bag is not filled. Thee needs corn or thee would not have taken so much pains to get it. Come let us fill it." (And the poor fellow was obliged to stand and hold the bag while the old man filled it, interspersing the exercises with the pleasantest conversation imaginable, all of which were like daggers in the heart of his chagrined and mortified victim.) The bag was filled, the string tied, and the sufferer hoped soon to be out of the presence of his tormenter, but again his purpose was thwarted.

"Stay," said the Quaker, as the man was about to hurry off, having muttered once more his apologies and thanks. "Stay, Ruth has breakfast ere this; thee must not think of going without breakfast. Come, Ruth is calling."

This was almost unendurable. This was heaping coals with a vengeance. In vain the mortified neighbor begged to be excused; in vain he pleaded to be released from what would to him have been a punishment ten times more severe than stripes and imprisonment. The Quaker was inexorable, and he was obliged to yield.

Breakfast over, "Now," said the old farmer, "if thee needs any more corn, come in the day time and thee shall have it."

With what shame and remorse did that guilty man turn from the dwelling of the pious Quaker. Everybody is ready to say that he never again touched the Quaker's corn crib. I have something still better than that to tell you. He at once repented and reformed, and my informant tells me that he afterwards heard him relate, in an experience meeting, the substance of the story I have related; and he attributed his conversion, under God's blessing, to the course the Quaker had pursued, to arrest him in his downward course.

Obituary.

Died in Blackstone, Mass., June 10th, Sr. Sarah Bellows, aged 54 years.

Sister Bellows was the mother of Bro. E. Bellows. She was a devoted christian, highly esteemed by all who knew her, and distinguished for her kindness to the sick and sympathy with the poor. She was converted in 1833 under the labors of Maxey W. Burlingame, and joined the Free Will Baptist church, and has continued an ornament in the church of Christ till her death.

She suffered much during her sickness, but no murmurs escaped her lips. She loved the Bible, and spent much time in studying its precious truths. She expected to sleep till the resurrection at the last day, which she believed to be very near.

"Quick to Eat, Quick to Work."

It is an old saw which used often to be urged upon boys, particularly in the country, till many came to consider it as much of a duty to gobble down their dinners in the least number of minutes possible, as to be "spry" when sent on an errand. Whether the saying was imported, or originated at home, we cannot say with certainty, but we suspect it to be wholly a Yankee invention. However that may be, a worse maxim never was urged upon children. They are too quick in eating, naturally, and the propensity is one which should be restrained rather than encouraged. An attentive observer of our habits in this respect—if we were a foreigner—would naturally ask of what use are teeth to these people; they do not even attempt to masticate their food with them; two grinds and a swallow, with a dose of water every minute or two to keep the road open, constitutes their whole process of eating—no wonder that dyspepsia is such a common complaint with them.

Turkeys swallow corn whole—also gravel stones, but they never get dyspeptic. Humans swallow small junks of meat whole, and in time—it is only a question of time—they break down under the process. Turkeys have no grinders, and need none. Nature has made provision in their maws for the digestion of whatever instinct prompts them to swallow, without its being pulverized beforehand; but nature has made no such provision for man, and if he will not use his grinders, his digestive organs must suffer. An English physician, treating this subject, says:

"Nature has provided man with teeth for the purpose of mastication, and all the food he takes into his mouth—meat especially—should be thoroughly pulverized by his grinders before it is swallowed. While that process is going on the salival glands exude their secretion, which mixes with the food and prepares it so that it may be easily swallowed—without the aid of water or other liquid—and passed into the stomach ready for the second process of digestion; therefore no liquid should be taken till after the eating is finished. By forcing down food half masticated, with the aid of liquids, an improper mass—and generally too much, also—is pressed upon the digestive organs, requiring more gastric juice than they are able to furnish. The effort to accomplish the task thus recklessly forced upon these organs, weakens their power from day to day, ending at last in dyspepsia, sour stomach, debility, &c., while a proper attention to the rule indicated above, presents the food to them in such manner, and in such quantity, that they are always able to perform their functions with facility, whereby the whole system is not only kept in healthy condition, but is constantly improved and developed as nature intended it to be."

There may be nothing new in this to most of our readers, but if only one can be induced to change his habit of eating—miscalled so in most cases—and follow the advice of our English writer, our object will be partly gained.

What shall I eat? is a question often asked. The same author says the rules of diet are simple. Any nourishing food, in proper quantities, properly cooked, properly masticated, and taken at regular intervals. But, lest this answer should be deemed too general, he amplifies a little. "The flesh of young animals is less nutritious than that of the same animals full grown. Fatty substances are generally to be avoided; also hard salted meats. Spices and condiments are worse than useless. Hot bread contains gases which are hurtful, and it never should be eaten. Fine bread is not so good as coarse. Ripe fruits, foreign or domestic, may be used freely, either raw or cooked. Cold food is always better than hot; it comes in contact with the natural heat of the stomach, and is negative to it—therefore the process of digestion commences immediately, and is soon completed. Meat is never required but once a day. One hearty meal a day is enough; let the others be light. Drink enough to satisfy thirst, but not enough to make a soup in your stomach, and impede digestion."—Boston Jour.

Domestic Summary.

GREAT GALE AND FEARFUL LOSS OF LIFE.

The French packet from St. Pierre to Sydney, C. E., reports a heavy gale previous to the first instant, on the banks of Newfoundland, attended with immense loss of life and property to the French fishermen. Besides the damage and loss of vessels, it is said that no less than three hundred men perished during the storm.

THE TORNADO AT ELLISON, ILL.

The Oquawka (Ill.) Plaindealer of the 4th inst. gives additional particulars of the tornado which destroyed the village of Ellison, and inflicted serious injuries on other places. The house of David Thompson about ten miles from Terre Haute was destroyed, and William Thompson, his brother, was instantly killed. A child of David Thompson was injured so that it died the next day. The following are the names of those killed at Ellison: Mary L. Braselton, wife of Jacob Braselton; Chas. H. Braselton, their son; Martin Wentworth; Lavina, daughter of Josiah Lacy; Elizabeth, wife of William E. Thompson, and her infant; Mrs. Mary McWilliams, Miss Harriet McWilliams, Hiram Johnson and his infant child, Mrs. Willard Hurd and her son Charles, Mrs. Spaulding. The last five were all inmates of one house, which was fairly blown to atoms. The following were so badly injured that their recovery is doubtful: Geo. N. Braselton, Wm. F. Torrence, Sarah J. Sherwood, Thomas McWilliams, Elizabeth Kelshaw. Mr. Willard Hurd had a hole cut in his lungs, and is regared as fatally injured.

Mr. Hurd, with family, had but recently removed from the State of Vermont. He had several hundred dollars in gold and silver in a small trunk which was contained in a larger one, no trace of which has been discovered. Mrs. Spaulding who lived in the same house also had considerable money in the house at the same time. This lady's husband was in Vermont, and was to have started West on Monday. Mr. Hurd's pocket book containing about $400 in notes and money, was subsequently picked up about a quarter of a mile from where the house stood, and in the same vicinity a splinter from the trunk which contained his gold and silver, of which no trace was found. Several silver spoons were picked up.

The force of the tornado was such as to tear large and sound stumps from the ground, while hickories, four to six inches in diameter, were twisted like withes. The very ground was torn up and the grass swept away. The dwellings and their furniture were broken and torn into the merest splinters and fragments. The large and beautiful timber at the West part of the town, was crushed down for nearly a quarter of a mile. Many of the marble slabs in the cemetery are broken and torn into the merest splinters and fragments.

There were some twenty-five houses in the place, and all but three were demolished. The school-house was taken up about thirty feet into the air, when it broke into a thousand fragments, and not a vestige of it has since been seen.

Some of the wounded testify that they were carried fifty to one hundred feet in the air, and suffered by the fall.

Washington, June 10, 10 P. M.

The President this evening sent in a message to the House, stating that hostilities had been suspended with Utah, in consequence of news received from Gov. Cummings. The President congratulates the country on this result. The two regiments voted by Congress will not be needed.

In the announcement of this news in Congress, congratulations were exchanged on all sides, and the House immediately adjourned.

[To the Associated Press.]

Official information has been received from Gov. Cumming of his arrival at Salt Lake City, and favorable reception there. Brigham Young formerly delivered to him all authority and counselled the people to obedience. There was not the slightest demonstration of hostility. Brigham and the prominent Mormons were to have left Salt Lake on Tuesday last. The various Mormon settlements were broken up, and the inhabitants were moving South for, or in the direction of Sonora. The scene is represented as being most distressing and mournful, and the men, women and children, poorly clad and illy provided for, uncomplainingly took their departure from the Territory.

THE GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE.

TORNADO AT OSHKOSH, WIS.

Buildings Destroyed—Narrow Escapes.

The following is an extract from a letter dated Oshkosh, Wis., June 7:

"About half past twelve last night we were awakened by a terrific peal of thunder, and the whole heavens were in a perfect blaze of light. In a few moments a tornado burst upon us, rocking our house like a cradle. Having the late tornado in Illinois in our minds, we, of course, felt a little fearful as to our own fate, and therefore retired to the wood shed for safety till the fury of the tempest had passed. Our house stood the test well. On going out the next morning I found that some of our neighbors did not fare so well. There were about a dozen houses within a short distance of us, wholly or partially destroyed. Some were removed from their foundations, and others were reduced to a heap of ruins. Two brothers—Messrs George and Samuel Gray—living adjoining each other, were most unceremoniously moved; George's house going off the foundations and Samuel's being nearly demolished—the roof and one end being blown entirely away. Mrs. Gray was in bed when the roof fell in, but was saved from harm from its resting upon the bedstead.

One man named Macintosh had a sick child, a little girl about three years old. He had just been for the doctor, and with him had returned to his house when the gale struck it, raising it from the foundation. The family left the building and went out into the storm; the excitement threw the little girl into a fit, which resulted in her death.

I learn also that the tornado did considerable damage on the south side of the river, blowing down several houses and barns, and unroofing others."

Railroads in the United States.—The aggregate length of all the railroads in the United States is about 20,000 miles, with a united capital stock of near $385,000,000, and a bonded debt of $400,000,000. To this there must be added the floating debt, probably not far, if any, short of $100,000,000, making a grand total of $900,000,000 expended in railroad property management and mismanagement.—Evening Post.

Singular Discovery in Horticulture.—A new process has been discovered by an Italian florist, by which it is asserted that delightful fragrance may be bestowed upon plants naturally inodorous. In order to attain this object, the roots of the plants are covered with fragrant manures. Thus, with a decoction of roses, the discoverer has been enabled to give to the Rhododendron the perfect fragrance of the rose. In order to insure a successful result, it is necessary to treat the seeds of the plant to which it is desired to give fragrance. They are steeped two or three days in the required essence, then dried in the shade, and shortly afterwards are sown. If it is desired to change the natural odor of the plant for one more agreeable or more desirable, the strength of the essence is doubled or tripled, and a change must be made in the nutrition of the plant.—Boston Herald.

Rarey's Method of Taming Horses.—Having haltered your colt and caressed him, fasten his near fore-foot with a strong strap round the pastern and radius or forearm, fasten his foot up safe, make him hop round on three legs till tired. When he is tired put a strap with a noose round the off pastern, make him hop, then pull the strap that's on the off pastern, and he will come on his knees. When on his knees keep the strap so tight that he cannot get his foot slack to get up. Bear against the horse's shoulder with yours steadily and he will lie down in a few minutes. When he is down stroke him the way the hair lies. Take off the straps as soon as he is down. You can now do any thing with him you wish, or beat a drum on him, &c., without alarming him. Operate on your horse in this manner as often as occasion requires.

The Maine Conference of Adventists.

This conference is to be holden in Richmond, Reed Meeting-house, to commence on Thursday, 10 o'clock, A. M., June 17th, and continue over the following Sabbath. It is hoped that those who are specially interested in the great truths which have called us out as a distinct class, sufficiently see and feel that the cause they have espoused, and which has already benefited so many, demands their continued and more united efforts to sustain and increase the interest upon the all-important theme of the day of the Lord, the judgment, and the kingdom of God at hand. Never, since we became a people, has there been a time when we could labor so understandingly and effectually as now. Let us try to unite all our strength given by the Lord, and encourage all who are inclined to the truth. Come, brethren, all who can consistently, and let us see each other again in the flesh; talk, pray, sing, and consult how we may best act to save our fellow men and ourselves by the instrumentalities God has put in our hands. The meeting is 2 miles from the Rail Road station and from steamboat wharf. Those coming from the North can arrive at 12 M. Those from the South and West at 3 P. M. Brethren in the vicinity, though few, will do all they can to provide for them, and will furnish pasturing for the horses. As this meeting is intended for the benefit of the cause generally, in all parts of the State, churches and lay brethren should furnish funds to defray the expenses of the ministers, or come prepared to contribute at the meeting; as those in the place will do all their duty in taking care of those who come, and they will be glad to see all who can come. Call for Eld. I. C. Wellcome, at the village, or David Robinson, Low Curtis, or John Umberhind in the vicinity.

We take the liberty to sign the names to this call of several of our ministers whom we know to be anxious for the meeting, as time has not permitted us to notify them of its arrangement. Will all other ministers interested, send their names to the offices to be added?

For the Crisis.

TO A BACKSLIDER.

Seek once more a precious Savior;
Seek, oh, seek him ere you die;
Let your heart once more embrace him,
And forever faithful be.

His strong arms are stretched to save you,
Gladly would once more be thine;
Only waits your deep repentance
To accept you as his own.

Do you feel that you have wandered
Far away from Him you loved,
Grieved away his blessed Spirit,
And so long unfaithful proved?

Still he's ready to forgive you
Just the moment when you feel
Sorrow for the wrong you've done him,
And desire him as your all.

Let no earthly fetter keep thee
From repentance deep and full,
That the God of glory meet thee
And re-bless thee once for all.

'Twill be soothing to thy spirit,
As you journey onward home,
And a thousand fold repay thee
In that blessed world to come.

O! then, never, never linger,
But retrace thy steps at once;
Turn to the strong-hold in Jesus,
And the world once more renounce.

Nor let Satan tempt thee ever
To believe all mercy gone,
While a Savior sits in kindness
On a mercy-giving throne.

SECOND SERIES.

No. VII.

To Uncle Fred:—Having, as I think, demonstrated from the promises made to David, and the various prophecies touching the subject of the kingdom, that Christ is yet to reign on David's throne, I wish now to take up another chain, or rather other links in the great chain of prophecy, which reached from Paradise lost to Paradise restored, that you may see how harmoniously they are interwoven, and how conclusively they go to establish the position I have taken, viz, that Christ's kingdom is yet future; that it is eternal, and is the very same dominion first given to man, and will be exercised over the same domain.

These links of the prophetic chain that I am about to examine, possess, to me, a peculiar interest. How utterly ignorant was I of their existence and beauty, previous to my becoming—what you denominate me—"a Millerite!"

The two covenants! What a vast field is here presented for the mind's eye to explore! The one made with the natural seed of Abraham, the other made with the spiritual. The one embracing old Canaan as the promised inheritance—the other embracing the heavenly Canaan. The one having for its Capitol the Jerusalem which is in bondage with her children—the other having the New Jerusalem which is above—the golden city, whose children are free, and which is to descend from God out of heaven, and become the Capitol at Mount Zion, where the Lord will reign before his people, and before his ancients gloriously. But we have not opportunity to explore the field, and must confine our pen to an expression of a few points of interest, touching the locale of the inheritance.

That God made promise to Abraham respecting his seed, that they should serve a strange nation four hundred years, and afterward be brought forth from their captivity into the land of Canaan, and possess it for an inheritance, is a point that no one questions, and that the promise was literally fulfilled, no one doubts.

But that there was another promise made concerning another seed, and another inheritance, is a matter of doubt with many. That Abraham had promised "to him, and to his seed, which is Christ," land, and land embracing all that his eye could explore, as it turned the entire circle of the compass,—and that he, with a seed as vast as the sands upon the sea shore, and as innumerable as the stars of heaven ("for if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise,") would actually possess that land, and dwell there forever, is a fact that is but [illegible] which was promised to Abraham and his seed for an everlasting inheritance.

When God told Abraham to look northward and southward, eastward and westward, he assured him that all the land which he saw should be given to him and to his seed forever. "Arise," says he, "and walk through the land, for I will give it unto thee." Gen. 13: 14, 15. In the 15th chapter God says to Abraham "I am he that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, to give thee this land, to inherit it." Here is (1st) the promise that the land should be Abraham's; and (2d) that it should be a gift, or inheritance from God. Abram is desirous to have the promise still further confirmed, and he asks, "Whereby shall I know that I shall inherit it?" Not, "whereby shall I know that my seed shall inherit it?" but "I"—it is himself, his own possession of the land that interests him now. The process by which God confirmed the covenant, is familiar to you, and I need not record it. That the land was promised to Abraham for an everlasting possession, is positively affirmed. And now the question to be answered is this—did Abraham inherit the land during his lifetime?

Do you reply—"Yes, he did?" Then turn with me to Heb. 11: 8, and read; "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." Mark a few points. "By faith he sojourned." What is it to sojourn? Says Webster, "To dwell for a time; to live in a place as a temporary resident, or as a stranger, not considering the place as his permanent habitation. So Abraham sojourned in Egypt. Gen. 12.

A temporary residence, as that of a traveler in a foreign land. It was thus that Abraham dwelt in the land of promise. "As in a strange country" Just as he would in a foreign land, away from his own country. "Dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob." "Tabernacle"—"A tent—a temporary habitation—a movable building." Webster. Was it not rather a strange way for Abraham, and the heirs with him, to inherit the land? By faith? sojourning? as in a strange country? in a tabernacle? And why did he thus live? "For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Then it was because he looked for a city yet to come. Paul says to the Hebrew church, "Here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come." Chap. 13.

Don't you see, Uncle Fred, how it all runs into the same chain? I have been telling you in a former letter about this city which is to be the Capitol of the kingdom—the New Jerusalem which is to come;—yes, Uncle Fred, the Bible does positively say that it is to come down from God out of heaven! Abraham, Isaac and Jacob will not go up to heaven to possess it; for it is coming down on the land promised to them for an inheritance, and I know that John describes the very one for which Abram looked, for Paul says that he looked for one with foundations, and this one John tells us has twelve, and that they are adorned with all manner of precious stones. I do not wonder that Abraham was willing, "by faith" to sojourn, and look and wait for such a city as this—a city of pure gold, with jasper walls adorned with twelve kinds of precious stones, and gates of pearl.

I feel that I would willingly be a stranger with him, as all our fathers were, that I might be an heir with him to the same glorious inheritance, would n't you, Uncle Fred?

But my sheet is full, and I must postpone further argument until my next.

Till then adieu,

Kate.

Brother A. P. Wells.

A TRIBUTE.

"The memory of the just is blessed."

If I might speak without the supposition that my word is an attempt to improve upon what another has said, I would offer thus a tear of affectionate grief over the grave of our beloved, departed brother, A. P. Wells, of Laporte, Ind.

I had the happiness of being acquainted with him from Dec. 1855. He was a lover of the truth, as presented by the blessed gospel of the Son of God. He was a good man, upon whose heart lay the interest of the cause of Christ in the region round him, and in the general prosperity of [illegible] which he took the greatest delight. His religion consisted not simply in good wishes and good feelings; but in doing good and living right. It appeared to be his purpose to do all that could be demanded, and that would tell effectually in promoting the advancement of the divine doctrine. A frank, whole-souled man, and a christian from the principle and goodness of the thing itself. He was ever ready to encourage the laborers in the field to the promotion of their work, by giving a quiet christian home in his christian family,—to the pilgrim missionary, by taking them with his own team, often for many miles, to their appointments,—by giving them of his worldly substance. I remember well when first welcomed by him, of a cold December night, to his hospitable dwelling; and again I remember the hearty "come in" after a fatiguing tramp—on a sultry July evening—from Michigan City. I have often at other times received his hospitalities. His last "good bye" to me (July 15, '57,) was after carrying me long on my way to a distant station.

I had a love for him as one of the best and most faithful of our brethren. And who of our ministers and people that knew him did not love him? Our sympathies are with his deeply bereaved family. May they be sustained by Heaven's promised grace to the afflicted.

He is gone to his rest in the grave,—the sleep in Jesus, which will not be disturbed till the trump of God shall bring the long-forgotten and long-remembered saints to their final reward. His works follow. The sweet and saving influences of a christian example still tell upon the family—upon the neighbors around the endeared circle of its exhibition, and his friends abroad. His voice is still deeply heard, while he lies silent in the dark sepulchre.

It is hard to part with a brother. He was a brother! We mourn his death as an event which has deprived us of another of the firm and tried, who have stood side by side in the battle shock. Thus one after another goes down to gloomy hades. The only opposition we can continue to the enemy is the affection we still bear to those whom he imprisons. We will love them in the dearest remembrances of truth, and the gospel kindness which has knit our hearts in one undying bond of sympathy. We can also pray that they may live again. And they will live again, a life which cannot be subjected to disease and dissolution. We can cherish our hate of death, by cultivating regard for the exaltation of the Prince of Life.

Farewell, brother! Beyond the sepulcral lands we'll meet thee, upon shores of living beauty; gladdened with the smile of abiding health! We'll meet thee, when recovered from the darkness of the night—when the morning's bright dawn, hailed by the ransomed millions, shall witness the long-bound captives, bringing the honors of salvation to the throne of Messiah.

THE LONE WIDOW'S SOLILOQUY.

Has God a guardian angel given
To watch me night and day,
And help me in the way to heaven
And hedge up the wrong way?

Does he encamp my dwelling round,
That I may safely sleep,
And all day bear me on his hand,
Lest I should dash my feet?

Is he a witness to my prayer
When I kneel down alone,
To catch the penitential tear
And bear it to the throne?

Does he rejoice when duty's done,
And grieve when I'm remiss?
O! should this thought not urge me on
To works of righteousness?

And if I sleep in death will he
Not watch keep o'er my clay,
Till Christ the Life Giver wake me,
Then soar with me away.

Or, if my Jesus come before
I sleep in death, will he
Not guide me upward through the air
To where my Lord shall be;

To meet those dear now absent friends
I've laid in the cold grave,
While 'round each guardian angel stands
Rejoicing we are saved?

Saved from the curse of sin and death,
Triumphant o'er the tomb,
With all the saints of God to rest
In that bright, Eden home.

Thank God for guardian angels here,
To aid us all the day,
And mighty whisper in our ears,
And watch our sleeping clay.

O come, my soul, now bless the Lord,
And thank him for his care;
Fear not, though thorny be the road,
Thy guardian angel's near.

TRUST IN GOD.

"What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee."—Ps.

When temptation fierce my heart doth assail,
Causing my flesh in deep terror to quail;
When dark arrows fly swift on every hand,
Fearing the onset I cannot withstand;
In haste, quickly, Lord, to thee I will flee—
What time I'm afraid I will trust in thee.

When long is the conflict and deep the affray
And my fainting heart is ready to say—
As David long since, pursued by king Saul—
"Before my enemy I soon shall fall;"
For refuge, O Lord, to thee I will flee—
What time I'm afraid I will trust in thee.

When faith is weak and I fear it will fail,
And dark unbelief strives hard to prevail,
And drives from my breast thine own blessed light
And I grope in darkness like that of night,—
Then, while I fear I shall be overthrown,
I will trust in thee and in thee alone.

I will trust in thee when storm-cloud's lower,
When trembling I fear their gath'ring power;
I will trust in thee when trials surround,
And dangers and snares unnumbered abound;
In fear and dismay to thee will I flee,
What time I'm afraid I will trust in thee.

The Vast Army.

BY REV. EDW. MUNRO, PERPETUAL CURATE OF HARROW-WEALD, ENG.

CHAPTER I.—THE APPOINTED PLACE.

I thought there was a Vast Army marching on over some wild, rough lands: rocks, and narrow paths, and slippery places were all around. There were very few spots which were fruitful or had aught growing on them save half-withered stocks of grass, or creeping brambles; while over head tall, lank fir trees pointed their long and leafless fingers to the wild hills and crags, which went on and on, rising in the distance.

The army was moving through this bleak land, and found it hard work to keep together, or to get forward. I was told they were going against enemies who were drawn up on a beautiful, green and flowery plain beyond the hills, and were manymore in number.

I thought I was following this Vast Army, and One walked by my side who told me all about them. Their movements were strange and wonderful, so as to fill my soul.

I will tell all I saw.

It was late in the evening when I first came into the midst of this Vast Army; overhead the stars were just beginning to come in the pale blue sky. The thin, clear crescent of the moon was sailing on with the old moon in its arms.

To the east there were many sharp, ragged rocks which pierced up into the air. I should have thought it would have been dark in this part of the sky, as it was night, and the glow of twilight was in the west. But no; there was a light among those sharp points, clearer and softer than the twilight which still hovered on the other side, where the sun had gone down; a clear, beautiful glow of light which made the rocks stand out black against it, and gave them a sharp, terrible look; and though this lovely light was low down in the horizon, and though it was getting on for night when I came, still I saw that every man's brow of that Vast Army, which was turned toward the glow, shone with a pale, lovely, peaceful light, like marble statues look by moonshine, or faces when they are lit up by the blue flame of sulpher.

There was a glow in the west, but it was the sweet fading of sunlight, still it was not half so beautiful; and besides, it grew fainter, while the glow in the east grew stronger, though very slowly.

And now of the Vast Army.

My guide told me that the enemy lay in the west among the mountains, under the sunset, though the Army was constantly looking to the east, because they were expecting a certain glorious King, who was coming with an army of unknown size to help them; besides, this King was their King, and his kingdom lay in far-off lands, where the soft glow was, beyond the hills; and the soldiers of his army were all to go back with him after he had won the victory; and they longed to go, for a lovely land, most lovely, they heard was the land of the King.

It seemed the soldiers of the Vast Army had never seen the King. But still they loved him with a deep love, for he sent over kind messages to them, and all glorious beings ever marched with them, and attended them who had seen the King in his beauty in the land which was very far off, and ever and anon they told all-glorious stories of the King and his noble land, as ever could have entered their "hearts to fancy." Besides, the King's character was most beautiful, such as men love without seeing the man, and he sent them all kinds of refreshment and help for their weary march.

The fathers of this Vast Army had long ago seen the King, but had been (as I was told) cut off from his own hosts, on account of some dispute in which they alone were to blame, "for in him was no fault;" and he said, by way of punishment, that the Vast Army should not come back to him till they had gone through the weary march, and conquered their cruel foe. My guide told me the King longed with a strange love to have them back, and he said (though it was strange to me) that he had each soldier of the Vast Army in sight of him, as from the glow, he saw them coming up amidst the hills; though they did not see him, since the rocks were [illegible]

It was plain that all of the soldiers were not to be at the last great battle, for I will tell presently how some dropped away; but I was told that all who left the Vast Army were taken by bright messengers to the King, and that the King would bring them back when he came.

The men of this vast army were many in number, of all sorts and dispositions; they marched in regular order and were very close in their ranks, and obeyed the orders of those over them strictly. I saw each one had a cross on his brow, which seemed liquid, like living water, and their crosses ever caught the sweet light from the eastern glow, and shone with a most lovely color on the forehead of each soldier of the Vast Army.

Mingled among them were countless beings who followed them, clad in radiant garments, with faces of unsullied purity, who were ever active, moving about among the soldiers. They were never idle, but always had their eyes fixed on those they had to guard; and whenever one of the soldiers dropped away, these beings carried him to the host of the glorious King: the air and ground seemed quite taken up with them. My companion told me, they were messengers from the King. I saw, too, there were many dark ones which moved about among these messengers, who were bent on evil, and hindering the Vast army in their march.

The men were advancing with their arms in their hands, and their shields on their bosoms, ready for battle, when first I saw them. My companion beckoned me to follow him; for I was standing, gazing with wonder at the moving of these soldiers, and the beings who followed him; and he led them through many barren passes of rocks, till on a sudden we stood over where the enemy were. They were drawn up in dense columns and lines over the beautiful plains. It was morning before I saw them, and the glorious sun was bursting full on their colored dresses and glittering arms; while the red beams caught far away the snowy peaks of the mountains, and shone all burning hot on the vineyards of purple grapes and golden corn which grew in the valley. I thought I had never seen a more lovely glow from the enemies land, but all intense burning, scorching sunshine.

They were careless and unwatchful, and many stragglers were wandering about over the rich lands, gathering fruits and flowers, or sleeping on delicious banks by cool flowing rivers of blue and silver water. They did not seem to be giving heed to the vast army who I knew were making their sure onward way amid the mountains.

"Do you see," said my companion, "how many of these men have crosses of fire burning on their brows, running up and down like liquid flame?"

I said I saw it; "and," said I, "it seems to me as if the fiery crosses were gnawing with pain the flesh of those who bore them."

"Even so," said he, "you have judged truly. These men of the fiery crosses did belong to the Vast Army, and their crosses were then of silver; but since they have left the army they have become fire!"

I remarked on the very anxious expression the crosses gave to the faces of those who had them.

But I must go back to the Vast Army, whom I wished much to watch, and soon returned with my guide to the mountains, along which they were moving.

I saw each one was clad in a vesture of snowy white, and that whenever they went contrary to the orders they received from the King or those placed over them, a dark black stain was left on their white dress, which no power of theirs could move away; no, nothing but the King himself could take it away, which he was ever ready to do when they came back again to the right way, and grieved over what they had done.

But I must come to the point of my story. Down in a deep hollow among the rocks, while the glow was hovering still and softly over the distant east, three boys were standing; they were soldiers of the Vast Army, and wore their snowy vests and their silver crosses upon their brows, which caught the rays from the hills.

The cold evening air was rising amid the rocks and caverns; the vast army lay quiet all around; my guipe had told me they had been long an the march, and would be very long yet, perhaps, before the final struggle with the foe; and that very many would be sent for to join the host of the King before the day of the last terrible battle came.

"Ulric," said a boy whom I had watched some time with interest, "Ulric, have you heard of the noise among the mountains? they say it has been heard these three days, and men say it is as if the glorious king were coming, for it sounds like chariots driving swiftly on the hills."

"And what if they have, Albyn?" cried the other; "what if they have? they are always fancying they hear sounds on the mountains: they say ever since the Vast Army set out men have fancied the same. I'm not going to be taken. It's all fancy, I say."

"What was the sound like?' asked a young boy, who was standing and leaning listlessly against a rock, and playing with the point of his sword, "What was the sound like, Albyn?" said he, looking up quickly and anxiously.

"Like the wheels of many chariots and the treading of many feet, which move swiftly over the mountains," said Albyn, looking thoughtfully toward the hills that lay off in the east.

"Do you think it is the King?" said the [illegible]

"I cannot tell, Ezra. I know when he comes he will come suddenly."

There was a silence for a few moments.

"Oh, nonsense," cried Ulric, "nonsense, Ezra; come with me, boy, and let us go about the sport we were going at before this stupid Albyn put all this in your brain."

Erza lingered, still looking in Albyn's face, yet seeming anxious to go with Ulric.

"I wish I knew if he were coming," said Ezra again.

"And why?"

"Because, Albyn, I would not go about the work I promised to do with Ulric."

"Why not?"

"Why not! why, because it's what'll stain my garment; and that must be white, you know, when the king comes."

"Oh, Erza! dear Erza! if you know that, how can you think of going? Suppose the king were to come on a sudden, as they say he will, how would you look when you had known this and would not act on it? what excuse would you have?"

Erza hung his head down and did not speak. He loved Albyn, but he could not give up his work with Ulric. He moved slowly and hesitatingly away. But before either he or Ulric were out of sight, a swift messenger came up from the main Army, bearing orders from the leader.

"The noise increases among the mountains," said the Messenger, "and you are ordered to keep the narrow path which comes down between yon rocks in the enemy's land, that no part may be left open to the foe, and that all may be found watching if the King should come. All are ordered to their post, continued the Messenger, "and each one of you has your own appointed. You, Ulric, are to guard the level ground at the top of the rocks, and by no means to let any one pass you without the watchword given: you, Albyn, are to guard the rocky pass beneath, and to let none pass save your dead body: and, Ezra, you must stand on yonder hill and keep a look-out, and fire the signal if you see the enemy advance in the plains beneath." The boys listened attentively; they did not linger: those who wore the shining cross were bound to obey.

They each moved to their post. Ulric muttered to himself, "It's an old alarm; they always try to frighten us in this way; the king is not coming, I'll be bound;" and he went sulkily to his post.

Albyn bowed, and went swiftly to the dark pass. Ezra, who was pale with fright at the very mention of the King's coming, seemed unwilling to leave Albyn's side, and moved to his place hesitatingly and sadly.

While I was watching them my guide drew my attention to one or two things I had not noticed.

"See," said he, "how each one has his own place given him to which he is suited; so wise are the leaders of the vast army in giving each their place: the hardest place to Ablyn the boldest, to Ulric the easier place, and to little Ezra but the work of watching."

I saw each of them had a Being who followed them and talked with them when they were alone, and helped them with advice. I was told they were secret messengers from the great King.

Obedience in Children.

It is unspeakable what a blessing it is to a child—what a saving of unhappiness and wickedness in after life to be early taught absolute obedience; there must be no hesitating or asking why, but what a mother says must at once be done. The young twig bends easily, but remember that in after years it becomes hard, and you will break before you can bend it. A little steadiness at first will save you many years of sorrow. While you insist upon obedience, however, you must take care that you do not provoke the child, and tempt it to disobedience by unreasonable and foolish commands. "Provoke not your children to wrath," and when it is necessary to punish them, see that it never be done violently and in a passion, but as a duty.

MORNING.

Break, break, eternal morning,
Thou day of rest, draw nigh!
Soon may thy radiant dawning
Beam o'er the darkened sky!
O let earth's time of groaning
And bitter bonds be o'er;
Soon may our storm-driven vessel
Reach the eternal shore!

Soon shall the dead, awaking
From their cold and silent tombs,
Behold the morning breaking,
And hail it as it comes.
O, what a scene of splendor,
When o'er the ransomed world,
The Prince of Peace his banner
In glory has unfurled!

Ere long that joyful morning
Shall bathe us with its light;
For it Creation's groanings
Rise through Luna's tedious night.
Let heaven and earth departing,
To fairer scenes give place,
Then everlasting gladness
Shall bless the ransomed race.

The Birth of the Spirit.

BY R. ROBBINS.

No. II.

Respecting Christ, God had declared, in prophetic song, that he would raise him from the dead. But if he had been the Son of God by virtue of birth, he could not have died. He would have inherited the incorruptible nature of God. (See rule, John 3 : 6). Christ possessed the divine nature, but not fully. Neither did he possess the two natures in a distinct form, the one from the other, in such a manner as that one could escape, and leave the other to suffer alone. For he, the whole of him, "was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death."

We will now make some inquiry respecting the constitution of Christ, and see if we can ascertain in what sense he possessed the two natures; the human and the divine. Says Paul, (Heb. 2 : 16) "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him" (the nature of) "the seed of Abraham." Then if Christ took on him the nature of the seed of Abraham, (for this is the most obvious import of the text,) we are under the necessity of finding the seed of Abraham, and of discovering the nature of their constitution, before we can ascertain the nature of Christ. Says Paul, (Gal. 3 : 16,) "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not And to seeds as of many," (i. e. many kinds,) "but as of one," (one kind,) "and to thy seed, which is Christ."

But did Christ numerically constitute the seed of Abraham? (See v. 29) "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." (See also v. 7.) But how shall we know who are Christ's? (See v. 27). "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

But is there not something required as a prerequisite to baptism? (Acts 2 : 28). "Then Peter said unto them, repent, and be baptized, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the Holy Ghost." (See also Mark 16 : 16, and Acts 3 : 19). We see then, that those who have repented, and have believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, and have been baptized into him; (into his name,) together with him as their representative head, constitute the seed of Abraham.

Having now ascertained who the seed of Abraham are, our next object is to get an understanding of their nature, which will enable us rightly to comprehend the constitution of Christ. For, he must possess, in every respect, the same nature that his brethren the seed of Abraham possessed; as it is written, (Heb. 2 : 17.) "Wherefore in all things it behooved him" (i. e. it was necessary for him,) to be made like unto his brethren." (See also Phil. 2 : 7, 8.) [illegible] spoke of Christ in this chapter, we will first inquire into his physical nature, (v. 15,) "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself took part of the same," (i. e. partook of the same) "that through death he might destroy him that hath the power of death, that is the devil." (See also Rom. 8 : 11.) "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he shall also quicken your mortal bodies."

Are Christ's brethren, the seed of Abraham, mortal, in a physical sense? So was he! And, it was necessary that he should be made physically mortal, not only that he might "taste death for every man," but that he might also in all things be constituted like his brethren, so that he might be a merciful and a faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, and that he might be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, and that he might be able to succor those who are tempted, having himself suffered, being in all points tempted like as we are, and yet without sin. We see, then, that it was essential to the economy of God, that Christ, in his physical constitution, should possess human nature. And it was in this sense that he took not on him the nature of angels." "That which is born of the flesh is flesh."

The question now arises; In what sense did he partake of the divine nature?—Ans. In the same sense that his brethren partake of it! For it was necessary for him in all things to be made like his brethren. Says Peter, (2 Pet. 1 : 4,) "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust." Peter here addresses those to whom are left exceeding great and precious promises. To Abraham and his seed were the promises made. Hence we have again found the seed of Abraham, and we find them partaking of the Divine nature, but not in a physical sense, for we have seen that they are physically mortal. But Peter says, that by these promises they are made partakers of the divine nature, having escaped "the corruption that is in the world through lust;" i. e. a mortal corruption. Hence they are made partakers of the divine nature in a moral sense only. But we will let Paul settle this point, (Heb. 12 : 10,) "For they verily after a few days chastened us after their own pleasure; but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness." Holiness is a divine attribute. Therefore, those who partake of holiness, partake of the divine nature by virtue of the promises left them; Christ inherited the same nature by virtue of his being begotten of God. They by acquirement possess the divine moral nature in a finite degree. He, by inheritance, possessed the divine nature in an infinite degree.

We understand, therefore, that while Christ was in the flesh, he was the son of David physically; and that in a moral sense he was the representative head of the seed of Abraham, and that, as he was corruptible in the physical constitution, a second birth was necessary to his being constituted the veritable Son of God.

The Way of Life.

How pleasant the sound! "Jesus, the way, the truth, and the life. O, how our hearts should melt in love to God for the gift of his Son! Through his blood we may be cleansed from all sin. If we possess the Spirit of Christ we will give ear to the command,—"Keep yourselves in the love of God." "As ye have received Christ, so walk ye in him." Let us make a self-examination, that we may know if we are walking in that straight and narrow way that leads to life. It is a subject of vital importance to consider, for if we have not the spirit of Christ, we are none of his; not in the way of life, but in the road that leads to death; we are as criminals with that sentence passed upon us, not in possession of that freedom that the Son giveth; whom he maketh free are free indeed.

Whatever qualities we possess, or whatever zeal and devotion, love of the truth are manifested in the service of our heavenly Father; if we do not prove ourselves by the word of God, and know that Jesus is in us, controlling and governing our actions, we are in darkness, not in the faith of the just, that grows brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. If we find ourselves coming far behind following the example of our Savior, let us awake to duty and see that we are exhibiting to the world his traits of character.

O let us have a spirit of watchfulness over ourselves, and not let opportunities of doing good be unimproved! May the practical piety of our Divine Master be the theme of our minds; then will we better understand and appreciate the word of God and enjoy more sweet communion with our Father in heaven. If we are truly followers of the meek and lowly Jesus, and not conformed to the world, but as strangers and pilgrims, then can we rejoice in hope of the crown of life, and the glory that may soon be revealed.

Right and Wrong.

"TWO WRONGS CANNOT MAKE ONE RIGHT."

I have noticed for some time a heedless neglect in many places about doing one duty; viz., coming into some kind of order and having a principle to act from in supporting our meetings, each one having his portion of the temporal burden. Some are so religiously conscientious about form or organization, that they do next to nothing toward supporting the cause they profess to love so well. I have been called upon a number of times to give my advice, in different places, about supporting meetings where only the breath of life was left. On inquiring, I found things as follows:

Bro. A. says, "We have had no preaching for ten weeks, and I'll not ask any one to come until we can pay them something for coming. I have done all that I could. I cannot see a preacher go away with only fifty cents in his pocket when it cost him $1.50 to get here, if I know it, and I do know it, for they generally stop with me, and I can't shut my eyes and rest easy and know nothing about these matters as some of our brethren do. I hear A., B., C. and D. talk in the street about their hope, but they hardly ever think of going to prayer meeting, and never think of taking up a collection or offering a cent. They don't believe in such things. Since they have got out of Babylon, they feel free, and thank God for a free gospel. They say we must not let the right hand know what the left doeth, but what they give, they choose to give it secretly, &c.

Now I cannot find out as they give any thing. They have good farms, and other property; their families are very dressy. Now these things try me very much, and what shall I do? If I go to meeting it does me but little good, knowing that these things are wrong. I should have given up before now, but when I see an interest among the unconverted to attend our meetings, I keep trying, but I can go no further. Now what would you do? Have you seen other places in the same fix in your travels?"

Yes, I very often see similar cases. I have seen them when I was a Methodist. There was always a class of small-soul professors, who would cecede and keep ceceding, to save a dollar, caring more for a few dollars than for Bible doctrines. You mustn't stagger in this; you are only a child in these things. Don't do wrong because B., C. and D. do. That will make two wrongs.

I will tell you what I would do before I would give up. Take a paper, present it to the congregation, to have it read as follows;—"We, the undersigned, feeling it a privilege to have meetings in this place, will pay the sums affixed to our names, once in two weeks, or as often as we have meetings." This will appear reasonable to any candid mind. You say that there are twelve or fifteen who call themselves brethren, and as many sisters, and eight or ten cousins or nonprofessors. Now out of these twenty or thirty, you could raise from three to five dollars a week, at seventeen cents per week, or every time you have preaching. You say you would pay fifty cents per week, and probably some others would do the same. This would make the amount even if a half were unable to pay any thing. I advise you to try it, and you will then have made your last effort with a clear conscience. Perhaps these selfish brethren will do more if the thing is started than you expect. I would try it before I gave up meetings entirely. "Agreed." The paper was circulated; the Lord was pleased with the move. Four signed fifty cents every time there was preaching on Sunday, and twenty-five cents per week for evening meetings. Six sent twenty five cents for Sunday and thirteen cents for evening meetings. Ten sent ten cents for every time they had preaching, and others said they would pay into the contribution if they had one. So the brother's heart was liberated from this heavy burden. He raised much more than he expected, and after they had pledged themselves they felt more interest, and attended meetings much better.

This I have found to be the case in many places. Just as some brother was discouraged and about to give up and do wrong, because some others did, the Lord would open the way if he would try once after they had made up their minds to do no more. Try it, brethren.

"Bro. Munger, how is the best way to manage the money matters?"

Just as you would any other business. Have a good, prudent treasurer, who is not afraid to question the preacher and find out his real wants, traveling expenses, &c., and if he is to but little expense, and a single man, pay him accordingly. Not because he happens to hit the high key, pay him all you have got. Act from principle. Always strive to keep a few dollars in the treasury against a rainy day, or a time when some one comes who is really needy; which often happens on a rainy day, when there are but few out; then you will find it very convenient to have a few dollars to help such as are needy and worthy. Many times I have seen some dandily dressed fellow get hold of the sympathies of the people and get double that a good old servant of God did, who was more worthy and needy. Here are two wrongs again. Be careful to have only one wrong, and that not on our part.

There, Bro. Miles Grant, these are my views, and this my advice on these things, and if you think them too strong for some stomachs, you can reduce them a little, but not much, for I know that the cause of God is suffering on account of these things. There are remedies for all evils, and this cured a number.

Since writing the above, I met with a brother B——, who was in a severe trial because he says he has preached himself nearly into the grave, and has not made enough the past winter to pay his horse hire, if he had to hire one. He has been to a place lately, got an interest started, and an urgent request to return. He was unable to go, but sent another man. He went, and got not a cent. They didn't believe in jingling money Sundays. No, nor giving any thing. Bro. B. learned this fact a while after, and gave the man the last dollar he had. This and other things so tried him that he said he was tempted to turn his horse loose and go to work at his trade if he went to the devil, which he should if he left off preaching. I advised him to hold on a little longer. It wouldn't do for him to do wrong because others did. I suppose others are in the same trial from the same cause, but I am not. I can live while fish grow and run, and I can catch them, and work at different trades.

Some one is accountable for these trials of preachers. Keep your fast horses, your gay clothing, shut your eyes to the wants of poor laboring brethren, and God will open your eyes to look on the books and see what Gabriel has written to your account, you will have a case in court that neither your property nor fine clothes will settle. Be patient, brethren, in doing your duty; the scale will turn; soon the poor and meek will inherit the earth.

Notes and Queries.

Bro. W. H. S. wants to know about 1 Cor. 15 : 24-28. Well, here is my opinion.

1. "All power in heaven and in earth" is now "delivered into Christ's hands." See Matt. 28 : 18; Eph. 1 : 20, 21; Rom. 14 : 9, &c.

2. He sits at God's right hand until his enemies are made his footstool. Ps. 110; Rev. 2 : 21.

3. The world now is not under the sovereign rule of justice as in the days of Israel, but under the reign of grace and truth which came by Jesus Christ.

4. God the Father is to make Christ's foes his footstool. Ps. 110.

5. This cannot be properly said to be done by the Father while all power is in Christ's hands; because now the long-suffering of God and the intercession of Christ, stay the merited punishment of sin.

6. Consequently Christ must deliver up or hand over, or give up (the word is often rendered "betray" in the New Testament) the kingdom of God even the Father; that the Father may overthrow the enemies of God.

7. The kingdom is the territorial kingdom, out of which the angels are to gather all things which offend, and them which do iniquity; (Matt. 13,) and is not the future kingdom of Christ, but his present jurisdiction over the world, as Mediator between God and man.

8. The delivering up is placed after the ingathering or harvest of "them that are Christ's at his coming," and before "the end"—which seems to be "the end of this age," (Matt. 13 : 40) wherein both wheat and tares are to be gathered in.

9. The rule of grace is then to be exchanged again for one of justice and judgment, and God the Father is to overthrow by such agencies as he pleases, whether by Christ or angels, all his foes.

10. Then the kingdom of Christ is to be established, and the Lord God shall give him David's throne—he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. But he will be subject to the father, that God may be all and in all.

11. To this agree the words of Daniel 2. The God of heaven sets up the kingdom, but we know Christ is to reign in that kingdom. Dan. 7 : 13. The Ancient of Days, "the Eternal," is enthroned—the beast is slain, his body is burned, all foes put under foot. Then and not till then, Christ receives the kingdom and dominion and glory. Rev. 11 : 15-18. The Lord God Almighty takes to himself his great power (that has been given into Christ's hands, but is now delivered up) and reigns. Then the nations are angry. Then wrath comes. The kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms (1) of our Lord, and (2) of his Christ, and he (Christ) shall reign for ever and ever.

Are We a People?

No. III.

WHEN DID WE BEGIN TO EXIST?

We cannot, with some, claim antiquity in church order and discipline, nor that our doctrines, as recognized by human formularies, date back to either of the distinguished Councils which have given character and authority—with assumed antiquity to various denominations—yet as the most important of these were held long before the birth of Protestantism, to acknowledge them is to admit the validity of the acts of the church of Rome, which would be making it a representative of the Christian system. We believe it is altogether antichrist. But we can claim the doctrines of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his apostles, as the basis of our superstructure, and a succession upon the same ground as all the Protestant churches—save the Protestant Episcopal—that view (the high-church position) which brings down the Christian ministry through the Romish Hierarchy. Good God! is that the source of antiquity, or line and recognition of authority to ministers of an enlightened, established, Christian system of worship in the nineteenth century?

The strictures of the Church Advocate, published at Boston, but lately, upon the origin of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in this country, in which it was contended that "the Church" must "protest" against the performance of the functions of the Christian ministry by the preaching of that sect—because Mr. Wesley, not being a bishop in the Established Church, (of which he ever remained a member and minister) could not give the power of a bishop, since he did not possess it himself—when he ordained Thomas Coke, in a private room, superintendent (what is that but a bishop?) of the Methodist churches in America. Coke ordained Asbury to the same office; but Mr. Wesley complained very much that they were called bishops—these strictures will show how the "Established" Church regards our ordination, our worship and our baptism. Also, in the same article, remarks to prove the same thing upon the commencement of the Baptist churches. Roger Williams, of the Established Church, was its founder, at Providence, R. I. He was immersed by a layman, Mr. Holliman. He in turn immersed the layman. This of course must shock all the ideas of apostolic succession, held in America and even in Boston in ☞ 1858.

Allow one paragraph upon the true apostolic position. We believe that God calls ministers to the work of preaching, as really as he called the apostles—as really as he converts sinners; for we believe that the church of Christ was composed of converted sinners in the time of Paul and is still in our time; for we believe again in the Spirit of God upon the earth, and hence as the church exists the ministry will exist. It is a succession which depends not upon Councils, not upon Peter, nor yet upon Peter's constant successor in the papal chair of Rome; not upon the land where the apostles preached, as Italy, France, Germany, England; but upon the fact that they preached the truths of the new dispensation, and that the word and Spirit of God remain in the world in all ages succeeding the apostolic times.

To Mr. William Miller of Low Hampton, N. Y., we must in fairness refer, as having been a distinguished instrument in the hand of God in arousing the attention of the churches and the world in this country to the pre-millennial advent of Christ. His first public lecture was delivered in 1833. His first published articles appeared in the Vermont Telegraph, in 1832. He prepared his sixteen lectures for the press in 1836. His first visit to Massachusetts was in the spring of 1839. In Nov., 1839, he visited Exeter, N. H. In Dec. of the same year, by invitation of Eld. J. V. Himes, he visited Boston and gave a course of lectures. From this time some date the beginning of the interest. I think a conference of believers in the immediate pre-millennial advent of Christ was called in Boston in 1838. In March, 1840, was issued the first number of the "Signs of the Times;" which has been continued to this time, now known as the "Advent Herald."

Mr. Spaulding, a minister of the Tabernacle in Salem, Mass., delivered a course of lectures upon the pre-millennial coming of Christ and the literal nature of the Kingdom about the beginning of the present century.

Joseph Wolf, a missionary in Asia, preached there the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ about the year 1847. In various parts of this country different gentlemen—about the time that Mr. Miller was qualifying himself and beginning his work—were investigating the subject and beginning to speak out in opposition to the then prevailing, popular belief upon the coming and kingdom of Christ. In England many names appeared [illegible] literal interpretation of Scripture, [illegible] fulfilment of prophecy—[illegible] pretation principle may be [illegible] great foundation [illegible] of our [illegible] We must begin [illegible] as a distinct interest with the excitement of 1840—1843. Mr. Miller had begun to labor more publicly in 1839. A powerful revival followed. Many ministers and members of churches became zealous in the defence of his views. At first, he labored to show from Prophetic Chronology that the coming of Christ would transpire about the year 1843. Afterward he, having inspired the positive conviction in other minds that the Lord Jesus would return to this world in 1843, became more positive himself. He was also a believer in the position of the brethren, almost unanimously endorsed, that the reign of Christ would begin on earth in 1844—upon the tenth day of the seventh month, according to the Jewish mode of reckoning.

We must commence our history from the work of the Lord in connection with the preaching which urged the establishment of the Kingdom in 1843. Eld. Geo. Storrs, who had begun to publish upon the destruction of the wicked, about this time issued his "Six Sermons" on that subject, and became a full believer in the immediate coming and kingdom of Christ, and was identified as one of the ministers who labored effectually upon this question. Others embraced his view of the final condition of the wicked; and soon this became a great doctrine with a large portion of the brethren who believed in Mr. Miller's views; they also endorsed the kindred topic of the sleep of the dead from death till the resurrection. This has led to different positions.

A paper was started at Rochester, N. Y., called the "Glad Tidings," which, with various changes in name and position, continues till now. The "Midnight Cry"—at first published in New York city daily, afterwards weekly—was united to the "Advent Herald." As early as 1846, a paper was begun in Hartford, Conn., called the "Bible Advocate." It was afterwards merged into the "Harbinger" at Rochester.

In September, 1850, the "Advent Watchman" was started in Hartford. It continued for several years and was finally called the "Christian Reformer," in 1855.

The "World's Crisis" was first issued in Lowell, Mass., in 1854. A paper was published monthly for a while at Moline, Ill. The "Cross and Crown" was published two years at Machias Port, Me. There is a paper now published in Michigan, called the "Advent Review," which has been in existence a number of years.

Among the more important papers published by those who believe in the views which have distinguished us, is the "Bible Examiner," by Eld. Geo. Storrs, at Philadelphia and New York, but recently discontinued. It is not our object to mention names, whether more or less distinguished; or we might mention many and perhaps give a more distinct idea. We found it impossible to proceed without naming some men.

A Second Advent Conference was called at Albany, N. Y., April 29, 1845.

The question of our existence as a people would be difficult, if we were to identify a name constantly employed, or constant uniformity of sentiment. Yet there appear elements from a given time, which, to one familiar with the meetings, ministers, doctrines, peculiarities of the cause in which we are engaged, are sufficient to identify a class. We date back but a few years—only to 1839—at the farthest. I should prefer to say 1843, for at that time the interest appeared to have reached a point (owing to the expectation that 1843 would reveal Christ) which had gathered a people out of all the different churches of the land, (with many sinners converted,) which gave character, if not name, to all who were looking for the coming of Christ and his literal kingdom. The disappointment of that year left the meetings, for that is the name we must use, somewhat broken; still there had been a starting point, and the doctrines which had been preached afforded a rallying point: recovery followed, and 1844 followed not simply as a year, in the Christian era, but as a great stand point, from which we could look, and to which we may still look—that in its utmost reaction did not destroy us.

As a general fact, we shall find all the older brethren among us, whatever might have been their relations to the church before, referring to the experience of that time, (1843) and the great work of that period—the expectation and coming out, connected with that time—as the point from which we began to exist. This is only a short time to have lived as a sect, [illegible], denomination or party; but in [illegible] we have done a great deal of done by this instrumentality we cannot doubt; and that much more might have been effected we cannot deny.

But the writer having been in this cause from the outset, and knowing what have been its phases and positions—its prosperity and its adversity—is prepared to speak of its rise. And whatever it may have known of exaltation, it certainly has known depression, which has called forth the sympathy, more particularly of those who were in the cause from the beginning, and had left other church relations to labor in this gospel of the kingdom. One thing must be confessed by all, (many will gladly confess it, from their desire to be free from all connection with such preaching,) the nearness of the coming and kingdom of God has been constantly set forth by us. The kingdom, the resurrection, the sleep of the saints, the destruction of the wicked, the day of judgment, the restoration of this earth as the final abode of the saints; the future position of Christ on David's throne,—have been urged upon the people of God, and the world, by us, as by no other people for the last fifteen years. If we have lived since we began to work, then it may be hoped we shall work while we live.

"In nearly a thousand places Advent congregations have been raised up, numbering, as nearly as I can estimate, some fifty thousand believers."—Miller's Apology and Defence, Aug. 1, 1845. This will show that, so far as numbers would go to make a religious body, those entertaining our views, with whatever difference of opinion, or deviations from the original preaching on some points; or with however wide differences and positions now, we were large enough then as a whole to have been a people.

From the time at which we contend we should be counted a living branch, important conferences have been held in New York and Boston; positions slightly varying have become immensely important standards. And still mighty interests are involved in the questions—are we a people, or several peoples, or a motley gathering of ungained, incohesive elements, in everlasting conflict? W. S. C.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 23, 1858.

Our Visit.

No. II.

We parted with our readers at Danielsonville, Ct. During the Lord's day, May 30th, we had a 5 o'clock meeting at Williamsville. The house was very much crowded, as it was expected that a Spiritualist, who had lectured in the place, would reply to our remarks. We endeavored to show that the whole man dies, and remains unconscious till the resurrection. At the close of the discourse, the Spiritualist, who appeared to be a noble specimen of humanity, made some objections to our position, but the Lord gave us a rich blessing, and a rejoicing victory. We urged him to come over on the Lord's side, and have a share in the everlasting kingdom.

The great truth of the sleep of the dead, and the literal resurrection of the same, is gaining ground among the believers in the Bible, and many express the opinion that the people must either embrace this doctrine, or Spiritualism. It is evident that the minds of the people are in a transition state, halting between two opinions; but the majority appear to be turning in favor of the great delusion of these last days. A dark cloud is rising in the moral horizon of this world. The prophetical light of the Bible is unheeded, therefore the people must of necessity be groping in the dark, in danger of plunging into perdition. Millions are on the brink of eternal ruin, in consequence of following this ignis fatuus held out by demons—the fallen angels—who are trying in all possible ways to persuade us that they are the spirits of our friends, thus deceiving the people and cutting them loose from the moorings of truth, and leaving them to struggle with the rapids and whirlpools of error, or to plunge the cataract, and dash upon the rocks of destruction below, and be forever engulphed by the dark waves of oblivion.

Another fearful fact is this: many of the watchmen are asleep at their posts, heedless of the hour of danger, while this wolf is making an easy prey of their flocks. We fear the blood of the lost will be required at their hands. Like the [illegible] or [illegible], they give a silly look when the alarm cry reaches their ear, and intoxicating breath of worldly applause. The love of praise from this vain world has made them as Sampson shorn of his locks. They attempt, at times, to rise and combat the foe, but alas! their strength is gone, and like a ship at sea, flying before the wind, with compass lost, helm torn away, surrounded by the darkness of night, they are driven and tossed by popular opinion, only "blind leaders of the blind," prepared to fall together in ruin at last.

Wednesday night, on the arrival of the steamboat train from Boston, we took the cars, in company with Bro. Berick, for Norwich; thence to New London on the splendid steamer Commonwealth, bound for New York.

Thursday, we visited the monument and old fort at Groton Heights, where Colonel Ledyard and others fell at the hand of a merciless enemy, in 1781. In the fort is a well of most excellent water, a brick house, a wooden one, and the old magazine. After some sad reflections upon the miseries and evils of war, we wound our way out through a covered walk in the walls, and a trench leading away from the fort, where they passed to and from the fortification, sheltered from the fire and observation of the enemy.

A little way down the hill is a modern fort, with cannon mounted, and stacks of balls, prepared for bloody action. We hope they will never be used. Let the Prince of peace come, and put an eternal end to all war, sin and misery.

How bright the prospect before the christian. He sees Eden in fair bloom again, and all the good basking in the sunshine of celestial glory, where no booming cannon ever roars, or dying groan is heard,—where no tear ever falls, or heavy sigh swells the aching heart; but where balmy peace and sparkling joy forever and ever abound. Praise the Lord for the hope of a home where we may truly say, this is Paradise. A home where

"Sickness, sorrow, pain and death
Are felt and feared no more."

At 3 o'clock, P. M., we took passage on the Steamer L. Boardman, Capt. Bates, bound for Sagharbor. We had a very pleasant sail across the Sound, and arrived in port about 6 o'clock, and found Bro. David Bunn, from the Indian settlement, waiting to take us to his hospitable home. After riding fourteen miles on a good road, surrounded by delightful scenery of flowers, blooming orchards, streams and ponds and beautiful gardens, we arrived among this quiet and unoffending people, and met a most hearty reception. If one wishes to know the true meaning of hospitality, let them visit among these natives who have been abused and crushed by those who should have taught them the way to Christ. As it is, most of our white population have reason to learn lessons of honesty and virtue of these whom they have so long oppressed.

This tribe is composed of about two hundred and fifty souls, situated on the Southeastern side of Long Island, on a level portion of land, bordering on the Shinnecock bay, from which are annually taken about fifty thousand bushels of the best clams in the world. These Indians live in comfortable, framed houses, which are well taken care of by good housekeepers. They hold their land in common, each one cultivating what he pleases, raising his own corn, rye, oats, potatoes, &c., besides catching fish and clams for family use and for the market. We have never seen better governed children, or those characterized by better behavior. When desired to do any thing, they obey at once, instead of stopping to ask, "what for," or to say, "I shan't," as many do among those who profess to be well bred. While observing their family government, we could not help thinking of the Bible account of Abraham. Says the Lord, "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him."

Although this tribe has been very inhumanly treated, at different times, by the whites, yet these oppressions have been patiently born with a christian spirit, worthy of imitation by those who make higher professions. As a people, they are free from hypocrisy and affectation. They are noted for their strict honesty in all their business operations. Their word is as good as their note or bond. They can well be reckoned among the noble sons and daughters of the human race. Most of the men are now, or have been engaged in the whale fishery.

Saturday afternoon, we had a pleasant sail on the bay, visiting the new light house at its entrance. This light-house was opened the first of last Jan., and is [illegible] lense, lamps and reflector were imported from France, and cost about eleven thousand dollars. We felt well paid for a long walk up spiral stairs about one hundred and seventy feet, to see that great lense employed to light the tempest-tossed mariner on the trackless deep. When the sun shone upon it, the prismatic colors of the rainbow appeared in such numbers and magnificence as we never before witnessed.

After looking far out upon land and ocean from this high tower, we wound our way down, and sailed away before a gentle breeze to the beach, where we gazed in silent awe at the angry foam of the surging waves, as they dashed high upon the shore. We stood where silence is unknown,—where the waters never rest. We here felt how striking the prophet's representation of the wicked, when he says, "the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." Bro. Berick went out into the foaming serf and wrested awhile with the proud and lofty waves, but returned satisfied that man in his strength is but a puny mortal—the sport of winds and waves. We felt it to be a good place to learn humility, and lay aside all boasting, and trust in Him who said,

"Will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it; and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?"

It seemed almost as though we stood in the presence of God, who was thus speaking to the waters of the mighty deep, while they struggled with gigantic strength to reach us, but they could not go beyond "the bound." We feasted on the sight till the approaching evening shades hastened us home to the worship of Him whose works we had viewed with delighted admiration.

Our meetings. These were interesting, and, we hope, attended with good results. Lord's day, June 6th, we met in the grove, and had a large congregation, which gave good attention. Many came several miles to meet with us, and we trust that some of the seed sown will bring forth fruit to the glory of God. Five of the natives were buried with Christ in baptism, and in the evening twenty-one of them sat down to the table of the Lord, to commemorate his death and sufferings. We all felt that we were sitting together in a heavenly place.

Early Monday morning, we left these christian friends, loaded with their kind words and deeds, and again floated away upon the calm bosom of the sound, enjoying a most delightful passage to New London, in the Steamer L. Boardman, Capt. Bates, who is a very pleasant and gentlemanly commander. We were very much pleased with the kind treatment received from all connected with the boat. We spent our time in a very agreeable manner, singing the sweet songs of Zion, echoing along the verdant shore, as though all nature was participating in our comfort, and desired to joy with us in our delightful passage.

Campmeeting.

The campmeeting committee have decided to commence our great annual campmeeting at Wilbraham, the 23d of August. Particulars hereafter.

Anonymous Signatures.

Dear Brn. and Sisters:—Though my pen has been suffered to lie still for some time past, I assure you my interest in the cause of our Lord and Master continues unabated.

Neither do I stand an uninterested spectator of the times in which we live, or a cursory reader of the Crisis. I have been highly interested in almost all the communications over a plain, intelligible signature, thereby manifesting an honesty and nobleness of soul, which should ever characterize a servant of the living God.

And now, my very dear Brethren and Sisters, suffer me to inquire what means so much anonymous writing in our family medium for a few months past? I know the world act thus. I know that secular periodicals abound with the like. But for the Crisis, whose votaries have professed to "come out from the world," to appear with half a dozen or more anonymous communications, carries a look averse to that yea and nay simplicity which should ever characterize the follower of the humble Nazarene. "He, our blessed Lord and Master, says, "except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Now when one is prompted to write something for the [illegible] ship with, then is afraid or ashamed to affix his name thereto, does it not argue a want of that humility which characterizes the docile little child?

My dear friends, perhaps you do not know that this anonymous writing is injuring the paper you undertake to sustain. But could you hear the dissatisfaction there is on the account, my charity prompts me to believe you would no longer append a fictitious name, or two or three meaningless stars, at the conclusion of your otherwise excellent articles.

If you desire your articles read, let the household know you. Depend upon it, those anonymous articles, if read at all, are not read with that interest—will not be likely to leave that lasting impression, as though they had known the name of the author, his or her place of residence, &c.

Yes, there is a satisfaction in knowing WHERE things, especially EXCELLENT things, come from: whether from Maine or Mississippi.

Why our brother Editor, with his love of open frankness, has suffered this thing thus far, is more than I can solve. I know he has desired your name again and again; but still you persist. Friends, where is that spirit "easy to be entreated?" To continue thus, is it practicing the golden rule of doing as you wish to be done by? If not, I entreat you to desist. What good can possibly accrue from your withholding your name?

I am happy to see that some have reformed in this particular. Will not all the dear friends follow their example? Upon reflection I think you will think it best to do so.

It is true that some are capable of writing better things than they practice. In such a case, perhaps the article would be read with a better zest, by withholding the real name. But it is to be hoped, that no such persons write for the Crisis. No, brethren and sisters, "I am persuaded better things of you."

I do not say there can not a case exist where the real name should be withheld. For example, suppose there exists a common evil in the ministry; i. e., in their manner of communicating to their hearers. They are rash, or may be they use the name of God with apparent irreverence, &c. An inferior feels the evil should be reproved through the public medium, and thinks it would be better received by suppressing the real name. Perhaps it would be so. But when intelligent brethren write on such glorious topics as the coming and kingdom of our Lord and other kindred doctrines, and then suppress their real name, I hardly know what to think.

Well, by this time I presume you will think I make much of a name. Well, really, I have said much more about it than I expected. I commenced with the idea of writing a few thoughts on another subject, intending just to hit the evil I have mentioned, but my mind has run as you have read, and thus I have written. But I really feel there is something in a name, don't you? When you meet a dear Bro. or Sr. in Christ, does it not inspire you with deeper and more fragrant emotions of christian affection, to have them pronounce your name in addition to Bro. or Sr., than to meet you with "How do you do Bro. or Sr.," without the name? Is not pronouncing the name calculated to produce a reciprocity of affection? I think this must have been the idea of the loving disciple when he gave the command to "greet the friends by NAME. 3 John 19.

Yours in Christ,
BEULAH MATHEWSON.

For the Crisis.

My Religious Belief.

No. II.

DEAR BRO. GRANT; and all who may read these articles of my belief; I would say, I do desire to believe the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. "If any man speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in him. I do not believe in the natural immortality of man. And why I do not believe it is because God's word does not teach any such doctrine.

11. But I do believe "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Not an immortal soul.) "And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul." "And the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it and to keep it. And . . God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, that thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest of it thou shalt surely die." And now instead of man's being in possession of immortality, he forfeited the right to it by his disobedience to God's holy law. And God said, "Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil, and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden, cherubims and a flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life.

And now, as the stream cannot rise higher than the fountain, man did not become immortal before his transgression; and it was impossible afterwords. Now the question arises, What is man? Job says, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" Paul says, "This mortal must put on immortality," this corruption must be raised in incorruption." Moses, the servant of God, says, "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set life and death before you." The apostle Paul says, "The wages of sin is death;" which could not be, if man was immortal. For immortality is not subject to death!

12. I believe that God "ONLY hath immortality." I believe also that our Lord and Savior hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. And Paul speaking to the Roman brethren tells us how we may obtain immortality; it is, "By patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality;" &c. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life." When shall the saints of God put on Immortality? Ans. At the sound of the seventh or last trumpet; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead (in Christ) shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed, &c. When and where shall we inherit eternal life? "In the world to come eternal life." "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory."

Many are ready to tell us, that dead folks are alive when they are dead! I thought so once; and that they even knew more when they were dead, than they did when they were alive. How inconsistent! But I have been convinced by divine truth, to believe that "The dead know not any thing." The blessed David declares respecting the dying man, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day HIS THOUGHTS PERISH!" If any person is destitute of thoughts, how can he be alive?

Popular theology teaches us that saints not only go to God when dead, and praise him, but they remember Him. The word of the Lord teaches us that, "In death there is no remembrance of thee; (God;) in the grave, who shall give thee thanks?" Again, it says; "All they that go down to the dust shall bow before him, and none can keep alive his own soul." We hear David speaking again; "He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence." Then the Psalmist asks the following questions: "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave? This claims a negative answer. For the same divinely inspired person declares, "God shall redeem my soul from the power of the grave."

It is generally contended that love, hatred and envy are passions of the soul. While the soul exists it will not be shorn of its passions. But the soul dies, therefore its love, hatred and envy will be PERISHED;—or cease to exist.

Many are repeatedly saying, that Moses, Job and Daniel are in heaven praising God; but I don't believe it.

13. I believe that they are "in the dust of the earth"—"in the "land of the enemy." What does Jesus say about this? He says that "no man hath ascended up to heaven, but .. the Son of Man which is in heaven." Now can any one have the bare-faced effrontery to say, that Jesus Christ was mistaken! I heard a minister say, not long ago, that David, the sweet singer of Israel, was in glory, praising God! I believe that king David died in the Lord, and will sleep in Jesus till the morn of the resurrection; then he will come forth with all the saints, to meet the Lord in the air, and be forever with the Lord. What does the apostle Peter say about David being in heaven? He says "David is not ascended into the heavens."

as a distinct interest with the excitement of 1840—1843. Mr. Miller had begun to labor more publicly in 1839. A powerful revival followed. Many ministers and members of churches became zealous in the defence of his views. At first, he labored to show from Prophetic Chronology that the coming of Christ would transpire about the year 1843. Afterward he, having inspired the positive conviction in other minds that the Lord Jesus would return to this world in 1843, became more positive himself. He was also a believer in the position of the brethren, almost unanimously endorsed, that the reign of Christ would begin on earth in 1844—upon the tenth day of the seventh month, according to the Jewish mode of reckoning.

We must commence our history from the work of the Lord in connection with the preaching which urged the establishment of the Kingdom in 1843. Eld. Geo. Storrs, who had begun to publish upon the destruction of the wicked, about this time issued his "Six Sermons" on that subject, and became a full believer in the immediate coming and kingdom of Christ, and was identified as one of the ministers who labored effectually upon this question. Others embraced his view of the final condition of the wicked; and soon this became a great doctrine with a large portion of the brethren who believed in Mr. Miller's views; they also endorsed the kindred topic of the sleep of the dead from death till the resurrection. This has led to different positions.

A paper was started at Rochester, N. Y., called the "Glad Tidings," which, with various changes in name and position, continues till now. The "Midnight Cry"—at first published in New York city daily, afterwards weekly—was united to the "Advent Herald." As early as 1846, a paper was begun in Hartford, Conn., called the "Bible Advocate." It was afterwards merged into the "Harbinger" at Rochester.

In September, 1850, the "Advent Watchman" was started in Hartford. It continued for several years and was finally called the "Christian Reformer," in 1855.

The "World's Crisis" was first issued in Lowell, Mass., in 1854. A paper was published monthly for a while at Moline, Ill. The "Cross and Crown" was published two years at Machias Port, Me. There is a paper now published in Michigan, called the "Advent Review," which has been in existence a number of years.

Among the more important papers published by those who believe in the views which have distinguished us, is the "Bible Examiner," by Eld. Geo. Storrs, at Philadelphia and New York, but recently discontinued. It is not our object to mention names, whether more or less distinguished; or we might mention many and perhaps give a more distinct idea. We found it impossible to proceed without naming some men.

A Second Advent Conference was called at Albany, N. Y., April 29, 1845.

The question of our existence as a people would be difficult, if we were to identify a name constantly employed, or constant uniformity of sentiment. Yet there appear elements from a given time, which, to one familiar with the meetings, ministers, doctrines, peculiarities of the cause in which we are engaged, are sufficient to identify a class. We date back but a few years—only to 1839—at the farthest. I should prefer to say 1843, for at that time the interest appeared to have reached a point (owing to the expectation that 1843 would reveal Christ) which had gathered a people out of all the different churches of the land, (with many sinners converted,) which gave character, if not name, to all who were looking for the coming of Christ and his literal kingdom. The disappointment of that year left the meetings, for that is the name we must use, somewhat broken; still there had been a starting point, and the doctrines which had been preached afforded a rallying point: recovery followed, and 1844 followed not simply as a year, in the Christian era, but as a great stand point, from which we could look, and to which we may still look—that in its utmost reaction did not destroy us.

As a general fact, we shall find all the older brethren among us, whatever might have been their relations to the church before, referring to the experience of that time, (1843) and the great work of that period—the expectation and coming out, connected with that time—as the point from which we began to exist. This is only a short time to have lived as a sect, [illegible] or party; but in [illegible] done by this instrumentality we cannot doubt; and that much more might have been effected we cannot deny.

But the writer having been in this cause from the outset, and knowing what have been its phases and positions—its prosperity and its adversity—is prepared to speak of its rise. And whatever it may have known of exaltation, it certainly has known depression, which has called forth the sympathy, more particularly of those who were in the cause from the beginning, and had left other church relations to labor in this gospel of the kingdom. One thing must be confessed by all, (many will gladly confess it, from their desire to be free from all connection with such preaching,) the nearness of the coming and kingdom of God has been constantly set forth by us. The kingdom, the resurrection, the sleep of the saints, the destruction of the wicked, the day of judgment, the restoration of this earth as the final abode of the saints; the future position of Christ on David's throne,—have been urged upon the people of God, and the world, by us, as by no other people for the last fifteen years. If we have lived since we began to work, then it may be hoped we shall work while we live.

"In nearly a thousand places Advent congregations have been raised up, numbering, as nearly as I can estimate, some fifty thousand believers."—Miller's Apology and Defence, Aug. 1, 1845. This will show that, so far as numbers would go to make a religious body, those entertaining our views, with whatever difference of opinion, or deviations from the original preaching on some points; or with however wide differences and positions now, we were large enough then as a whole to have been a people.

From the time at which we contend we should be counted a living branch, important conferences have been held in New York and Boston; positions slightly varying have become immensely important standards. And still mighty interests are involved in the questions—are we a people, or several peoples, or a motley gathering of ungained, incohesive elements, in everlasting conflict?

We felt well paid for a long walk up spiral stairs about one hundred and seventy feet, to see that great lense employed to light the tempest-tossed mariner on the trackless deep. When the sun shone upon it, the prismatic colors of the rainbow appeared in such numbers and magnificence as we never before witnessed.

After looking far out upon land and ocean from this high tower, we wound our way down, and sailed away before a gentle breeze to the beach, where we gazed in silent awe at the angry foam of the surging waves, as they dashed high upon the shore. We stood where silence is unknown,—where the waters never rest. We here felt how striking the prophet's representation of the wicked, when he says, "the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." Bro. Berick went out into the foaming serf and wrested awhile with the proud and lofty waves, but returned satisfied that man in his strength is but a puny mortal—the sport of winds and waves. We felt it to be a good place to learn humility, and lay aside all boasting, and trust in Him who said,

"Will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea, by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it; and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?"

It seemed almost as though we stood in the presence of God, who was thus speaking to the waters of the mighty deep, while they struggled with gigantic strength to reach us, but they could not go beyond "the bound." We feasted on the sight till the approaching evening shades hastened us home to the worship of Him whose works we had viewed with delighted admiration.

Our meetings. These were interesting, and, we hope, attended with good results. Lord's day, June 6th, we met in the grove, and had a large congregation, which gave good attention. Many came several miles to meet with us, and we trust that some of the seed sown will bring forth fruit to the glory of God. Five of the natives were buried with Christ in baptism, and in the evening twenty-one of them sat down to the table of the Lord, to commemorate his death and sufferings. We all felt that we were sitting together in a heavenly place.

Early Monday morning, we left these christian friends, loaded with their kind words and deeds, and again floated away upon the calm bosom of the sound, enjoying a most delightful passage to New London, in the Steamer L. Boardman, Capt. Bates, who is a very pleasant and gentlemanly commander. We were very much pleased with the kind treatment received from all connected with the boat. We spent our time in a very agreeable manner, singing the sweet songs of Zion, echoing along the verdant shore, as though all nature was participating in our comfort, and desired to joy with us in our delightful passage.

Campmeeting.

The campmeeting committee have decided to commence our great annual campmeeting at Wilbraham, the 23d of August. Particulars hereafter.

Anonymous Signatures.

Dear Brn. and Sisters:—Though my pen has been suffered to lie still for some time past, I assure you my interest in the cause of our Lord and Master continues unabated.

Neither do I stand an uninterested spectator of the times in which we live, or a cursory reader of the Crisis. I have been highly interested in almost all the communications over a plain, intelligible signature, thereby manifesting an honesty and nobleness of soul, which should ever characterize a servant of the living God.

And now, my very dear Brethren and Sisters, suffer me to inquire what means so much anonymous writing in our family medium for a few months past? I know the world act thus. I know that secular periodicals abound with the like. But for the Crisis, whose votaries have professed to "come out from the world," to appear with half a dozen or more anonymous communications, carries a look averse to that yea and nay simplicity which should ever characterize the follower of the humble Nazarene. "He, our blessed Lord and Master, says, "except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Now when one is prompted to write something for the [illegible] ship with, then is afraid or ashamed to affix his name thereto, does it not argue a want of that humility which characterizes the docile little child?

My dear friends, perhaps you do not know that this anonymous writing is injuring the paper you undertake to sustain. But could you hear the dissatisfaction there is on the account, my charity prompts me to believe you would no longer append a fictitious name, or two or three meaningless stars, at the conclusion of your otherwise excellent articles.

If you desire your articles read, let the household know you. Depend upon it, those anonymous articles, if read at all, are not read with that interest—will not be likely to leave that lasting impression, as though they had known the name of the author, his or her place of residence, &c.

Yes, there is a satisfaction in knowing WHERE things, especially EXCELLENT things, come from: whether from Maine or Mississippi.

Why our brother Editor, with his love of open frankness, has suffered this thing thus far, is more than I can solve. I know he has desired your name again and again; but still you persist. Friends, where is that spirit "easy to be entreated?" To continue thus, is it practicing the golden rule of doing as you wish to be done by? If not, I entreat you to desist. What good can possibly accrue from your withholding your name?

I am happy to see that some have reformed in this particular. Will not all the dear friends follow their example? Upon reflection I think you will think it best to do so.

It is true that some are capable of writing better things than they practice. In such a case, perhaps the article would be read with a better zest, by withholding the real name. But it is to be hoped, that no such persons write for the Crisis. No, brethren and sisters, "I am persuaded better things of you."

I do not say there can not a case exist where the real name should be withheld. For example, suppose there exists a common evil in the ministry; i. e., in their manner of communicating to their hearers. They are rash, or may be they use the name of God with apparent irreverence, &c. An inferior feels the evil should be reproved through the public medium, and thinks it would be better received by suppressing the real name. Perhaps it would be so. But when intelligent brethren write on such glorious topics as the coming and kingdom of our Lord and other kindred doctrines, and then suppress their real name, I hardly know what to think.

Well, by this time I presume you will think I make much of a name. Well, really, I have said much more about it than I expected. I commenced with the idea of writing a few thoughts on another subject, intending just to hit the evil I have mentioned, but my mind has run as you have read, and thus I have written. But I really feel there is something in a name, don't you? When you meet a dear Bro. or Sr. in Christ, does it not inspire you with deeper and more fragrant emotions of christian affection, to have them pronounce your name in addition to Bro. or Sr., than to meet you with "How do you do Bro. or Sr.," without the name? Is not pronouncing the name calculated to produce a reciprocity of affection? I think this must have been the idea of the loving disciple when he gave the command to "greet the friends by NAME. 3 John 19.

Yours in Christ,

For the Crisis.

My Religious Belief.

No. II.

DEAR BRO. GRANT; and all who may read these articles of my belief; I would say, I do desire to believe the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. "If any man speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in him. I do not believe in the natural immortality of man. And why I do not believe it is because God's word does not teach any such doctrine.

11. But I do believe "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Not an immortal soul.) "And so it is written, the first man Adam was made a living soul." "And the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it and to keep it. And . . . God commanded the man, saying, of every tree of [illegible] the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, that thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest of it thou shalt surely die." And now instead of man's being in possession of immortality, he forfeited the right to it by his disobedience to God's holy law. And God said, "Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil, and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden, cherubims and a flaming sword which turned every way to keep the way of the tree of life.

And now, as the stream cannot rise higher than the fountain, man did not become immortal before his transgression; and it was impossible afterwords. Now the question arises, What is man? Job says, "Shall mortal man be more just than God?" Paul says, "This mortal must put on immortality," this corruption must be raised in incorruption." Moses, the servant of God, says, "I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set life and death before you." The apostle Paul says, "The wages of sin is death;" which could not be, if man was immortal. For immortality is not subject to death!

12. I believe that God "ONLY hath immortality." I believe also that our Lord and Savior hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel. And Paul speaking to the Roman brethren tells us how we may obtain immortality; it is, "By patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality;" &c. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life." When shall the saints of God put on Immortality? Ans. At the sound of the seventh or last trumpet; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead (in Christ) shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed, &c. When and where shall we inherit eternal life? "In the world to come eternal life." "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we appear with him in glory."

Many are ready to tell us, that dead folks are alive when they are dead! I thought so once; and that they even knew more when they were dead, than they did when they were alive. How inconsistent! But I have been convinced by divine truth, to believe that "The dead know not any thing." The blessed David declares respecting the dying man, "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day HIS THOUGHTS PERISH!" If any person is destitute of thoughts, how can he be alive?

Popular theology teaches us that saints not only go to God when dead, and praise him, but they remember Him. The word of the Lord teaches us that, "In death there is no remembrance of thee; (God;) in the grave, who shall give thee thanks?" Again, it says; "All they that go down to the dust shall bow before him, and none can keep alive his own soul." We hear David speaking again; "He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence." Then the Psalmist asks the following questions: "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave? This claims a negative answer. For the same divinely inspired person declares, "God shall redeem my soul from the power of the grave."

It is generally contended that love, hatred and envy are passions of the soul. While the soul exists it will not be shorn of its passions. But the soul dies, therefore its love, hatred and envy will be PERISHED;—or cease to exist.

Many are repeatedly saying, that Moses, Job and Daniel are in heaven praising God; but I don't believe it.

13. I believe that they are "in the dust of the earth"—"in the "land of the enemy." What does Jesus say about this? He says that "no man hath ascended up to heaven, but . . the Son of Man which is in heaven." Now can any one have the bare-faced effrontery to say, that Jesus Christ was mistaken! I heard a minister say, not long ago, that David, the sweet singer of Israel, was in glory, praising God! I believe that king David died in the Lord, and will sleep in Jesus till the morn of the resurrection; then he will come forth with all the saints, to meet the Lord in the air, and be forever with the Lord. What does the apostle Peter say about David being in heaven? He says "David is not ascended into the heavens."

I believe he told the truth respecting David; then he is not in heaven.

I believe also that the bodies of the wicked return to dust again, and the spirit (or breath) to God who gave it. There seems to be nothing said about an immortal soul going to God. It is evident from abundant scripture testimony, that God gives to man the breath of life; and then at death he takes it again. He does not take the soul or body to himself at death; this he does at the resurrection. They that have done good shall come forth to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation.

P. TANDY.

From A. H. Bolton.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel desirous to communicate some of my thoughts to the friends of Jesus through the Crisis. I believe the enemy has come down in these last days in great wrath, knowing that his time is short, and if possible will cause us to fall from our own steadfastness; he is setting snares on our right hand and on our left, and we need to have on the whole armor of God, that we may be able to withstand all the wiles of the enemy. The prophet Daniel informs us that many shall "be purified, made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand." I do believe that there is a class of people that are seeking for purity of heart, although assailed by many trials and disappointments, who will not give over the struggle until Christ shall be revealed in the clouds of heaven. We looked for the Lord a few years ago and were disappointed, but the promise stands sure, "The wise shall understand." Glory to God.

Brothers and sisters, let us awake from our slumbers; let us seek to know the perfect will of God, and come up on the higher and holier ground. My prayer to God is that we all who profess to love Jesus, and love his appearing, might have our hearts fired anew for immortal glory. The Lord is at hand; let us live by faith and not by sight. Let us examine our own hearts daily and see if we have the spirit of Christ; "For if we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his."

When we take the blessed volume and look into the word of God, and see how faithful he has been to fulfill his word thus far, it seems that we cannot but believe that the remaining items will be fulfilled.

I will cite your attention, my readers, to the opening of the sixth seal, and what followed; "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood: and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman and every freeman, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb."

How soon the above remaining items will be fulfilled, I know not. But the Lord is at hand. Sinner, what shall I say to you Will you refuse offered mercy, and call for the rocks and mountains to fall on you? or will you turn to God and live? Stop and reflect; now, Jesus stands ready with outstretched arms to receive you; do not delay, but seek an interest in Christ while it is an accepted time and a day of salvation.

Yours looking for Jesus to come,

From Eld. Jona. Wilson.

DEAR BRO GRANT:—I am once more at home after a five days visit from house to house upon my two staves with which I walk, as John preached daily in his exhortation. My health is good, and I have as it were just commenced my second half century's labors, in the gospel, in good spirits and strong faith, and in hopes to live yet to see the Lord come before I die. We have many here that wish to serve God, that feel reluctant to join the churches. I am now about to circulate the pattern from the apostolic church which came in your last number. It is the first thing of the kind that I have ever seen that I was willing to put my name on, to form a church, [illegible] never excluded from them and the reason was, the last church of which I was a member gave me a recommendation to any church of the same order. That church disbanded, and was never afterwards returned, so that my name dropped out of the Baptist association and denomination to this day. Fifteen years ago this blessed providence was bestowed upon me by the Lord, so I was not excluded; but had a similar escape to that of St. Paul's, when he was let down in a basket by the wall and so escaped. 2 Cor. 11: 33. For afterwards some did desire to arrest me. By their own letter my character was defended up to the day I left them.

I am going out to gather a company to the before mentioned article. I mean to get as many as I can of those that have been excluded from the churches for believing and maintaining the truth; perhaps some discontented ones also. I am not to be their captain. I am enlisting them for the antitype of David, in the gospel. Perhaps their circumstances may be somewhat similar. Read 1 Sam. 22: 2.

In a few weeks I will send you the result of my labors. We had a great time here last Lord's day. Eld. Low of Fredonia preached here and baptized six young converts. There was some twenty-eight baptized by the Methodist minister, making in all thirty-four. There are yet more coming soon. May we be faithful unto death, and receive a crown of life.

HYMN

Wake from thy slumbers,
Christian, depart!
Signs without number
Speak to thy heart.
Dream not 'mid dark hours
Of sadness and pain—
Fading are earthly powers,
But few days remain.

CHORUS.
Swift the moments onward glide,
Dangers stand on every side;
Let me linger by thy side,
Savior, be mine.

Sounds of deep anguish
Fall on thine ear,
Haughty ones languish,
Vengeance is near.
Longing and sighing
In pleasure and pain,
Warm hearts are praying—
Come, Jesus, and reign.
CHO.

Bright rays are beaming,
Pilgrims to cheer;
Signals are gleaming,
Triumph is near.
Those found with pure hearts,
Will then obtain
Entrance, and share a part
In Eden regained.
CHO.

Death is now vanished,
Life is thine now,
Pleasures once banished
Play on thy brow.
Friends long departed
Greet thee again;
Joyous each bounding heart,
For Eden is gained.

CHORUS.
There Life's river sweetly glides,
Thou shalt linger by its side,
While eternal ages glide
Eden is gained.

Millions advancing,
Robed in pure white;
Bright beams are glancing,
Radiant with light;
Anthems are swelling
In melting strains;
The ransomed are telling
Emmanuel reigns.

S. S. BREWER.

From Bro. B. P. Manning.

BRO. GRANT:—I attended the conference at Worcester, and it was one of the best meetings that I ever enjoyed. Love and union prevailed. There was no contention about different views in the meetings. It was truly a feast of fat things, full of marrow to my soul. Glory be to God forever. May the good Lord reward those dear brethren and sisters in W. for their hospitality and kindness to those that attended the meeting.

Well, we are almost home. Praise the Lord. Brethren and sisters, are we standing out on the word of the Lord, looking for our Master to come and take us home? Are we ready? Do we believe the word of God, the whole of it? If so, then we are a happy people. Truly these are the last day perils. Now is the time, when we need the whole armor of God, to be able to stand against the wiles of the Devil. I believe that the Lord is doing up his last work for his church, and giving the last call of mercy. Dear brethren and sisters, let us be wise as serpents and harmless as doves. Soon the trump will be blown and the dead will be raised, and we shall be changed and be caught away to meet our blessed Jesus in the air, to suffer no more forever.

Question.

As it is believed and argued by some that Christ will not reign over saints immortal, but that he will reign over the nations, I wish to ask the following questions.

1. Is the "kingdom" and "reign" of Christ ever to end? if not, will the nations exist forever?

2. If "Christ is to reign forever," and the nations of the wicked are to be "destroyed," how is Christ to reign over them for ever?

3. Who constitute the house of Jacob over whom Christ shall reign forever? Luke 1: 33.

C. F.

☞ I noticed an article in the Crisis from Bro. Grew, headed, "The Son of God." He shows clearly that Jesus Christ had a being before he was born of the virgin Mary. Query. Was he an immortal being? If so, how could he go through all this change, and, at last, "give up the ghost," and "pour out his soul unto death?"

Will Bro. Grew Give us some light on this point?

For the Crisis.

THE CUP OF SALVATION.

Yes, I'll take the cup—be it pleasure or sorrow;
Aught that will save—be it glory or shame:
The loneliest path may be green on the morrow,
The cloud that is darkest brings blessings of rain.

Yes, I'll take the cup—be it death or desertion;
Nature recoils, 'tis a moment of strife;
Brief is the struggle; it is past, and submission
Says, I'll take the cup, for the promise is life.

Yes, I'll take the cup—I am thirsting to drink it,
Sure I can suffer, upheld by His power;
I see the bright crown, by the cross I must win it,—
Soon will be ended life's bitterest hour.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

HALIFAX, June 15.

The Royal Mail Steamship Europa, Capt. Leitch, from Liverpool 1 P. M., 5th inst., arrived at this port at half past 12 to-day.

BELGIUM.

A collision occurred on the Railroad between Mons and Manage. Nine persons were killed, and about forty severely wounded. The latest dispatch reports the number of dead at 21, wounded 52.

THE CROPS.

Accounts from the south of Europe relative to the grain crops, are not very satisfactory; the yield will, it is believed, be but moderate in Lombardy, Romagna and the Kingdom of Naples.

It is generally considered that in the Provinces of Algiers, Oran, and Constantina, the harvest will be satisfactory.

From Spain the accounts are contradictory.

The London Times' Turin correspondent says that accounts from the provinces and the South of France, respecting the silk crop, are unfavorable, and the disease is again showing itself where it existed last year. Prices are slightly lower, with few sellers.

SWEDEN.

The health of the King of Sweden is so much improved that it is hoped that in a few months he will be able to resume the direction of affairs.

GREECE.

Insurrectionary movements in Candia are said to be extending.

MONTENEGRO.

The London Globe's Paris correspondent telegraphs that an army of 20,000 Turks has been ordered to advance into Montenegro.

The Moniteur publishes a lengthy dispatch from Prince Daniels, giving a detailed account of his battle with the Turks. He admits that De la Rue, his Secretary, asked of Sussiem Pasha permission to pass through the Turkish Camp, in order to go to Klobuck, but he denies that the Turks could infer from that that an armistice had been proposed.

It is stated that France will probably send more men-of-war into the Adriatic, and Paris papers say that six Turkish steamers, with 3600 men and 12 guns, cast anchor on the 31st of May, at Gravosa.

CIRCASSIA.

The Globe's Paris correspondent says, the Circassians have beaten a Russian division, and taken a Russian gun-sloop.

Steps are now being taken by the Order of St. John to re-establish an hospital at Jerusalem for sick pilgrims of all nations; and for the interest taken in this matter by the Empress Eugenia, she has been decorated with the cross of the Order.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

STEAMSHIP VANDERBILT.

INDIA.

Later telegraphic advices had been received from India. Sir Hugh Rose had had an engagement with the rebels, defeating them and killing four hundred.

The rebels are making another stand at Calpee.

Nena Sahib was attempting to make his escape into Central India, and a detachment of European and Ghoorka troops had been repulsed in the mountains.

CHINA.

Dispatches from the Emperor, at Pekin, direct the foreign Plenipotentiaries to return to Canton.

It is further stated that the new Commissioner is gathering forces to [illegible]

GREAT BRITAIN.

The political intelligence is of no striking importance.

The London papers have editorials on the subject of the British outrages on American vessels, mostly taking a moderate view of the question at issue.

The Atlantic Telegraph continues to occupy public attention. The papers publish interesting details of the operations of the electricians and other matters connected with the enterprise.

CANDIA.

The insurrection in Candia was spreading. Five other districts of the island had risen.

There had been a fearful eruption of Vesuvius.

FRANCE.

The French squadron had been ordered to the Adriatic.

It was rumored that the French Minister at Madrid has been recalled.

The Times Paris correspondent says that it is generally admitted that there has not been more commercial distress experienced in Paris since the Revolution of 1848 than at the present moment.

Domestic Summary.

THE DAMAGE BY THE FLOOD.

THE FLOOD AT CAIRO.—Centralia, Ill., June 14.—Reports from Cairo are of a most alarming character. The water still is rising, and is now running over the Ohio levee in several places.

Mr. Ashley, Chief Engineer of the Illinois, gives the opinion that one foot more rise will sweep Cairo entirely away.

Mound City is under water. The depot grounds in the highest part of the town are covered to the depth of four or five inches.

Passengers are conveyed a quarter of a mile from Mound City in boats to the cars.

ALBANY, June 18.—Chicago papers just received contain details of the immense destruction of property at Cairo, through the entire submersion of the town. The assessed valuation in 1857 was nearly $2,000,000, but the papers say this conveys no distinct idea of the actual loss of capital, or of loss sustained by the Illinois Central Railroad Company in actual improvements in Cairo. The last despatch reported the water still rising.

The people of the village of Illinoistown, opposite St. Louis, have all been driven from their homes by the great flood on the Mississippi, which has completely submerged the town, the water in many instances washing into the second story windows of the houses. Destruction reigns triumphant, and the pecuniary loss must be very great.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 18.—The great Yazoo Pass gave way last night, and the channel is now over thirty yards wide, and rapidly increasing in width. The water in the Mississippi has, in consequence, fallen eight or ten feet, and is rushing with terrific force through the opening, felling all the trees in its course. It will deluge the whole Yazoo Valley.

THE FRESHET IN THE ILLINOIS AND WABASH RIVERS.—The Alton Democrat says:—We learn that the Illinois river is at a higher stage now than it has been for several years past. At Grafton the two warehouses of W. Allen, Esq., are flooded, and moved from their foundations; and one report is, that they are destroyed. Most of the houses in the town are in water, some to the depths of four or five feet. A store three miles below Grafton is quite "drowned out." Hundreds of cords of wood, and myriads of fencing, are afloat and lost. Also, a considerable number of cattle and other stock has been lost in the bottom country, and great damage has and will ensue, no doubt, to the farmers in the bottom land all along the Illinois river.

In the Wabash Valley, as represented in the Evansville Journal, the losses by the farmers and property-owners will certainly be equally as heavy. That paper says: "A friend who has been voyaging over the Wabash bottoms in boats and steamers, represents the whole valley to be a lake, in width reaching ten and fifteen miles from shore to shore, and almost requiring a compass to navigate it. He was ferried from Vincennes to Lawrenceville, in Illinois, a distance of ten miles, over water, passing over a settled and cultivated section of the country, now submerged, from six to ten feet deep. These wide, rich bottoms, which yield such stores of food, and contribute so largely to our exports, will be barren and desolate wastes this summer. Those who ordinarily supplied so many mouths by their labor, will themselves seek food this year from others. The amount of the loss is incalculable."

THE MORMONS.—A letter received in Winston, Mo., from Salt Lake City, May 8th, says that the Mormons spoken of by Mr. Gilbert as going to Sonora and to the Russian possessions, were confined exclusively to those Mormons who had gone to Salt Lake from San Bernardino, with a view of protecting the city and entering the Mormon army. The Mormons having determined to have peace, these Mormons were returning to their homes, and were no part of the population of Utah. Although this letter comes from Mormon sources, the explanation seems reasonable.—Traveller.

Captain James Perrin, Fairport, N. Y., who has taken the "Crisis" but a few weeks, requests me to write and "tell them not to stop that paper while the world stands. I'll keep it paid up."

Who else can persuade their friends to try the Crisis for three months? Who will send 50 cents or $1.00, and have it sent to some distant friend for three, or six or twelve months. Come, friends, wake up and see what you can do. Fifty-two visits from the "Crisis" in a year might lead some friend to Christ. Try it and see.

Poetry.

HYMN IN THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

These are thy glorious works, Parent of good,
Almighty! thine this universal frame,
Thus wondrous fair; thyself how wondrous then,
Unspeakable, who sitt'st above these heavens,
To us invisible, or dimly seen
In these thy lowest works: yet these declare
Thy goodness beyond thought and power divine.
Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels; for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night,
Circle his throne rejoicing; ye in heaven,
On earth join, all ye creatures, to extol
Him first, him last, him midst, and without end.

Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn,
Sure pledge of day, that crown'st the smiling morn
With thy bright circlet, praise him in thy sphere,
While day arises, that sweet hour of prime.
Thou Sun, of this great world both eye and soul,
Acknowledge him thy greater; sound his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st.
Moon, that now meet'st the Orient sun, now fliest
With the fix'd stars, fix'd in their orb that flies;
And ye five other wandering fires, that move
In mystic dance, not without song, resound
His praise who out of darkness call'd up light.

Air, and ye elements, the eldest birth
Of Nature's womb, that in quaternion run
Perpetual circle multiform, and mix
And nourish all things, let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Maker still new praise.
Ye mists and exhalations, that now rise
From hill or streaming lake, dusky or gray,
Till the sun paint your fleecy skirts with gold,
In honor to the world's great Author rise;
Whether to deck with clouds the uncolor'd sky,
Or wet the thirsty earth with falling showers,
Rising or falling, still advance his praise.

His praise, ye winds, that from four quarters blow,
Breathe soft or loud; and wave your tops, ye pines,
With every plant, in sign of worship wave.
Fountains, and ye that warble, as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling, tune his praise;
Join voices, all ye living souls; ye birds,
That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,
Bear on your wings and in your notes his praise.
Ye that in waters glide, and ye that walk
The earth, and stately tread or lowly creep,
Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill or valley, fountain or fresh shade,
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise.

For the Crisis.

Gleanings.

BY M. D. W.

Found the following report of an address delivered "by Rev. Peter Smith, an old Methodist minister, rather quaint and blunt in his style."

After an introduction he commences his subject as follows: "Many of you, I am aware, my beloved brethron, are in the habit of 'giving,' as you call it, 'for the support of the Gospel;' but, if I might judge from the little amounts you give, I should be compelled to believe that the 'Gospel' was in no danger of getting the 'gout,' at least in these parts, my beloved brethren. Some men, I know, would like to be clever if they could do it at a small expense, and without much inconvenience. Only a short time ago, my beloved brethren, an old brother came up to one of my colleagues just after he had preached a powerful big sermon, and giving him a smooth quarter, said, 'Now, Bro. John, take that, and preach that everlasting Gospel faithfully while you live.'

Some men, my beloved brethren, do contradict their christian profession by acts of 'human charity' most shockingly. I once knew a brother on one of my circuits, who was quite a prosperous farmer, and who agreed to give six dollars for 'the support of the Gospel' for the year. Some time afterwards he came to me, and asked, 'Bro. Smith,' said he, 'don't you want some apples?' I told him, 'yes, I did, that I would like to have some right well when he brought any to town.' Well, my brethren, a few days afterward the good brother came into town with a full wagon load of what he called 'fall apples.' He asked twenty cents a bushel for them, and he tried to sell them all round town, but he could n't do it, though he offered them at twelve and a half cents. Finding himself in such bad luck, he drove round to the 'parsonage,' and told sister Smith he'd brought her some apples. Well, you see, my beloved brethren, sister Smith just then wanted 'some apples' very much, and she smiled and thanked him, and said she would be glad if he would carry them into the cellar. Well, into the cellar they went, my beloved brethren, ten, twenty, thirty bushels, at twenty cents a bushel, as he told sister Smith; and so you see, my beloved brethren, the six dollars 'quarterage' was paid. But sister Smith didn't [illegible] don't you think the Gospel will taste rather appleish to the poor man for a long time?' 'Yes, indeed,' said I; and I reckon, my brethren, if the good brother is still living, you might find an apple core away down his throat yet.

But, my beloved brethren, I must now draw my remarks to a close, for I know there are some folks who do not like to hear either long speeches or long sermons.

But I must tell you about my brother Jacob Snobbs, my beloved brethren, before I take my seat. Bro. Jacob, you see, for the most part, would, most always, pay his 'quarterage' in mending old boots and shoes, and somehow, notwithstanding brother Jacob was so clever, he did not like the preaching. Said he to me, not long since, my beloved brethren, 'Brother Smith, why is it that preaching don't sound or taste right to me any more—something's the matter I know.' 'Well,' said I, after I'd thought a little bit, 'My dear brother Jacob, I would n't wonder if the Gospel tasted to you like old shoes and boots—like it had too much old leather in it, for that's the kind of "support" you give it.' So it will be, my beloved brethren. 'Let him that hath an ear, hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.'"

The Cross and the Crown.

It is related that Romulus, having conquered the Ceninensians, took the armor of Acron, their king, whom he had killed in single combat, and having cut down a great oak which grew in the camp, hewed it in the form of a trophy; to this he fastened Acron's whole suit of armor, disposed in its proper form; then he put on his own robes, and wearing a crown of laurel upon his head, took the trophy upon his right shoulder, and marched on in front of his troops, singing the song of victory and receiving the acclammations of the people.

So he who will be a true christian must take up the cross, be it never so heavy, and bear it on his journey toward the eternal city of God. But instead of the plaudits of an admiring army, flushed with the excitement of victory—instead of the wild cheering of the enraptured multitude, he must encounter scoffs, and jeers, and derision, and have the contumely of the mass heaped upon him. But he has consolation from above to cheer him on.

"As stars through dark skies stealing,
With tender, holy light;
As tongues of sweet bells pealing
Upon the deep, still night;
So, on his spirit streaming,
A heaven-light is thrown,
And angel-tones come teeming
With sweetest songs of home!"

He has no laurels here; no admiring crowds strew chaplets upon his way, no glory-maddened multitude crowns him with the bays. But when his journey is ended, the gates of the beautiful city will open to him, and while a flood of light far eclipsing the most glorious beams of the morning's brilliant gush, bursts enrapturingly upon him, the cross will drop from his shoulder, and the crown all glittering with stars will be placed upon his brow, and he will "enter into rest!"

J. O. B.

"If Children, then Heirs."

The poor christian, who is endeavoring to follow in the footsteps of his Master, though his way is thorny and his trials many, has the consolation to know that he is an heir—an heir of God. The glorious prospect that looms up before him, speeds him for the prize. He feels that he has abundant witness of the title being sure. Therefore he falters not, nor is weary, but takes courage at every step. His heirship depends upon his being a child; consequently, he looks for evidence that he is one. He knows, or thinks he knows, that if any man is in Christ Jesus, he is a changed being—a new creature—has passed from death unto life—is born—yes, I will venture the assertion—is born of God! He knows that according to the word the devil has children, and he thinks it not strange that God should have children also. He may not be able to give a theological description of the particular modus operandi by which he becomes God's son; but he heartily looks up and cries Abba Father. Take away his sonship and you destroy his hope, since none but children are heirs. Tell him that they only are the children of God who are the children of the resurrection, and you cut off his title to immortality—you take away the earnest of his inheritance—the pledge of his redemption. [illegible] man, in token of his change. He only waits for the manifestation of the sons of God, when he shall come forth in the likeness of his Redeemer. When the resurrection shall give an external, unmistakable representation of his character, and powerfully portray his right to the tree of life, which grows in the midst of the paradise of God. He rejoices in the liberty "wherewith Christ has made him free," and does not desire to be again entangled in the yoke of bondage. He is a pilgrim and a stranger here, a citizen of a better country—the "free woman's" son of promise. As a new born babe, he gladly drinks in the mothers milk (gospel truth) that he may grow thereby. Leave him then to enjoy the breasts of her consolations. Do not decoy him from the sweet flowing treasure. Let him still believe that he is not a mere "servant, but a son," and if a son, an heir of God through Jesus Christ.—Selected by H.

Bad Temper.

The greatest plague in life is a bad temper. It is a great waste of time to complain of other people's faults; the best thing is to amend our own; and the next best quality is to learn to bear with what we meet in others. A bad temper will always wear itself out, if it find no one to resent it; and this very knowledge is worth a trifle. Irascibility is very injurious to health, and so, in fact, is every morbid indulgence of our inferior nature. Low spirits, melancholy, diffidence, disinclination for ordinary duties, discontent, fretfulness, even down to mental lassitude, indolence or despair, are very inimical to enjoyment in life; and every possible effort should be made to cast them all to the winds, and look unblushingly into the truth of the fact. It is astonishing what a little reflection will do. The fears are mostly imaginary, and with one dash of resolution may be overcome.

NATURE bids me love myself and hate all that hate me.

REASON bids me love my friends and hate those that envy me.

RELIGION bids me love all, and hate none, and overcome evil with good.

He that becomes acquainted, and is invested with authority and influence, will in a short time be convinced, that, in proportion as the power of doing well is enlarged, temptations to do ill are multiplied and enforced.

Love is like fire; it burns brightest when every thing around is dark.

REMEDY FOR FITS.

For a fit of passion;—Walk out in the open air; you may speak your mind to the wind without hurting any one.

For a fit of idleness;—Count the ticking of the clock. Do this for one hour, and you will be glad to take off your coat and go to work like a slave.

For a fit of ambition;—Go to the church yard and read the grave stones; they will tell you the end of ambition. The grave will soon be your bed chamber and the earth your pillow.

For a fit of repining;—Look about you for the halt and blind; visit the afflicted and deranged, and they will make you ashamed of complaining of your lighter afflictions.

Old Epitaph.

"Know, stranger, ere thou pass this stone,
Lye John Tradescant, grandsir, father and son.
The last died in his Spring; the other two Lived till they had travelled Art and Nature through,
As by their choice collections may appear,
Of what is rare in land, in sea, in air;
Whilst they (as Homer's Illiad in a nut)
A world of wonders in one closet shut.
These famous antiquarians that had been
Both gardeners to the rose and lilly queen,
Transplanted now themselves sleep here; and when
Angels with their trumpets waken men,
And fire shall purge the world, these hence shall rise,
And change this garden for a Paradise."

BRO. GRANT:—These lines are from a tomb in St. Mary's Churchyard, England, erected 1662, over the remains of the first of English gardeners and naturalists, by Hester, relict of the youngest.

I send it for the sound truth it contains,—the whole truth.

The Vast Army.

BY REV. EDW. MUNRO, PERPETUAL CURATE OF HARROW-WEALD, ENG.

CHAPTER II.—THE APPOINTED PLACE.

Down a steep pass, among steep, craggy rocks, in a place where any one could stand across the narrow pass, young Albyn stood alone. The moon was shining clearly in the sky, and shedding its silver light on the white dress of the youthful soldier till it shone in its soft folds like snow reefs; and the black shadow of the rocks was painted in raggy outline on the misty ground. Tall crags rose up above him in thin, tapering points; but between them shone the tender glow of light which caught the cross on Albyn's brow.

"Hark, Albyn!" said the Being who was by him; "hark! there is a sound in the pass beneath."

It was all silent around; not a sound, save where some bird of night stretched its long wing in the moonlight, or flapped it against the side of the rock.

"I bear nothing," said Albyn.

He placed his face near the earth, and plainly heard the sound of many footsteps coming up from the plain beneath.

"I will go down," said he, "and look over yonder crag. I may see them plainer where the moon shines on the plain."

So saying, the young soldier went to the rock with his tall spear in his hand, and his shield on his arm glittering in the night-light, and his helmet which rose above the cross on his brow.

He had no sooner moved off than a dark one of hideous form darted out from behind a rock, and slid up to where the Messenger stood, and leaning on the rock before him, fixed his small, round, flaming eyes on the bright one, and spoke to him.

"Lovest thou yon boy?"

"Thou knowest it," said the other.

"I will have him ere morning," said the dark one. "I have pledged my word and freedom to my King that I will get Albyn's white vesture black as ink before the sun rise to-morrow; and I will do it too: nor shall all the messengers of thy vile King hinder me. I hate thy King; and to ruin young Albyn forever is worth a thousand years of torment. Ha!" and the dark one shouted with wildness.

"Away! away!" said the Messenger, "do thy worst. His King loves him, and has sent me to guard him; and while Albyn is firm, thou shalt not touch a hair of the boy's head: while he keeps his garment white, I have power, dark one, to overcome thee; and thou shalt not prevail. The King has bought him at a great price, and loves him with a great love. His eye is ever on him. Away!"

"Ha!" cried the other, "dost thou dare me?"

So saying, the evil one, drawing an arrow from his quiver, threw it with all his force at Albyn, who was leaning over the rock with his back turned to the beings. The arrow hurtled through the air, and its fiery point looked as if it would have pierced Albyn through and through. But the Messenger slid like light before the boy, and the arrow, striking on his azure wing, broke into shivers; the ground was scattered with its fragments.

"No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper," said the Being.

His voice died away in sweet accents among the hills, and it seemed to me as if an echo came back from the distance, though the words were changed.

"Because I have set my love upon him, therefore have I delivered him."

Most soft and lovely was the voice which spoke; so soft that my soul was filled with it, and it seemed to me to come from the part where the blow was. Albyn looked round quickly, as if he had caught the last accents; but he did not seem to see the shivered arrow, nor to know aught that had passed, and turned back as quickly to watch something in the pass below.

Meanwhile the dark one had fled behind the shadow of the rock, and the Messenger stood in the path between him and the boy.

But what was Albyn looking at?

Across the plain, over which the moonbeams' light fell like a flood of misty silver, a small band of men were seen quickly winding their way, armed from head to feet, moving rapidly, but softly, towards the pass which Albyn had to guard. It was plain they came from the enemy's camp, and were hoping to take that part of the army by surprise which lay in their tents near Albyn's pass.

News of the sound in the mountains and the King's approach had reached the enemy, and made them the more eager to make some impression on the Vast Army. Their power depended on finding them unwatchful at their post. The little party having moved swiftly over the place, came into the black shadow cast by the mountains, and Albyn could see them no more. But he heard their footsteps plainly come nearer and nearer as they approached the pass, and he imagined, by great straining of his eyes, he could catch here and there their spearheads gleaming in some wandering ray of the moon. He was watching this little band while the strife went on with the dark one.

"They are coming now, at last," said Albyn, throwing himself across the pass under the huge rock. "'Tis strange Ezra has given no signal."

As he spoke, an arrow from the plain flew through the air far over Albyn's head, and a shrill, bitter scream was heard far above as from one mortally wounded.

"It's from Ezra," said Albyn; "he was not watching. Poor Ezra!" said he, and drew himself up against the rock; he planted his foot across the path, placed his [illegible] firmly in his hand, with his helmet on his head, the young soldier seemed prepared for a dreadful strife.

"Fear not, for I am with thee," said a voice.

Albyn bowed his head; there was a silence for a moment, deep and awful: the echo of the dreadful scream had died away: then there was the low tread of many iron footsteps; another moment, and the foremost of the band of the enemy turned the rock, and stood straight before Albyn.

"Yield thee, or die," shouted the man, and shook his long spear in his hand.

"I yield not," said Albyn, "to the enemy of my King."

By this time the whole band had turned the sharp corner, and quite filled the narrow pass. It seemed a desperate moment for the gallant boy, alone against so large a body of men, and they armed with steel from head to foot. But he fought for the King he loved, and what cared he for many or few? The spear flew from the hand of the first foe, and striking on the rock over Albyn's head, broke to pieces at his feet. A shower of spears instantly filled the air, and fell, thick as hail, round the soldier of the King. His helmet rattled beneath the blows; his breast-plate blunted many an arrow's head; and his shield, with which he covered his face, made more than one sharp point fly back and wound the men who were pressing on.

Not a step had Albyn yielded yet, though his foe were fast gaining ground. It required the greatest clearness of the boy's head to see what he had best be doing; when on a sudden the dark shadow of the evil one was seen gliding from the rock behind the boy's ear. He began to confuse him by whispers.

"See down yonder crag," said he, "more men are coming fast. You will never hold out. You had better give up, and save your life."

Albyn never turned his head, but keeping his eye fixed before him, answered the dark one sharply.

"Away, foul fiend! it is not to numbers I yield."

"But," said the dark one, putting his face before Albyn, and fixing his fiery eyes full on the boy, "by giving up kindly, you will make these men love and serve the good King, your Maker. You will do more by kindness than by force."

But the Messenger passed like light across the path, and the dark one in terror fled away.

Full half an hour Albyn held out the pass against the men: it was so narrow that, young as he was, he was able to prevent any passing him. He had struck down three of the enemy dead in the pass; and finding that multitudes were pressing up the pass, he drew from his snowy vest his silver horn, and winding it till the rocks echoed again with the sound, he expected Ulric, or any that was near, to come to his help. But no Ulric came. Still it was Ulric's place to come.

All seemed becoming desperate, when on a sudden more troops were seen winding round the foot of the crags in the distance. The noise of battle was heard raging among the narrow defiles of the mountains; the clang of trumpets, the prancing of horses, the clash of armor, the shouts of men, all rose in one wild, indistinct noise, far and wide in the moonlight.

"The enemy are attacking the Vast Army at all sides at once," said Albyn, leaning faint on his spear, as for a moment the enemy paused at the sound of the great noise.

"Go down and join the great battle: so brave a boy as you will be of great use; far more than in keeping so narrow a pass as this," whispered the evil one.

"He hath appointed unto all their place. Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching," said the Messenger.

A loud shout was heard on a sudden by the men in the pass, and they disappeared through a chasm of the rocks. They had descried another pass, and Albyn, faint and weary, was left alone.

"Now, Ulric, do thy work," said he to himself: "at the first blast of thy horn I am ready to come."

So saying, he bent down his parched lips to drink of a cool water which gurgled out from the rock, and with his face towards the glow, which shone on the cross on his brow, he prepared himself not to be taken by surprise.

"You see, said my guide, "how the King has given to each his own work and place, and how it would be wrong for any to leave his post. The soldiers of the Vast Army may not choose their own place. It is always chosen for them by the King himself, or those placed in authority under Him. Each has his own, and each has the place for which he is for some reason suited. If they think they would do better in another place, they are mistaken; for the King is most wise, and knows each one better than he does himself; and he has given great wisdom and discretion to the rulers of his army, to place the soldiers where they are best suited."

"Very true," said I. "The King is most wise. I noticed how young Albyn would not go to the great fight which is waging in the distance."

"Because," said my guide, "he knew he was placed in this very pass by the King, or those in power; and when the King comes he must give account of how he has kept the pass; and though he had done ever so good a work elsewhere, yet if he had neglected this pass, and thereby the enemy had passed by, he would have had a sad reckoning for it at the last account. It will have mattered little what other great things he has done. What the King loves is obedience to the death, and simple consistency in the work of the station in which he is placed."

"How the Messenger put the evil one to flight!" said I.

"Yes; because Albyn was bravely fighting, and did not wish to do what the evil one told him; if he had, the Messenger could have done nothing."

Out-Door Exercise.

HINTS TO LADIES.

Ladies, one word: will you hear it, heed it? Out-door exercise,—do you have it sufficiently, regularly, daily? Is it strange, is it to be wondered at, that so many of you are laid on the shelf, useless, powerless, pale, feeble, puny, weakly, sickly, rickety, desponding, bowed down with chronics, dyspeptics and hysterics? Rather is it not a marvel you are alive, able to breathe a single breath? No woman need dream of being buoyant in faith, hope and love, rosy, bloomingly healthful, vigorous, cheerful, happy, while underground, buried every day, year in, year out.

"Her bloom was like the blooming flower,
That sips the early dew;
The rose was budded on her cheek,
Just opening to the view;
The rose grew pale and left her cheek—
She died before her time."

Out-door exercise, especially in the morning, is what the ladies need, must have, to sustain life, health, beauty and usefulness.—Why is it that the beauty of many females fades so soon? Is not one special cause, the neglecting air and exercise? Daily out-door exercise is the boon of life. Weakness, lassitude, indigestion, nervous affections, headache, loss of appetite, liability to sudden colds, and a fading complexion, as inevitably follow indolence and confinement, as the wilting of a plant results from the deprivation of light.

Those ladies that have gardens and fields to cultivate, have no excuse for this suicidal course, whatever. A beautiful writer, alluding to this pleasant, healthful, commendable exercise of the garden, speaks thus: "The garden is woman's proper sphere of out-door labor; here she finds a natural theatre for her taste, and a remedy for half her ills. The garden is her academy and her gymnasium, her school of beauty. Here are the graces, one with her rose in her hand, and another with her branch of myrtle. In their society she breathes the fragrant morning air, and rests at noon in the shade of the vine which her own fingers have trained. It is wonderful, the miracles which her hands work there, the beauty and loveliness that bloom under her eye. The garden is our paradise regained."

"Out-door employment gives pleasure and gain,
And makes us our troubles forget;
For those who work hard have no time to complain,
And 'tis better to labor than fret.
We need only labor as hard as we can,
For all that our bodies may need;
Still doing our duty to God and to man,
And we shall be happy indeed."

The Baptism of Fire.

Suppose we saw an army sitting down before a granite fort, and they told us that they intended to batter it down, we might ask them, "How?" They point to a cannon-ball. Well, but there is no power in that; it is heavy, but no more than half a hundred, or perhaps a hundred weight; if all the men in the army hurled it against the fort, they would make no impression. They say, "No; but look at the cannon." Well, but there is no power in that. A child may ride upon it, a bird may perch in its mouth—it is a machine, and nothing more. "But, look at the powder." Well, there is no power in that; a child may spill it, a sparrow may peck it. Yet this powerless powder and powerless ball are put in the powerless cannon; one spark of fire enters it, and then, in the twinkling of an eye, that powder is a flash of lightning, and that cannon-ball is a thunder-bolt, which smites as if it had been sent from heaven. So it is with our church machinery of this day—we have all the instruments necessary for pulling down strongholds, and oh! for the baptism of fire.—Rev. W. Arthur.

ALL HAIL!

All hail! the glory of the peerless morn,
(Succeeding Time's long, dark and gloomy night!)
The sleepers' natal hour; though slumb'ring long—
A nation wakes to bless thy living light.

Hail, peaceful kingdom! come! we ever pray,
Let earth's dread curse forever hence remove;
When harmless lambs shall with the leopard play'
And loyal subjects serve their king in love.

Hail, sunny bowers! ambrosial fruits so sweet;
The fragrant pine, the box, and myrtle green;
Life's river, too, our grateful lips shall greet,
Where lillies bend to kiss the crystal stream.

Hail, endless rest! thou rich and priceless boon—
The christian's Sabbath, God had promised long;
Where tears,and death, and toil, amid earth's gloom,
Are now exchanged for life, and rest, and song.

Hail,mighty angels! that excel in strength,
Ye ministers of pure celestial birth;
I come through grace, to join your ranks at length,
Ransomed by Christ from yonder groaning earth.

Hail,prophets, martyrs! God's rejoicing hosts;
Hail parted friends I've loved in bygone days,
(With whom I sailed time's dark and dang'rous coast,)
We meet at last amid bright glory's blaze.

Hail,kindred spirits! whom with converse sweet,
Without alloy, I shall through countless years
Enjoy, with constant progress and each grace complete;
And with gigantic mind explore the spheres.

Hail,blessed Jesus! hail thou conquering King!
Thou SUN, amid ten thousand heavenly rays:
Without a shade or dimning vail between,
I shall upon thy matchless beauty gaze.

Treasures.

"For where your treasure is there will your heart be also."—Matt. 6 : 21, and Luke 12 : 34.

When pressed by wondering thousands from Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea, Galilee and distant regions beyond the Jordan where his fame had been wafted upon every wind, Christ withdrew with his disciples into the calm retirement of a mountain, and delivered that stupendous summary of Bible truths, unmatched for wisdom, eloquence and brevity. What a lesson might not some of our modern divines learn from it, and state their views simply, and to the point, instead of agonizing their poor brains, and wasting their time in hunting up high-sounding polysyllables; and with tedious circumlocution and long drawn sentences, crowded with "jaw break-breakers," thereby clothing their meaning in such sublime mystery, that it is not worth while to clear away the rubbish to find the mite of real worth, if really a mite of worth does exist in all the bloated mass.

In this master-piece of Theology, which suits all cases and circumstances, Christ earnestly sets before us the folly of laying up the treasures of this world, which at all times are subject to the ravages of the plunderer, the moth and the insidious rust; "For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." That man's thoughts cannot aspire to holy things, who hoards up dollars till they become hundreds, and hundreds till they become thousands and sometimes millions, while he hugs the knees of the golden image which his pride and avarice has set up, and cries in his heart, "Thee, mammon, only shall I worship." And that man's hopes are unstable as a rope of sand which the wave, the storm, the devouring flame may in an hour destroy. His treasure was laid up in earthen vessels, the blow descends and his stony, proud heart lies black and broken with their fragments.

I once knew a merchant whose moral character was irreproachable, and whose deeds of charity were numerous and liberal. He embarked almost all his wealth in building and fitting out as handsome a ship as ever cut the waters of the deep blue ocean. Every thing which art could do was lavished to give strength and beauty to the noble vessel. The owner, no mean amateur in painting and sculpture, carved and gilded the gorgeous figure head and called her the "Penelope." More than twenty thousand people assembled to witness the departure of the beautiful craft. From guard-board-streak to the sail her model was perfect. Science and seamanship pervaded her crew, and as her snowy pinions were spread to catch the breeze, and she began to recede from the crowded pier, a cheer which made the welkin ring burst from the multitude, while many wishes of good fortune followed the gallant ship. Mr. L—— was so elated with pride and confidence in the production of his darling scheme, that he impiously exclaimed—"God himself could not raise a storm sufficient to drown the Penelope!" That very night a storm arose, the like of which had not visited that rocky coast for many years; and in three days from the departure of the vessel her owner was a raving maniac, tearing his flesh and cursing the God who sent the storm. His pride was dashed into a thousand pieces, but all on board escaped. The wretched man never recovered. "Where your treasure is there will your heart be also."

There are other treasures of an earthly nature, distinct from gold and silver and precious stones, more difficult sometimes to alienate, and more bitter in their separation,—I mean the wayward affection of the heart. Sound judgment rarely chooses the object which often absorbs every feeling of love and devotion, to the exclusion of all thought of God and happiness, save that which springs from a blind idolatry which affords its votaries a mingled cup of pleasure, misery and remorse. Sometimes when laws divine and human place barriers to such an attachment, the unbridled heart, like a goaded and unbroken steed, would in defiance of Heaven, kick at all restraint and counsel, hug the viper which is destroying him, and drink with thirst insatiate from that intoxicating, deadly cup of pleasure. He cannot pray while he is sinning with his heart; or if he does, it seems as if his prayers had struck a brazen dome which sent no answer back but dreadful threatenings. He has laid up a treasure in his own breast which the rust of care and unutterable agony and sorrow is correding away. And thus shall the ulcer eat, eat, eat, till he is past redemption, if he patient does not cry to Him who is mighty to save, even the soul's Physician, who with a touch can heal the wounded heart when penitent and prostrate before him.

Thus every earthly treasure is worse than dross, every earthly pleasure mixed with pain. The worm, the canker and the grief make sad havoc with us unless we lay up our treasure far above the reach of the plunderer or the moth. No bitter disappointment blasts our love. It gives us the cooling waters of life. Calmness and peace and happiness are in our hearts, and life without end before us.

Notes and Queries.

"M. T." wishes to know about "feet washing" as a religious ordinance. Was it practised by the church? Is it thus practised now? By whom?

1. Feet washing was a common act of hospitality in the East, where they walked either barefoot or with only a sandal, or sole tied about the ankle and toes, with thongs. See Gen. 18 : 4; Gen. 19 : 2; Gen. 43 : 24.

2. It was so common, that to neglect it was a mark of impoliteness, and was rebuked as such by Christ. Luke 7 : 44.

3. It being so common an act of courtesy, it could not well be regarded as a token of special humility for one christian to wash another's feet.

4. The significance of the act when performed by Christ at the last supper, arose from the fact that He, their Lord and Master, washed his servants' feet, thus teaching them that he that was greatest should be servant of all; not "in remembrance" of him as they ate "the supper"—not perhaps as a religious ordinance, but simply as an act of kindness which they were not to feel above performing for the least of Christ's flock, since he had set the example; and the disciple was not greater than his Master, nor he that is sent greater than him that sent him. John 3 : 3–16.

5. In all the rest of the New Testament there is no mention of feet washing as a religious ordinance, though a period of some fifty years elapsed before the sacred writings were finished, and though the Lord's Supper and Baptism are mentioned, described, and alluded to very many times.

6. In the only other passage that makes mention of feet washing, it is spoken of not as a christian ordinance, but as a kind office perfomed by the christian widow who had "lodged strangers" and "washed the saints' feet;" the two being evidently connected as works of hospitality. 1 Tim. 5 : 10.

7. In early christian history I have no recollection of any mention of feet washing as a christian ordinance, though there is frequent mention of the ordinances of the Lord's Supper and Baptism.

8. It is now practised as an ordinance of the gospel by the Menonites, (so called,) a very excellent though small society of baptised believers that arose near the time of Luther,—also by some at least of the "Adventists" who keep the seventh day, and believe it to be "the third Angel's message," and I think perhaps by one or two other minor sects—what ever I cannot now recollect.

9. I have no objection to washing my brother's feet, or having him wash mine, if the act is necessary; but I doubt whether it is required of christians in connection with the Lord's Supper, as a religious ordinance.

The Birth of the Spirit.

BY R. ROBBINS.

No. III.

We will now open the volume of inspiration, and see if we can find this second birth, by virtue of which, he ceased to be the son of David, and became the veritable Son of God. In Ps. 89 : 27, we read of Christ thus; "Also I will make him my first born, higher than the kings of the earth." His being born of the flesh did not set him above the kings of the earth: for he made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant. (See Phil. 2 : 7, and Luk. 22 : 27.) Neither with reference to his natural birth, could it be said of him that he was the first born. Hence we must look for another birth, by virtue of which he can be called God's first born; which phrase, "first born," implies that others must follow him in the same birth. In Col. 1 : 18, we read; "And he (Christ) is the head of the body, the church, . . . the first born from the dead; that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." Rom. 1 : 3, 4. "Concerning his son Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh; and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness by the resurrection from the dead." [We see that he was raised (born) from the dead according to the spirit of holiness; i. e., the spirit of holiness which he possessed, and which constitutes in him and in his brethren—who possess the same—the divine moral nature, by which also they will be raised (born) from the dead.]

We have now found a second birth. And we find but two births spoken of in the book of inspiration. 1. The birth of the flesh; and 2. The birth of the Spirit. Now in order to settle the question forever, and establish the truth of our position,—that the birth of the Spirit and the resurrection from the dead unto eternal life are identical,—we have only to prove that those who are born from the dead possess a spiritual nature in a physical sense. For, "that which is born of the Spirit, is spirit." And here we seem to be laid under the necessity of proving that the resurrection from the dead is effected by the Spirit. Says Paul, (Rom. 8 : 11,) "But if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by (Mar. because of,) his Spirit that dwelleth in you." But what constitutes this spirit by which men are raised from the dead? (See Rom. 1 : 4.) "And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of HOLINESS;" which is identical with the divine moral nature, producing in him who possesses it a divine moral character; in consequence of which, and by the power of God, the resurrection (birth) from the dead is effected; thus constituting it the birth of the Spirit. But are those who are raised (born) from the dead, constituted spirit in a physical sense? (1 Cor. 15 : 45.) "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit." But how was he made a quickening spirit? Ans; By the resurrection from the dead! as it is written; "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual (spirit) body. Howbeit that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." "But," says one, "Christ was a quickening spirit when he was in the flesh; for he said, 'As the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, even so the Son quickeneth whom he will,' and he raised up and quickened Lazarus, and others." But, if this reasoning is logical, Elijah was a quickening spirit. He raised to life the widow's son. (1 Kings 17 : 22.) Paul also, for he raised to life a young man. (Acts 20 : 10–12.) And, by parity of reasoning, Adam was, by nature, a quickening spirit, although he never acted in that capacity. For "as is the earthly," (in a physical sense, for it is in this sense that Paul is speaking,) "such are they also that are earthly;" and vice versa. "And as we have borne the image (do bear the nature) of the earthly, we shall also bear the image (nature) of the heavenly." But who is the heavenly? (See ver. 45, 47,) "The last man (Christ) is the Lord from heaven." (Ver. 50,) "Now this I say, brethren," (I have given you this instruction relative to the resurrection of the dead, that you may understand,) "that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. It is obvious, from the foregoing quotations from Paul, and also from the language of the Savior, (John 5 : 21, compared with chap. 6 : 33, 39, 40, 44, 54, 57,) that Christ becomes a quickening spirit when, and not until, he was raised from the dead. Hence we understand that, in the resurrection from the dead to eternal life, "that which is born of the spirit, is spirit."

But here we anticipate an objection, founded on Luk. 24 : 39, where Christ said to his disciples that a spirit had not, like him, "flesh and bones." But if we admit the materiality of God, and at the same time admit that he is a SPIRIT, we must, of course, admit the spiritual materialty of his Son, since he has become the Son of God by virtue of birth. For the Son must possess the same material nature the Father possesses. We, therefore, use the event alluded to, Luk. 24 : 36–39, John 20 : 19, also the one in Luk. 24 : 31, as the crowning point in our argument. "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit," a "spiritual," (or spirit) "body." And if Jesus said it was flesh, let it BE FLESH! (I suppose he understood the case as well as any one.) But it was no longer mortal flesh, for it was a "SPIRITUAL BODY!" and possessed the quality of going and coming, and, like the wind, unseen in its movements. So Christ, after he had been raised, or born from the dead, at one time suddenly disappeared, no one knowing whither he went; and at another time suddenly appeared, none knowing whence he came; thus answering the description he gave of one born of the Spirit. He was no longer then the son of David, but had reached that point where David saw him when he prophetically called him Lord, as it is written, (Rom. 14 : 9,) "For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living."

We think that it is clearly proved that conversion does not constitute the birth of the Spirit, but that the birth of the Spirit and the resurrection from the dead to eternal life, are identical.

Are We a People?

No. IV.

WHAT NAMES HAVE WE BORNE?

These would indeed make a motley group. At the present time many of our best brethren hardly know by which they should be most appropriately called; and some would refuse to be called by any one which has been used to designate us: while others still, would be happy to be called—and that we should all be known—by a name selected as appropriate because indicating some great leading peculiarity in our doctrinal position.

From the tendency in all instances to designate persons or classes by some peculiarity, doctrine, or individual occupying a prominent position, we were quite naturally called Millerites. Some almost from the commencement of our being, not agreeing in all things with Mr. Miller and the principal preachers connected with him, called themselves Millenarians—their views according mainly with the positions of the "English Literalists," whose works were freely published in this country, and whose doctrines upon the prophecies received the name of American Millenarianism.

At the conference at Albany, April 29, 1845, the name ADVENTISTS was selected as a proper cognomen for those holding to the pre-millennial advent of Christ. It has been held by some since and only those views of truth then declared as original articles of faith, with the specific work at the same time suggested—those views only are supposed entitled by the name, at least, entitled to orthodoxy.

Immediately positions were taken upon the future age, so diverse from those taught by the first promoters of the interest, that the grand principle was called "Age to Come." This indicated a class somewhat similar, in belief, to the Millenarians previously spoken of. Just at this time, and as a counterpoise, appeared the doctrines of the general resurrection, as distinguished from Mr. Miller's notion of two, and the "Thousand years past." To say nothing of "Shut door believers," and various other defections, we come to mention another class—the "Seventh Day Believers," who keep Saturday—our seventh day—as the true Christian Sabbath. These had many of them been with us in the faith and interest, and claim to be believers.

We have been a people or a body gathered together, of some kind—like the net cast into the sea which gathered of every kind—giving great attention to prophecy, and as a necessary consequence to prophetic chronology. Hence Time has been one of the characteristic features of our movement. Some, therefore, from the great interest they have manifested in this department, have been called "Timists."

Again, a portion have been distinguished as "Destructionists," and some by the stronger term of "Annihilationists;" while "Life and death believers" has been applied to the defenders of the doctrine of immortality only through Christ. We here say nothing of the "ites" that have been called after the various individuals who have taken prominent positions on various points—their name is well nigh legion. It may have been an honor to some to have stood thus; but to such eminence we have not aspired. There is not probably one of the classes which I have mentioned but would easily manage to be reckoned one of the brethren—somewhere—nay, all of the "ites" we would find among Advent worshipers, and taking a part, without let or hindrance, somewhere.

We have been used to such nominations as "Herald party," "Crisis folks," "Watchman side," "Harbinger people," &c. &c. This has all been within the body; we must admit it, unless we shall say that this one or that one has been the body of people, to the exclusion of all the others; and who wants to do that? Who would take the responsibility? Who would reject those who do not see with him on some question or usage? or do not take the same paper? or follow the same man, in meetings, &c., or worship in the same kitchen, school-house or chapel?

Some one may doubt as to the personality of the Devil. We will name him—but must we have a name and a confession of faith that will dismember him and disfellowship him? Or perhaps his sub-name comes from questioning the resurrection of all the wicked. Still he makes no trouble to the flock by either, and the general effort is to build up the cause of God among us. Shall this give him a name and separate position?

I conclude by remarking, that there is one name that many have adhered to as being the only one which we are allowed to employ, viz., Christian. Men may call us what they please, we can only consistently call ourselves Christians. But from the fact that there is a "Christian connection," it is contended that we should not be known if we should only be called by that name which Christ left us, and which was given to his disciples at a very early point in the history of the church. I do not know that we are responsible for that. I do not know that we are responsible for the abuse of the name Christian. We are not required to be known, that I find, as "Adventists." We are certainly not responsible for the many names that have been applied to us. How far we, as a church or gathering of people, are required to be called Adventists, from our views upon the advent of Christ, (many other christians hold the same views precisely,) I do not know; or whether there is any more propriety in being designated by one view which we may believe, than by any other which we may hold as equally true, I will not determine.

In looking over the names of the sects, I find the most of them take their name from some peculiarity of usage, form of worship, church order, baptism, name of an individual founder or leader. Now if they are to bear a name, this seems more appropriate than the name of a doctrine or sentiment. To be called an Adventist, is to be named after the believing in the advent of Christ; but it is not stated whether it is the Advent of Christ or some other advent; and if it were, it is not there stated whether it is the first or second Advent of Christ. But the name of Christian is after Christ. In this city, there is the Church of the Advent, (Protestant Episcopal,) and sometimes we see a notice of the Advent Church. Here is confusion.

I suppose we have all been trying to believe and act as Christians, and have been known as Christian congregations and ministers. Whether, therefore, we have been called Millerites or Millenarians, let us bear the Christian name hereafter.

The Bread of Life.

A DISCOURSE BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

"I am the bread of life."—John 6 : 48.

Before we undertake to give an exposition of this remarkable saying of our blessed Lord, it may be necessary, in order to come to an appreciable conception of the same, to first consider briefly the origin, nature, and destiny of man, to whom this utterance or truth particularly relates. And indeed we cannot understand the Scriptures, we cannot comprehend the true import of the gospel, apart from this knowledge. Whatever facilities there may be designed to aid us in obtaining light on God's blessed word, they are obviously of no little importance. It is required of us that we should possess at least a knowledge of the outlines of our being, from whence we came, our present condition, and whither we are tending. And the main question at issue as regards this matter, and as respects a key to the correct interpretation of God's holy word falls entirely upon this one point; namely, whether man is really an immortal or a mortal being. Has he a deathless principle within him which is constitutional and hereditary, and which will survive the dissolution of his body as a conscious, intelligent personality, capable of enjoying forever while the [illegible] shall in their [illegible] he simply a [illegible]

"the sentence of death" (1 Cor. 1: 9,) stamped obviously upon his entire being, "soul, body and spirit" and consequently doomed to die, to come to a final and utter extinction so far as personal living intelligences are concerned?

If he be constitutionally and hence necessarily immortal, then as a general thing, the popular construction and general interpretation of the Holy Scriptures is not a false one, and the chief points contained in the many creeds and teachings styled orthodox are true; and God has indeed spoken unto us in a mystery, hard to be understood and difficult to comprehend, at least by the commonality of men.

But let man be but a mortal and perishable creature, possessing a vaporish life as the Apostle affirms, "that appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away," (James 4, 14); and whose whole entire being (according to the Mosaic account) was produced and "formed out of the dust of the ground," whose destiny is written in the divine record,—"In the sweat of thy face shalt THOU eat bread, till THOU return unto the ground; for out of it wast THOU taken; for dust THOU art, and unto dust shalt THOU return;" (Gen. 3: 19, Comp. Job 34: 14, Psa. 104: 29, and 146: 4); and it is very evident that no one will escape this common destiny; a destiny entailed upon the human race by the disobedience and transgression of our first parents or the first Adam, (Rom. 5: 12,) save such as are faithful, who may survive in their mortal state the coming of our Lord Jesus the Messiah, whose happiness and favored privilege will then be to be translated like Enoch, that they may not see death, being changed or 'clothed upon" with immortality, invested with a body like Christ's. (Phil. 3: 20, 21, comp. 1 Cor. 15, 51; 1 Thess. 4: 17.)

On the other hand, if we concede to the truthfulness of the popular sentiment and opinion in regard to the great question of natural immortality, acknowledge the position of the theologians of the day, do you not see at once that the power of the gospel is destroyed, as it were, and all its ineffable glory and splendor become enshrouded in an almost impenetrable mist, and you strike from the glorious structure the very "pillar and ground of the truth." You take away the very essence and vitality of the gospel, ignoring its most important teachings, while you detract from the majesty of Christ's mission and ministry to the world, which, to say the least, is highly derogatory to the glory of the Father.

On the contrary, deny the validity of the popular theory, take the ground (i. e., Scriptural ground,) that the vaunted and boasted sentiment of Christendom is false as that which the Devil uttered to our first parents in Eden; (upon which the whole system is founded, Gen. 3: 4); that instead of man being naturally endowed with immortality, he is but the product of the dust of the ground, consequently but a mere mortal being, (Job 4: 17; 10: 9; 34: 14, 15; 1 Tim. 6: 16,) and no hope of a future and eternal life unless he strictly complies with God's way and plan of salvation, and then you attach that importance to the Messiah's first advent which justly belongs to him, and throw a halo of glory and grandeur around the blessed gospel. It is then indeed "the light of the gospel" of Christ" imparts power that it otherwise could never possess. This is its main-spring, its life, its all. You will comprehend its import more clearly and understand more fully this saying of Jesus, "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." I come that they might have life." From these declarations, and many others of a similar character, we may readily discover the nature of this mission to a lost and dying world—to rescue that world from this doom of death; mark you, not to save deathless spirits from an eternal hell of fire and brimstone, but to save dying mortals from death, and bestow upon them the rich and inestimable boon of life. And to deny such being the true interpretation of the word, as well might we attempt to say of the sun shining in all his meridian refulgence, that it is not a reality; as to dare say that the sacred volume does not clearly set forth the fact of man's entire mortality.

With this key (i. e., that man is but a mortal being) the door way to the treasure house of God's truth is unlocked, and we may freely enter in to the full investigation of the same. The Bible is no longer [illegible] requiring of us to call [illegible] that is learned to read and ex[illegible] Isa. 29: 11, 12. We just adapted to his circumstances, wants, conditions and capacities. The passages which heretofore seemed ambiguous and incomprehensible, are now "all plain to him that understandeth," and those which appeared contradictory, and to cast imputations upon the Supreme Goodness, the just administration of His righteous government, are now harmonious; or, as the oracle of wisdom declares, they are "all right to them that seek after knowledge.' He observes, "that God has spoken to man," and rejoices "that he has spoken according to the laws of human language," to be "interpreted according to the laws of human speech."

Thus we have opened, in a measure, the way for the reception of this great truth embodied in our text, with that importance which should be given it; and now, lest we anticipate the whole subject matter in our preliminary remarks, we proceed at once to the exposition of the text, which we purpose to discuss under three general heads, namely,

1. The nature of that life to which Jesus refers.

2. How he becomes the bread of life, or why he appropriates that phrase to himself.

3. The way and manner in which that life is communicated to the believer.

1. The new life brought to view in the gospel of God will now claim our attention for a few moments. We shall endeavor to economise time, and be as brief as possible here, and indeed this point requires but a little explanation from what has been premised already in the foregoing, further than it may be distinguished from "the life that now is" by "the life which is to come" thus: The life which we now enjoy, so to speak, is a breath-life, produced by inhaling within our lungs the surrounding atmosphere which the Lord God originally breathed into man; by which process he became a living soul, or living creature, in contradistinction to a dead one; for such is the Mosaic account. "And the Lord God breathed into his (man's) nostrils the breath of lives, (i. e., the breath of lives common to all, men and animals, see margin,) and man became a living soul." Prior to this action he was but an inanimate form. But this breath, or atmospheric air, being infused within and through the refined and beautiful texture of the lungs, all the grosser particles therein are excluded, while the life-giving qualities are admitted and conveyed by appropriate functions through the arterial system, imparting its vitality to man or beast, through the blood, as we read in regard to the common life thus; "For the life thereof is in the blood." See Lev. 17. Hence under the Jewish dispensation, and even under the present, (see Acts 15: 29,) man is strictly forbidden to eat any animal food containing the blood thereof. Thus we find that the very foundation of this present life argues its fleetness and mortality; for its existence is based alone upon corruptibility, and consequently must come to an end, together with the organic and perishable structure through which it is for a brief space of time developed. But that life which Jesus came to unfold to man, and proffer unto the world, is a divine life, in contradistinction to a human; it is heavenly instead of earthly. And the most striking feature of dissimilarity is this; the first is a breath, or blood-life, the second is a Spirit-life; the first is bounded in its existence by time, locality, and the natural laws; the second is perpetuated and measured only by the eternal years of God.

When we speak of a spirit-life, however, we do not wish to be understood as teaching the orthodox idea of a purely spiritual or immaterial existence, because that is a perfect nonentity, and we do not believe in any such absurdities, but we believe that the Bible teaches that the "life which is to come" will be (though a spirit-life) a spirit-material existence, if we may be allowed to coin a term expressive of our meaning; there will be "flesh and bones" in the organization of the redeemed, but no blood; instead of the arterial functions carrying the principle of life through the system by means of this fluid, the quickening and eternal Spirit of God, which raised up the Lord Jesus from the dead, dwells in them, and it is by and through this Spirit they live and move and have their being, and it is because he lives they shall live also, (John 14: 19,) with a life commensurate in duration with his own. Had Christ a tangible body of flesh and bones subsequent to his resurrection? Yes, verily, for he proved this to his disciples by ocular demonstration. See John 20: 27. [illegible] body ed up into heaven,—the same which will come again in power and great glory; the same head which wore the thorns will wear the crown; the same side which was pierced shall be robed in vestments of crimson dye; (Rev. 19: 13); the same hands that were nailed to the cross will sway the sceptre over the world; the same feet that traversed the wilderness in temptation's hour, and ascended the lonely mountain top, shall soon stand upon Mount Olivet's favored summit. Zech. 14: 4. This is his glorified body, and this is material, tangible, and one that we can see, feel, and comprehend, and the bodies of believers will be nothing less tangible than this.

But, says one, "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." So says the Apostle, but he did not say but what "flesh and bones" may inherit glory; think of that, and then become a little more material, and hence more Scriptural in your ideas of God, his kingdom and glory. It is all material, praise the Lord, only the death principle, sin, and the devil taken out of it. Scores of so-called wise men (Job 32: 9) are puffed up with the strange notion that the glorious God is an immaterial being "without body and parts," or any such organism; but they are very much mistaken, for God has a form, is a person, possesses a body as much so as our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom we read "was found in fashion of a man," and who is "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person." Heb. 1: 3. The redeemed have the promise that "they shall see His face." Rev. 22: 4. And they may hope through grace divine to be permitted ere long to look upon that venerable form, (Dan. 7: 9,) and gaze unveiled upon the gracious face of God our Heavenly Father, in whose presence is fulness of joy, and at whose right hand are pleasures forevermore.

"When shall I reach that happy place,
And be forever blest?
When shall I see my Father's face,
And in his bosom rest?"

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 30, 1858.

Ministering Angels.

A brother who has lately come into the faith of the gospel, wishes to know what the Bible teaches concerning "Ministering Angels."

This is a subject of deep interest at the present time, and one on which many are calling for light. The word rendered angel signifies, "one sent, a messenger." It would be proper to apply this word to any one sent by another. We now assume,

1. That the angels of the Bible are an order of beings higher than men, created before man had an existence.

2. That they were on probation, and some of them sinned.

3. Those that sinned, called evil angels, or the devil's angels, have their abode upon, or about the earth.

4. Those who did not sin are called the Lord's angels, and are "all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation."

We will now bring proof that these assumptions are sustained by the Bible.

1. "That the angels of the Bible are an order of beings higher than men, created before man had an existence."

"What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little LOWER than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet; all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas." Ps. 8: 4–8.

This Scripture declares man was made "a little lower than the angels." Then it follows as a sequence, that there were angels in existence when man was created, therefore they are not the spirits of men, as some claim; for if they were, there could be no angels till after men had died. Again if angels are men, then man, when made lower than the angels, was made lower than himself. Such philosophy would be incomprehensible, and justly called vain and absurd.

2. Angels "were on probation, and some of them sinned."

In Jude, ver. 6, we read of "the angels which kept not their first estate." "God spared not the angels that sinned." 2 Pet. 2: 4. These Scriptures set this point in a clear light. If they had not been [illegible] As there are "holy angels," and "angels that sinned," it follows that there are two classes. Some kept their first estate, and sinned not, while others apostatised.

3. "Those that sinned, called evil angels, or the devil's angels, have their abode upon or about the earth." In 2 Pet. 2: 4, it is said, "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell." Where is this hell located? The word Tartarus, rendered hell in this passage, occurs no where else in the Bible. Hence we conclude it must be used appropriately, and does not mean the same as hades and geheñna, which are usually rendered hell in the New Testament.

Lucian says, "The great depth of the air is called Tartarus." The following is from Dr. Whately's work on the Future State. Empedocles asserts that, "our dull lack-lustre globe is the doomed haunt and dungeon of evil angels, envious and malignant demons." The contrast between the abode of the holy angels and this sin-cursed earth, with its gloomy darkness and howling tempests, is like going from paradise into some filthy coal mine in the bowels of the earth, illuminated here and there by a dim, ghastly-light, so that the fallen angels lost much when cast down to Tartarus. Says Whately,

"That the word used by Peter which our translators render 'cast down to hell' or 'Tartarus,' is to be understood of our dark, gloomy earth, with its dull clouds, foul, vaporous, misty atmosphere, may be made to appear. Socrates called the abyss or sea, Tartarus, as does also Plato, who elsewhere calls our dim lack-lustre earth itself also Tartarus. Plutarch says our air . . . is called Tartarus, from being cold. Herein he is followed and supported by Lucian. And both Hesiod and Homer call it the aerial Tartarus. In no other sense nor way can St. Peter be understood and explained."

Suidas, an ancient writer, says it signifies, "the place in the clouds" or "in the air."

Dr. Parkhurst, the lexicograper, says, "it appears from a passage in Lucian, that by Tartarus was meant, in a physical sense, the bounds or verge of this material creation."

Dr. Ramsey, a learned writer, in speaking of Tartarus, says, "that place is, probably, at present, within the atmosphere of our earth."

According to St. Austin, the fallen angels, "after their sin, . . . were thrust down into the misty darkness of this lower air," and are "here kept and reserved in custody, unto the judgment of the great day, and general assizes."

Without quoting further, we think our third point is settled, that the evil angels "have their abode upon, or about the earth." These, without doubt, are the spirits from whom the spiritual communications are received at the present day. These demons are the ones who mesmerize the mediums, for the purpose of teaching to the world through them, the "doctrines of devils." These unclean spirits are called the devil's angels.

4. "Those who did not sin are called the Lord's angels, and are 'all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation.'"

We have many records in the Bible of angels' visits to men, but they have never manifested themselves through a medium, claiming to be the spirit of some fiend. They have always appeared in their own persons, if at all; while the evil angels almost invariably manifest themselves through some person, claiming to be the spirit of a departed one. The angels of the Lord defend the Bible; whereas, the fallen angels are making every possible effort to destroy the confidence of man in the word of the Lord. The Lord's angels have been commissioned many times to go and assist his people when placed in straitened circumstances, and they have never failed to deliver. We learn that an angel of the Lord came to Peter when in prison, removed his fetters, lit up the prison with his glory, opened the massive gates and set the apostle at liberty. The text we quoted from Heb. 1: 14, is very plain, and cannot be misunderstood. The apostle says, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation."

They have power to render themselves visible or unvisible to the children of men, as [illegible] may deem best. Their number is represented in the Bible by millions. One important work of the angels is to gather the saints at the last day. The Savior [illegible] "he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Our prayer is that they may soon come and gather the jewels of the Lord.

The Great Controversy.

"This is a bound volume of 167 pages, of which a copy has come to this office through the mail. The subject is viewed from the author's stand-point, and is an off-hand, rapid and hasty glance at the more prominent points involved in historic prophecy, without any attempt at logical argument or demonstration of disputed points. It is easy and pleasant reading for those who like such a style of writing, and have no difficulty with any of the positions which are assumed in it."—Advent Herald.

Campmeetings.

As the season for campmeetings has nearly arrived, I beg leave to offer a few directions and suggestions concerning them, which are the fruit of considerable experience and observation. And as time is precious, I have none of it to spare in going round the real issue, and so I shall just pull the flax out of the hatchel and let the points out in sight.

First, then, to those who get up campmeetings, let me say:

1. Do not undertake to have a campmeeting for the mere name of the thing, and do not undertake it until, after much prayer, you are convinced it is your duty to do so.

2. Do not imagine that a campmeeting is to convince community concerning gospel truth, when your whole life of worldliness and sin contradicts the gospel openly before them.

3. Do not suppose that much permanent local good can result from a seven days' meeting, when you, by a seven years' life of apathy and carelessness, have proved that you care nothing for the salvation of the world around you.

4. When you select a place for campmeeting do not choose a location so out of the way that neither saints nor sinners can get to it, nor in a place so completely infested with drunken rowdies that half the camp will lose their peace, and the other half their temper in maintaining order during the services.

5. Do not select a place where a few bitter-spirited, hot-headed zealots have poisoned the minds of the whole community and prejudiced them against whatever truth they may hear, or where they have made themselves personally so disagreeable to their neighbors that the name of God is blasphemed among the heathen on their account.

6. Do not think that every fine grove you see is "a good place for a camp meeting." Do not select a place where there isn't half room enough for the people. Do not choose a place just far enough from the Depot so that persons will have to ride and pay fare enough to defray the entire expenses of the meeting if it were in a more convenient locality.

7. Do not leave half the fitting up to be done after the meeting begins. Do not make a stand so wide that the preachers who sit back in it cannot see the congregation, or be seen by them. Do not neglect getting your lamps ready till it is time to light them, and don't let a thousand things be "everybody's business," and so nobody attend to them.

8. Do not have a quarrel with half the brethren in the ministry before the meeting is appointed, so as to prevent their coming to meeting. Do not have a managing committee that will have to dispute every day during the meeting; or that will quarrel as to who shall preach or what shall be preached: or that will wrangle over their pet hobbies; or that will act "cross as two sticks," or that will threaten to bolt, if the meeting doesn't yield to their individual wishes.

9. Do not suppose that God will bless people at a camp meeting any more than any where else, only as they become more conformed to his will and more zealous in his work. Do not imagine that a week's meeting in the woods will make up for a year's duties neglected at home.

10. Do not expect a few preachers to do all the preaching, praying, exhorting and singing. Don't expect them to thaw their way through a glacier of backsliders, and so get at the hearts of the people. Don't expect them to cram their preaching upon the dead church as you would cram hay through a window with no one to mow it [illegible] it of Christ, hungry and thirsty for gospel truth.

11. If any thing goes wrong on the camp, don't make a fuss. Don't mad the wicked by threats of law, &c. Don't silence overheated zeal by rude rebuff. Suppose a fanatic should come along, be kind to him; what good would it do to knock his brains out and spatter them over every body else?

12. Keep your committee out of sight. Let them do their work quietly; don't quarrel as to who shall ring the bell or announce the appointments. Let the machinery be under cover and the weights inside, and then all will run like clock work.

13. Let the committee or some one of them have controlling powers, and firmness enough to exercise them. Don't let a meeting be spoiled to gratify the whim of some body that is all mouth and no ears. Don't let the principle of love be rode out of the camp for the sake of letting in the "horned horse" or pet hobby of some one who wants "liberty," as the miser wants gold, "all for himself, for others none."

14. Do every thing with prayer, and in humble dependence on God for help. Pray that he may help in all things. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but all in meekness and love; so shall God's blessing rest upon us all, and our meeting be for the better and not for the worse. I have many other things to say, and may write again a few lines for those who go to campmeetings. I have not time to write smoothly or lengthily, but of the few thoughts I had on the subject, here is the PITH.

For the Crisis.

Fourth Maine Annual Conference.

THURSDAY, 10 o'clock, A. M.

The fourth Annual Conference of Adventists convened at the hour appointed in the Read Meeting House, Richmond. As but few had arrived, it was thought best to spend the morning in prayer and social remark. Our worship commenced with singing the 845th hymn, selected by L. L. Howard.

"Sweet is the love that mutual glows
Within each brother's breast,
And binds in gentlest bond each heart,
All blessing and all blessed."

Prayer was then offered by Eld. J. Partridge and others, after which many very appropriate and interesting remarks were made, on the occasion of our coming together, the nature of our hope, progress of the cause, prospects of the future, increase of believers, the work of death on some of our members and the ill health of others. It was a sweet, heavenly, rejoicing season. It was especially a cause of sorrow and tears with us all, to see the change in the countenance of our much esteemed and once robust and healthy brother N. Smith, now so disabled by disease as to be unfitted for the work of the ministry, and the active services of God's house in which he has been so faithful for many years; yet we could rejoice in the blessings of God upon him, and that he was yet permitted to be with us to aid by his counsels and prayers.

P. M. 2 o'clock. A timely and well-arranged discourse was preached by Eld. S. K. Partridge, from 2 Cor. 1: 3, 5. In the evening Eld. T. Smith preached a searching sermon from 1 Pet. 1: 13–16.

Friday, 9 o'clock A. M. The chairman called the meeting to order and remarked that we all needed help, and none but God could grant that help, then called on Eld T. Smith to open the meeting by prayer. The chairman, Dr. N. Smith, of Hallowell, was then nominated to continue to occupy the chair, and was elected. I. C. Welcome of Richmond, was nominated and chosen scribe.

A committee of three was then chosen to arrange business for the conference; that committee was I. C. Welcome, S. K. Partridge, and T. Smith. The reading of the call for the conference was desired by Eld S. K. Partridge, read by the scribe. It was then moved that a committee of three be chosen to present to the conference a plan for a more permanent organization of our societies. The chair appointed Eld. T. Smith, I. C. Welcome, J. Partridge, to which were subsequently added, S. K. Partridge and E. M. Haggett. Moved to now hear reports from the churches.

Eld. T. Smith, of Brewer, said, There are several good, substantial brethren in Brewer Holden; has been some revival the past and winter, several baptized. During the work some new views were brought among us by Eld. Bragg, that we were all in Babylon, &c. I preached on the subject to show their error, and left, for I will not be

"the sentence of death" (1 Cor. 1: 9,) stamped obviously upon his entire being, "soul, body and spirit," and consequently doomed to die, to come to a final and utter extinction so far as personal living intelligences are concerned?

But this breath, or atmospheric air, being infused within and through the refined and beautiful texture of the lungs, all the grosser particles therein are excluded, while the life-giving qualities are admitted and conveyed by appropriate functions through the arterial system, imparting its vitality to man or beast, through the blood, as we read in regard to the common life thus; "For the life thereof is in the blood." See Lev. 17. Hence under the Jewish dispensation, and even under the present, (see Acts 15: 29,) man is strictly forbidden to eat any animal food containing the blood thereof. Thus we find that the very foundation of this present life argues its fleetness and mortality; for its existence is based alone upon corruptibility, and consequently must come to an end, together with the organic and perishable structure through which it is for a brief space of time developed. But that life which Jesus came to unfold to man, and proffer unto the world, is a divine life, in contradistinction to a human; it is heavenly instead of earthly. And the most striking feature of dissimilarity is this; the first is a breath, or blood-life, the second is a Spirit-life; the first is bounded in its existence by time, locality, and the natural laws; the second is perpetuated and measured only by the eternal years of God.

When we speak of a spirit-life, however, we do not wish to be understood as teaching the orthodox idea of a purely spiritual or immaterial existence, because that is a perfect nonentity, and we do not believe in any such absurdities, but we believe that the Bible teaches that the "life which is to come" will be (though a spirit-life) a spirit-material existence, if we may be allowed to coin a term expressive of our meaning; there will be "flesh and bones" in the organization of the redeemed, but no blood; instead of the arterial functions carrying the principle of life through the system by means of this fluid, the quickening and eternal Spirit of God, which raised up the Lord Jesus from the dead, dwells in them, and it is by and through this Spirit they live and move and have their being, and it is because he lives they shall live also, (John 14: 19,) with a life commensurate in duration with his own. Had Christ a tangible body of flesh and bones subsequent to his resurrection? Yes, verily, for he proved this to his disciples by ocular demonstration. See John 20: [illegible]. Here was [illegible] body [illegible] ed up into heaven,—the same which will come again in power and great glory; the same head which wore the thorns will wear the crown; the same side which was pierced shall be robed in vestments of crimson dye; (Rev. 19: 13); the same hands that were nailed to the cross will sway the sceptre over the world; the same feet that traversed the wilderness in temptation's hour, and ascended the lonely mountain top, shall soon stand upon Mount Olivet's favored summit. Zech. 14: 4. This is his glorified body, and this is material, tangible, and one that we can see, feel, and comprehend, and the bodies of believers will be nothing less tangible than this.

But, says one, "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God." So says the Apostle, but he did not say but what "flesh and bones" may inherit glory; think of that, and then become a little more material, and hence more Scriptural in your ideas of God, his kingdom and glory. It is all material, praise the Lord, only the death principle, sin, and the devil taken out of it. Scores of so-called wise men (Job 32: 9) are puffed up with the strange notion that the glorious God is an immaterial being "without body and parts," or any such organism; but they are very much mistaken, for God has a form, is a person, possesses a body as much so as our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom we read "was found in fashion of a man," and who is "the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person." Heb. 1: 3. The redeemed have the promise that "they shall see His face." Rev. 22: 4. And they may hope through grace divine to be permitted ere long to look upon that venerable form, (Dan. 7: 9,) and gaze unveiled upon the gracious face of God our Heavenly Father, in whose presence is fulness of joy, and at whose right hand are pleasures forevermore.

"When shall I reach that happy place,
And be forever blest?
When shall I see my Father's face,
And in his bosom rest?"

Ministering Angels.

A brother who has lately come into the faith of the gospel, wishes to know what the Bible teaches concerning "Ministering Angels."

This is a subject of deep interest at the present time, and one on which many are calling for light. The word rendered angel signifies, "one sent, a messenger." It would be proper to apply this word to any one sent by another. We now assume,

1. That the angels of the Bible are an order of beings higher than men, created before man had an existence.

2. That they were on probation, and some of them sinned.

3. Those that sinned, called evil angels, or the devil's angels, have their abode upon, or about the earth.

4. Those who did not sin are called the Lord's angels, and are "all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation."

We will now bring proof that these assumptions are sustained by the Bible.

1. "That the angels of the Bible are an order of beings higher than men, created before man had an existence."

"What is man, that thou art mindful of him? and the son of man that thou visitest him? For thou hast made him a little LOWER than the angels, and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou madest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands; thou hast put all things under his feet; all sheep and oxen, yea, and the beasts of the field; the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth through the paths of the seas." Ps. 8: 4–8.

This Scripture declares man was made "a little lower than the angels." Then it follows as a sequence, that there were angels in existence when man was created, therefore they are not the spirits of men, as some claim; for if they were, there could be no angels till after men had died. Again if angels are men, then man, when made lower than the angels, was made lower than himself. Such philosophy would be incomprehensible, and justly called vain and absurd.

2. Angels "were on probation, and some of them sinned."

In Jude, ver. 6, we read of "the angels which kept not their first estate."—"God spared not the angels that sinned." 2 Pet. 2: 4. These Scriptures set this point in a clear light [illegible] As there are "holy angels," and "angels that sinned," it follows that there are two classes. Some kept their first estate, and sinned not, while others apostatised.

3. "Those that sinned, called evil angels, or the devil's angels, have their abode upon or about the earth." In 2 Pet. 2: 4, it is said, "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell." Where is this hell located? The word Tartarus, rendered hell in this passage, occurs no where else in the Bible. Hence we conclude it must be used appropriately, and does not mean the same as hades and gehenna, which are usually rendered hell in the New Testament.

Lucian says, "The great depth of the air is called Tartarus." The following is from Dr. Whately's work on the Future State. Empedocles asserts that, "our dull lack-lustre globe is the doomed haunt and dungeon of evil angels, envious and malignant demons." The contrast between the abode of the holy angels and this sin-cursed earth, with its gloomy darkness and howling tempests, is like going from paradise into some filthy coal mine in the bowels of the earth, illuminated here and there by a dim, ghastly-light, so that the fallen angels lost much when cast down to Tartarus. Says Whately,

"That the word used by Peter which our translators render 'cast down to hell' or 'Tartarus,' is to be understood of our dark, gloomy earth, with its dull clouds, foul, vaporous, misty atmosphere, may be made to appear. Socrates called the abyss or sea, Tartarus, as does also Plato, who elsewhere calls our dim lack-lustre earth itself also Tartarus. Plutarch says our air . . . is called Tartarus, from being cold. Herein he is followed and supported by Lucian. And both Hesiod and Homer call it the ærial Tartarus. In no other sense nor way can St. Peter be understood and explained."

Suidas, an ancient writer, says it signifies, "the place in the clouds" or "in the air."

Dr. Parkhurst, the lexicograper, says, "it appears from a passage in Lucian, that by Tartarus was meant, in a physical sense, the bounds or verge of this material creation."

Dr. Ramsey, a learned writer, in speaking of Tartarus, says, "that place is, probably, at present, within the atmosphere of our earth."

According to St. Austin, the fallen angels, "after their sin, . . . were thrust down into the misty darkness of this lower air," and are "here kept and reserved in custody, unto the judgment of the great day, and general assises."

Without quoting further, we think our third point is settled, that the evil angels "have their abode upon, or about the earth." These, without doubt, are the spirits from whom the spiritual communications are received at the present day. These demons are the ones who mesmerize the mediums, for the purpose of teaching to the world through them, the "doctrines of devils." These unclean spirits are called the devil's angels.

4. "Those who did not sin are called the Lord's angels, and are 'all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation.'"

We have many records in the Bible of angels' visits to men, but they have never manifested themselves through a medium, claiming to be the spirit of some fiend. They have always appeared in their own persons, if at all; while the evil angels almost invariably manifest themselves through some person, claiming to be the spirit of a departed one. The angels of the Lord defend the Bible; whereas, the fallen angels are making every possible effort to destroy the confidence of man in the word of the Lord. The Lord's angels have been commissioned many times to go and assist his people when placed in straitened circumstances, and they have never failed to deliver. We learn that an angel of the Lord came to Peter when in prison, removed his fetters, lit up the prison with his glory, opened the massive gates and set the apostle at liberty. The text we quoted from Heb. 1: 14, is very plain, and cannot be misunderstood. The apostle says, "Are they not all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation."

They have power to render themselves visible or unvisible to the children of men, as [illegible] may deem best. Their number is represented in the Bible by millions. One important work of the angels is to gather the saints at the last day. The Savior [illegible] "he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other." Our prayer is that they may soon come and gather the jewels of the Lord.

The Great Controversy.

"This is a bound volume of 167 pages, of which a copy has come to this office through the mail. The subject is viewed from the author's stand-point, and is an off-hand, rapid and hasty glance at the more prominent points involved in historic prophecy, without any attempt at logical argument or demonstration of disputed points. It is easy and pleasant reading for those who like such a style of writing, and have no difficulty with any of the positions which are assumed in it."—Advent Herald.

Campmeetings.

As the season for campmeetings has nearly arrived, I beg leave to offer a few directions and suggestions concerning them, which are the fruit of considerable experience and observation. And as time is precious, I have none of it to spare in going round the real issue, and so I shall just pull the flax out of the hatchel and let the points out in sight.

First, then, to those who get up campmeetings, let me say:

1. Do not undertake to have a campmeeting for the mere name of the thing, and do not undertake it until, after much prayer, you are convinced it is your duty to do so.

2. Do not imagine that a campmeeting is to convince community concerning gospel truth, when your whole life of worldliness and sin contradicts the gospel openly before them.

3. Do not suppose that much permanent local good can result from a seven days' meeting, when you, by a seven years' life of apathy and carelessness, have proved that you care nothing for the salvation of the world around you.

4. When you select a place for campmeeting do not choose a location so out of the way that neither saints nor sinners can get to it, nor in a place so completely infested with drunken rowdies that half the camp will lose their peace, and the other half their temper in maintaining order during the services.

5. Do not select a place where a few bitter-spirited, hot-headed zealots have poisoned the minds of the whole community and prejudiced them against whatever truth they may hear, or where they have made themselves personally so disagreeable to their neighbors that the name of God is blasphemed among the heathen on their account.

6. Do not think that every fine grove you see is "a good place for a camp meeting." Do not select a place where there isn't half room enough for the people. Do not choose a place just far enough from the Depot so that persons will have to ride and pay fare enough to defray the entire expenses of the meeting if it were in a more convenient locality.

7. Do not leave half the fitting up to be done after the meeting begins. Do not make a stand so wide that the preachers who sit back in it cannot see the congregation, or be seen by them. Do not neglect getting your lamps ready till it is time to light them, and don't let a thousand things be "everybody's business," and so nobody attend to them.

8. Do not have a quarrel with half the brethren in the ministry before the meeting is appointed, so as to prevent their coming to meeting. Do not have a managing committee that will have to dispute every day during the meeting; or that will quarrel as to who shall preach or what shall be preached: or that will wrangle over their pet hobbies; or that will act "cross as two sticks," or that will threaten to bolt, if the meeting doesn't yield to their individual wishes.

9. Do not suppose that God will bless people at a camp meeting any more than any where else, only as they become more conformed to his will and more zealous in his work. Do not imagine that a week's meeting in the woods will make up for a year's duties neglected at home.

10. Do not expect a few preachers to do all the preaching, praying, exhorting and singing. Don't expect them to thaw their way through a glacier of backsliders, and so get at the hearts of the people. Don't expect them to cram their preaching upon the dead church as you would cram hay [illegible] it of Christ, hungry and thirsty for gospel truth.

11. If any thing goes wrong on the camp, don't make a fuss. Don't mad the wicked by threats of law, &c. Don't silence overheated zeal by rude rebuff. Suppose a fanatic should come along, be kind to him; what good would it do to knock his brains out and spatter them over every body else?

12. Keep your committee out of sight. Let them do their work quietly; don't quarrel as to who shall ring the bell or announce the appointments. Let the machinery be under cover and the weights inside, and then all will run like clock work.

13. Let the committee or some one of them have controlling powers, and firmness enough to exercise them. Don't let a meeting be spoiled to gratify the whim of some body that is all mouth and no ears. Don't let the principle of love be rode out of the camp for the sake of letting in the "horned horse" or pet hobby of some one who wants "liberty," as the miser wants gold, "all for himself, for others none."

14. Do every thing with prayer, and in humble dependence on God for help. Pray that he may help in all things. Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but all in meekness and love; so shall God's blessing rest upon us all, and our meeting be for the better and not for the worse. I have many other things to say, and may write again a few lines for those who go to campmeetings. I have not time to write smoothly or lengthily, but of the few thoughts I had on the subject, here is the PITH.

For the Crisis.

Fourth Maine Annual Conference.

THURSDAY, 10 o'clock, A. M.

The fourth Annual Conference of Adventists convened at the hour appointed in the Read Meeting House, Richmond. As but few had arrived, it was thought best to spend the morning in prayer and social remark. Our worship commenced with singing the 845th hymn, selected by L. L. Howard.

"Sweet is the love that mutual glows
Within each brother's breast,
And binds in gentlest bond each heart,
All blessing and all blessed."

Prayer was then offered by Eld. J. Partridge and others, after which many very appropriate and interesting remarks were made, on the occasion of our coming together, the nature of our hope, progress of the cause, prospects of the future, increase of believers, the work of death on some of our members and the ill health of others. It was a sweet, heavenly, rejoicing season. It was especially a cause of sorrow and tears with us all, to see the change in the countenance of our much esteemed and once robust and healthy brother N. Smith, now so disabled by disease as to be unfitted for the work of the ministry, and the active services of God's house in which he has been so faithful for many years; yet we could rejoice in the blessings of God upon him, and that he was yet permitted to be with us to aid by his counsels and prayers.

P. M. 2 o'clock. A timely and well-arranged discourse was preached by Eld. S. K. Partridge, from 2 Cor. 1: 3, 5. In the evening Eld. T. Smith preached a searching sermon from 1 Pet. 1: 13–16.

Friday, 9 o'clock A. M. The chairman called the meeting to order and remarked that we all needed help, and none but God could grant that help, then called on Eld T. Smith to open the meeting by prayer. The chairman, Dr. N. Smith, of Hallowell, was then nominated to continue to occupy the chair, and was elected. I. C. Welcome of Richmond, was nominated and chosen scribe.

A committee of three was then chosen to arrange business for the conference; that committee was I. C. Welcome, S. K. Partridge, and T. Smith. The reading of the call for the conference was desired by Eld S. K. Partridge, read by the scribe. It was then moved that a committee of three be chosen to present to the conference a plan for a more permanent organization of our societies. The chair appointed Eld. T. Smith, I. C. Welcome, J. Partridge, to which were subsequently added, S. K. Partridge and E. M. Haggett. Moved to now hear reports from the churches.

Eld. T. Smith, of Brewer, said, There are several good, substantial brethren in Brewer Holden; has been some revival the past and winter, several baptized. During the work some new views were brought among us by Eld. Bragg, that we were all in Babylon, &c. I preached on the subject to show their error, and left, for I will not be

ROUND POND.

I went to Round Pond and labored several weeks with the Adventists, Methodists and Baptists; several were converted. I baptized two; several others were baptized and united with other churches.

ORRINGTON.

At Orrington there seems nothing but desolation. There are two small parties called Baleyites and Cummingsites. There are a few good brethren there, but discouraged and disheartened, where they once numbered over one hundred members.

SURRY.

I believe they now have no meeting in Surry; once a good company, but now scattered and distracted.

HERMON.

Only a few scattered brethren left in Hermon, where there was once a large society of active members, but almost disheartened now.

LINCOLNVILLE.

There are a few left in Lincolnville who are striving to live for the kingdom.

CAMDEN.

There is one Dr. Eaton in Camden who has embraced the faith and circulated many books and tracts, and is extending some influence for the cause in his region.

BANGOR.

There are a few in Bangor who are trying to live and serve the Lord, and keep free from distracting views.

WHITEFIELD.

Eld. S. K. Partridge said, We have never been but few in Whitefield. In one neighborhood they now have regular prayer meetings Sunday P. M. I have four regular appointments in different towns.

HOPE.

In Hope we have good congregations of all classes, a good class of brethren trying to live; they have a great desire for some one to come to preach to them. They have one difficulty; the most of them want gospel order; but some of them do not. Again, they do not seem to understand that they ought to support preaching. Perhaps I am in fault about it, as I do not take pay for preaching. Here Eld. P. made some very important remarks on church order and propriety in conduct, in order to obtain a good report, and be useful to society.

From Eld. J. Blain.

BRO. GRANT:—As Brn. always love to hear how the truth prospers, and especially when it reaches new fields, it may be of some use to publish the following letter which has just reached me, having first been to Buffalo. As the Bro. wishes to sell our books, and I shall supply him, we can see he is not afraid to have our views known, as too many are in our day, when the martyr spirit seems to be at a low ebb, though not quite extinguished.

"PAWTUCKET, R. I., June 16, 1858.

Bro. Blain:—Having just read your book, Death not Life, which I got by mere accident when in Providence the other day, I can say that I have long been a believer in the doctrine that the wicked will be destroyed. I took my opinion from the Bible, not knowing at the time that any one else in the world thought as I did. But of late I have seen a number of books on this subject. Yours is the best and most to the point of any I have seen, and should convince any one. I have been in the book business many years, and think that thousands of your books could be sold. Please let me know what you could let me have them for by the hundred.

Your brother, John Blain, baptized me and my wife, and has just told me where to write to you. I have many friends here who believe the doctrine you preach, and it would just suit me to circulate books that contain the truth. Please answer at once, &c. WM. R. WARNER."

I yesterday had a very pleasant visit with a private gentleman in Boston who has just published a good pamphlet of thirty-two pages to advocate the doctrine of life and death just as we hold it. The curiosity of the work is that the author is an educated Unitarian and, like the brother in Pautucket, studied out the truth himself having seen no work on the subject, and told me I was the first person he ever saw and knew that they held our views, except Bro. H. Grew, with whom he was slightly acquainted and learned his views. He is seventy-five years of age and always lived in Boston.

We can see, brethren, that we have yet more work to do before all, even in old New England, will know that evil is to have an end by the destruction of sinners; while all know of the flattering and too readily-embraced doctrine, that woe will [illegible] is to end, and we who have learned how it is to end, should feel the deep responsibility resting on us to let poor sinners know that they have a serious and cross-bearing work to do before they can hope for eternal life and glory. If they fail of that, "the fall of that house will be great," though misery comes to an end. They should be warned of their danger, that our skirts be found clear from their blood when the Lord comes.

The pamphlet named above is entitled THE FUTURE LIFE, by J. P. Blanchard, and can be had of Crosby, Nichols, & Co., 117 Washington street. The author lives at No. 4 in Waverly Place—No. 18 South street. Perhaps he too may be persecuted for new views, and need sympathy from us who should hail him as a fellow laborer in a glorious reform.

The Voice of the Church.

The "Rockland County Messenger," a secular paper of Haverstraw, N. Y., thus speaks of the above work:

"This work takes the ground, not that there is to be a period called the millennium, after which Christ shall come to judgment, but that Christ is to come first and usher in the millennium by the destruction of his enemies and the resurrection of the pious dead. These are to reign with him in person on the earth for a thousand years, after which all the dead are to be raised and the world is to be judged. This event is to be ushered in at the close of the sixth thousandth year of the world's history. . . . We commend the book to all who are interested in the momentous topics of which it treats."

Sanctification.

The following is from the New York Observer, but we think the Presbytery of North River could not have taken the Bible for their text book, when they exclude Brn. Belden and Hill for teaching the doctrine of sanctification, so plainly expressed in the Scriptures. Many times we are taught in the word of truth to "sanctify" ourselves; and can we suppose for one moment that the Lord requires us to do that which will "be subversive of the purity, as well as the peace of the church?" We read, "he that committed sin is of the Devil."

PERFECTIONISM: DESPOTISM.

By direction of the Presbytery of North River, I send the following extract from their minutes, passed on the 17th inst., with a request that it may be published in the New York Observer.

"Whereas, the Synod, at their last meeting, sent back the matter of reference in the case of the Rev. Henry Belden and the Rev. William Hill, to this Presbytery for final adjudication, it is therefore moved that we proceed to issue the case; and,

Whereas, the Synod enjoined upon Messrs. Belden and Hill, that without delay, they solemnly and prayerfully reconsider their views on the subject of sanctification, and renounce their errors; and,

Whereas, Messrs. Belden and Hill have given no evidence to Presbytery that their views on the subject of sanctification have materially changed, since the previous action of Presbytery in the case; and,

Whereas, Synod at their last meeting, "wished it to be distinctly understood that they consider the doctrine of sinless perfection, or entire sanctification, to be subversive of the purity, as well as the peace of the church, and that the preaching of said doctrine cannot be tolerated upon the part of any minister in their connection;" and,

Whereas, Presbytery are fully convinced, that any further delay in coming to an ultimate decision, will not result in a change of sentiment on their part; therefore,

Resolved, That the Rev. Henry Belden and the Rev. Wm. Hill be, and they hereby are deposed from the gospel ministry.

Resolved, That the Stated Clerk be directed to forward the above minutes to the N. Y. Observer and to the N. Y. Evangelist, with a request that it be published.

Bathing.

Among those who stand most in need of bathing, for the sake of cleanliness, are the studious and sedentary. By the studious, however, I mean just now, not so much those who mingle with their studies a reasonable amount of active exercise in the open air, as those who sit from morning to night, as it were, poring over their books and papers, and scarcely know whether they are in the world or out of it. I mean, then, in other words, mere book-worms.

By the sedentary, I mean, also, those who continually sit at their employments [illegible] mere living statues. Labor, in these days, is so much divided that the sedentary are becoming a very numerous class. It embraces millions of our own sex, and hundreds of millions of females.

Both the book-worm and the statue sit much of their time immersed in bad air. It may be bad, because deprived of oxygen, its life-giving principle, and loaded with carbonic acid. It may be worse, still, by being loaded with poisonous animal, vegetable, or mineral effluvia. All these evils are aggravated by a very high temperature.

It has been already stated that we are apt to have all our rooms too highly heated. Now, none are more liable to this error than they of whom we have just been speaking. They are careless or absent-minded; they often use stoves; and, ere they are aware, the heat is ten or twelve or fifteen degrees higher than it ought to be. And yet they seem not to know it, unless they are told of it.

This excessive heat, as has been abundantly shown, puts out the internal fire of the human system almost as fast as if that were its sole object. It especially deadens the activity of the lungs and the skin. The active efforts of both these will diminish, day by day, and the skin will become greatly enfeebled, if not actually diseased.

And yet, in the midst of all this error and the consequent deterioration, should a due regard to the laws of God, physical and moral, lead to occasional cold bathing, the recuperative powers of the system will be most fully and immediately manifested, and the result will be most happy.

Among the sedentary who need bathing, are the shoe and boot maker, the painter, the gilder, the clerk, the accountant, the dress-maker, the milliner, the printer, the grocer, the stone-cutter, the druggist, the brazier, the turner, and the manufacturer of lead and worker in copper. Nor do the hatter, brush-maker, bookbinder, chemist, collier, miller, baker, cook, currier, glass-worker, lawyer, clergyman, or teacher, need it much less.

Those who are of sluggish temperament need it much more than those whose temperament is active and sanguine. The middle-aged require it more than the young, and the aged more than either. Females, except the small proportion of them who have sufficient exercise in the open air, need it, other things being equal, much more than males.

They who, while their employments are studious or sedentary, at the same time eat excessively, will need bathing much more than the abstemious. This necessity will, of course, be greatly enhanced by excess of clothing; and by all things and arrangements which exclude air from their skins, either by night or by day.

They who use exciting drinks of any kind, or high-seasoned food, or are in the daily habit of using drugs, especially those which are more generally regarded as harmless (but which, for that very reason, are working out a deleterious influence with the more certainty in the end,) are among the individuals who must use the bath, more or less, or perish.

There is one thought here which must be hazarded. Are not the very individuals who are here said to need bathing least, because already well endowed with vitality, among the very persons who would gain most by its use? If the others perish without it, would not those live more highly with it, in the same proportion?—Laws of Health.

ITALY.

The terrible eruption of Mount Vesuvius, which commenced on the 26th of May, was still active at the latest advices. The following extracts from correspondence of the London Times show the character and progress of the eruption:

NAPLES, May 31. Since Saturday the eruption has proceeded with constantly increasing violence, and has presented at night a more and more magnificent spectacle. In my last letter I mentioned that there issued from the great basin of fire in the Atrio a single stream of lava, which, after a tortuous course, was descending the declivity of the mountain. This stream has continued its course, varying in breadth according to the accidents of the ground, and seems now to direct itself to a point between Portici and Torre del Greco, but much nearer the latter than the former. It approaches close to the scattered farmhouses which lie above the towns at the foot of the mountain, many of which it [illegible] two other streams of lava broke out of the great basin, and are descending the mountains towards the neighborhood of Portici. These streams seem to follow the direction of ravines, which run nearly parallel to the ridge on which the Observatory and the Hermitage stand. These buildings have been hitherto saved from submersion by the lava, by their great elevation; the fluid naturally following the direction of the lower ground at either side of them.

Last night the spectacle was peculiarly grand and imposing. The lava was poured in increased quantities along each of the streams already established, and being in a high state of incandescence, presented a peculiarly splendid appearance.

At about 8 o'clock an immense torrent of lava broke over the ridge which confines the basin of craters, in the direction of the Somma, as an immense torrent of liquid fire, and with such extraordinary rapidity that in less than an hour it had descended through a considerable portion of the mountain. Its progress was then retarded, partly by the diminished steepness of the ground, and partly by transverse ravines which must be filled before the fluid can advance. Nothing could exceed the splendor of this torrent of liquid fire, forming the fourth principal stream of lava; but the most extraordinary burst of splendor which has been presented since the commencement of the eruption, took place soon after 9 o'clock, when all the mouths seemed to be simultaneously called into violent action, and to vomit forth such torrents of lava that the entire mountain seemed one blaze of fire; the varied colors produced in different parts, owing probably in part to reflection, presented a beautiful and striking appearance. The lurid light diffused from this enormous burning mass rendered visible the subjacent country, the towns, the coast and the bay.

On each night several thousands of persons of all ranks, from the peer to the peasant, urged by curiosity, repair to the scene of this extraordinary spectacle. The darkness being complete, and the route in many parts difficult, each party is furnished with a torch, and the view of these hundreds of torches flitting about between the streams of lava is most curious, presenting the appearance of multitudes of fireflies.

The hermitage, which is close to the great basin of craters and rivers of lava, is approached by a tolerably good carriage road, and, as may be supposed, hundreds of vehicles of every description, from the caleche of the millionaire to the humble coricolo, are collected there toward midnight. Donkey parties abound, of which ladies do not fear to form a part.

JUNE 1.—The state of the mountain last night was nearly the same as on the preceding night, the eruption, perhaps, being a little less violent. The great streams of lava already described continue to flow slowly in the same direction.

Part of the extraordinary splendor of the spectacle on Sunday night was due to the burning of forest over which the lava passed. The Neapolitans congratulate themselves on the circumstance of the lava having been directed into so many different streams; for if, as in former eruptions, it had all been thrown into one channel, the destruction which must have ensued would have been tremendous.

The lava begins where it did in 1855.

Domestic Summary.

THE FLOOD AT THE WEST.

The St. Louis Democrat of the 16th inst. states that the town of Brooklyn, in Illinois, has been depopulated by the watery invasion arising from the overflow of the Mississippi. The place contained several hundred inhabitants, but on the 14th inst. only two families remained. The place is destroyed. This is the second place, in Illinoise that has been overwhelmed by the floods and deserted by its inhabitants. It has been reported that Cain had shared the same fate, but the last accounts say that the reports have been greatly exaggerated. Severe injuries, however, have doubtless been inflicted upon the city.

The flood on the Missouri has carried away all the bridges between Platte city and Weston. At the latter place two bridges valued at $17,000 were destroyed. All the bottom lands along the river were submerged, and immense damage sustained.

The latest dispatches from the West, we are glad to notice, report the waters as falling rapidly.—[Traveller.

The U. S. steamer Shubrick, from Philadelphia via. Panama, arrived at San Francisco on the 27th of May.

The papers contain more than the usual amount of murders, assassinations, casualties, etc.

Advices from Oregon of May 24 announce a general Indian outbreak there.

Col. Steptoe's command on the snake river was attacked on the 16th of May, and forced to retreat, with a loss of fifty privates, three officers, two howitzers, baggage wagons, and nearly all his animals. Three companies of dragoons and one of infantry were engaged with 1500 Indians. Of the officers killed were Capt. Winder and Lieut. Gassen.

THE REFORM CONVENTION.

RUTLAND, June 26.

The chief incident of the Convention today was the introduction by Mrs. Julia Branch of New York, of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Slavery and degradation of woman proceeds from the institution of marriage; and by the marriage contract she loses the control of her name, her person, her property, her labor, her affections, her children and her freedom.

An exciting discussion followed upon this resolution, the speakers being Mrs. Branch, H. S. Foster, Joel Tiffany, Mr. Levely, Mrs. Ernestine, L. Rose, F. W. Coans and others.

The afternoon session was devoted to a discussion of the slavery question, and speeches were made P. Pillsbury, Wm. Goodell, J. S. Foster, Mrs. Rose and others. Mr. Foster cared nothing about the Union. He would say, rather than a single slave should be held in bondage, down with the Union, down with the Constitution, down with religion, down with the church, down with the Bible, and let all go to hell and damnation.

The convention is to be continued this evening and to-morrow. About two thousand persons were in attendance to-day, and more were expected to-morrow (Sunday). Great excitement exists here in regard to the Convention.

INCREASING RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN ENGLAND.

[illegible] of the "movement for united prayer" by the opening of prayer meetings in various districts of London. The Central Meeting held at Exeter Hall nearly fills the room. Some ladies are among the number. A larger room will be provided should this be found necessary.

Prayer meetings have been appointed to be held at 48 Great Marlborough street, on Tuesdays; and on Wednesdays at half past 4 P. M., at Stafford House, Marylebone road.

PRAYER MEETING ON A WHALING BARK.

The New Bedford Mercury mentions the institution of a daily morning and evening prayer-meeting in the forecastle of the whaling bark "Iona," which left that port recently. At the first meeting, held before leaving port, the crew adopted a series of resolutions, among other things pledging them against profane swearing, and to sustain the meeting for prayers every night and morning.—[Independent.

ROUND POND.

I went to Round Pond and labored several weeks with the Adventists, Methodists and Baptists; several were converted. I baptized two; several others were baptized and united with other churches.

ORRINGTON.

At Orrington there seems nothing but desolation. There are two small parties called Baleyites and Cummingsites. There are a few good brethren there, but discouraged and disheartened, where they once numbered over one hundred members.

SURRY.

I believe they now have no meeting in Surry; once a good company, but now scattered and distracted.

HERMON.

Only a few scattered brethren left in Hermon, where there was once a large society of active members, but almost disheartened now.

LINCOLNVILLE.

There are a few left in Lincolnville who are striving to live for the kingdom.

CAMDEN.

There is one Dr. Eaton in Camden who has embraced the faith and circulated many books and tracts, and is extending some influence for the cause in his region.

BANGOR.

There are a few in Bangor who are trying to live and serve the Lord, and keep free from distracting views.

WHITEFIELD.

Eld. S. K. Partridge said, We have never been but few in Whitefield. In one neighborhood they now have regular prayer meetings Sunday P. M. I have four regular appointments in different towns.

HOPE.

In Hope we have good congregations of all classes, a good class of brethren trying to live; they have a great desire for some one to come to preach to them. They have one difficulty; the most of them want gospel order; but some of them do not. Again, they do not seem to understand that they ought to support preaching. Perhaps I am in fault about it, as I do not take pay for preaching. Here Eld. P. made some very important remarks on church order and propriety in conduct, in order to obtain a good report, and be useful to society.

From Eld. J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—As Brn. always love to hear how the truth prospers, and especially when it reaches new fields, it may be of some use to publish the following letter which has just reached me, having first been to Buffalo. As the Bro. wishes to sell our books, and I shall supply him, we can see he is not afraid to have our views known, as too many are in our day, when the martyr spirit seems to be at a low ebb, though not quite extinguished.

"Pawtucket, R. I., June 16, 1858.

Bro. Blain:—Having just read your book, Death not Life, which I got by mere accident when in Providence the other day, I can say that I have long been a believer in the doctrine that the wicked will be destroyed. I took my opinion from the Bible, not knowing at the time that any one else in the world thought as I did. But of late I have seen a number of books on this subject. Yours is the best and most to the point of any I have seen, and should convince any one. I have been in the book business many years, and think that thousands of your books could be sold. Please let me know what you could let me have them for by the hundred.

Your brother, John Blain, baptized me and my wife, and has just told me where to write to you. I have many friends here who believe the doctrine you preach, and it would just suit me to circulate books that contain the truth. Please answer at once, &c. Wm. R. Warner."

I yesterday had a very pleasant visit with a private gentleman in Boston who has just published a good pamphlet of thirty-two pages to advocate the doctrine of life and death just as we hold it. The curiosity of the work is that the author is an educated Unitarian and, like the brother in Pautucket, studied out the truth himself having seen no work on the subject, and told me I was the first person he ever saw and knew that they held our views, except Bro. H. Grew, with whom he was slightly acquainted and learned his views. He is seventy-five years of age and always lived in Boston.

We can see, brethren, that we have yet more work to do before all, even in old New England, will know that evil is to have an end by the destruction of sinners; while all know of the flattering and too readily-embraced doctrine, that woe will [illegible] is to end, and we who have learned how it is to end, should feel the deep responsibility resting on us to let poor sinners know that they have a serious and cross-bearing work to do before they can hope for eternal life and glory. If they fail of that, "the fall of that house will be great," though misery comes to an end. They should be warned of their danger, that our skirts be found clear from their blood when the Lord comes.

The pamphlet named above is entitled The Future Life, by J. P. Blanchard, and can be had of Crosby, Nichols, & Co., 117 Washington street. The author lives at No. 4 in Waverly Place—No. 18 South street. Perhaps he too may be persecuted for new views, and need sympathy from us who should hail him as a fellow laborer in a glorious reform.

For the Crisis.

The Voice of the Church.

The "Rockland County Messenger," a secular paper of Haverstraw, N. Y., thus speaks of the above work:

"This work takes the ground, not that there is to be a period called the millennium, after which Christ shall come to judgment, but that Christ is to come first and usher in the millennium by the destruction of his enemies and the resurrection of the pious dead. These are to reign with him in person on the earth for a thousand years, after which all the dead are to be raised and the world is to be judged. This event is to be ushered in at the close of the sixth thousandth year of the world's history. . . . We commend the book to all who are interested in the momentous topics of which it treats."

Sanctification.

The following is from the New York Observer, but we think the Presbytery of North River could not have taken the Bible for their text book, when they exclude Brn. Belden and Hill for teaching the doctrine of sanctification, so plainly expressed in the Scriptures. Many times we are taught in the word of truth to "sanctify" ourselves; and can we suppose for one moment that the Lord requires us to do that which will "be subversive of the purity, as well as the peace of the church?" We read, "he that committed sin is of the Devil."

PERFECTIONISM: DESPOTISM.

By direction of the Presbytery of North River, I send the following extract from their minutes, passed on the 17th inst., with a request that it may be published in the New York Observer.

"Whereas, the Synod, at their last meeting, sent back the matter of reference in the case of the Rev. Henry Belden and the Rev. William Hill, to this Presbytery for final adjudication, it is therefore moved that we proceed to issue the case; and,

Whereas, the Synod enjoined upon Messrs. Belden and Hill, that without delay, they solemnly and prayerfully reconsider their views on the subject of sanctification, and renounce their errors; and,

Whereas, Messrs. Belden and Hill have given no evidence to Presbytery that their views on the subject of sanctification have materially changed, since the previous action of Presbytery in the case; and,

Whereas, Synod at their last meeting, "wished it to be distinctly understood that they consider the doctrine of sinless perfection, or entire sanctification, to be subversive of the purity, as well as the peace of the church, and that the preaching of said doctrine cannot be tolerated upon the part of any minister in their connection;" and,

Whereas, Presbytery are fully convinced, that any further delay in coming to an ultimate decision, will not result in a change of sentiment on their part; therefore,

Resolved, That the Rev. Henry Belden and the Rev. Wm. Hill be, and they hereby are deposed from the gospel ministry.

Resolved, That the Stated Clerk be directed to forward the above minutes to the N. Y. Observer and to the N. Y. Evangelist, with a request that it be published.

Bathing.

Among those who stand most in need of bathing, for the sake of cleanliness, are the studious and sedentary. By the studious, however, I mean just now, not so much those who mingle with their studies a reasonable amount of active exercise in the open air, as those who sit from morning to night, as it were, poring over their books and papers, and scarcely know whether they are in the world or out of it. I mean, then, in other words, mere book-worms.

By the sedentary, I mean, also, those who continually sit at their employments [illegible] mere living statues. Labor, in these days, is so much divided that the sedentary are becoming a very numerous class. It embraces millions of our own sex, and hundreds of millions of females.

Both the book-worm and the statue sit much of their time immersed in bad air. It may be bad, because deprived of oxygen, its life-giving principle, and loaded with carbonic acid. It may be worse, still, by being loaded with poisonous animal, vegetable, or mineral effluvia. All these evils are aggravated by a very high temperature.

It has been already stated that we are apt to have all our rooms too highly heated. Now, none are more liable to this error than they of whom we have just been speaking. They are careless or absent-minded; they often use stoves; and, ere they are aware, the heat is ten or twelve or fifteen degrees higher than it ought to be. And yet they seem not to know it, unless they are told of it.

This excessive heat, as has been abundantly shown, puts out the internal fire of the human system almost as fast as if that were its sole object. It especially deadens the activity of the lungs and the skin. The active efforts of both these will diminish, day by day, and the skin will become greatly enfeebled, if not actually diseased.

And yet, in the midst of all this error and the consequent deterioration, should a due regard to the laws of God, physical and moral, lead to occasional cold bathing, the recuperative powers of the system will be most fully and immediately manifested, and the result will be most happy.

Among the sedentary who need bathing, are the shoe and boot maker, the painter, the gilder, the clerk, the accountant, the dress-maker, the milliner, the printer, the grocer, the stone-cutter, the druggist, the brazier, the turner, and the manufacturer of lead and worker in copper. Nor do the hatter, brush-maker, bookbinder, chemist, collier, miller, baker, cook, currier, glass-worker, lawyer, clergyman, or teacher, need it much less.

Those who are of sluggish temperament need it much more than those whose temperament is active and sanguine. The middle-aged require it more than the young, and the aged more than either. Females, except the small proportion of them who have sufficient exercise in the open air, need it, other things being equal, much more than males.

They who, while their employments are studious or sedentary, at the same time eat excessively, will need bathing much more than the abstemious. This necessity will, of course, be greatly enhanced by excess of clothing; and by all things and arrangements which exclude air from their skins, either by night or by day.

They who use exciting drinks of any kind, or high-seasoned food, or are in the daily habit of using drugs, especially those which are more generally regarded as harmless (but which, for that very reason, are working out a deleterious influence with the more certainty in the end,) are among the individuals who must use the bath, more or less, or perish.

There is one thought here which must be hazarded. Are not the very individuals who are here said to need bathing least, because already well endowed with vitality, among the very persons who would gain most by its use? If the others perish without it, would not those live more highly with it, in the same proportion?—Laws of Health.

ITALY.

The terrible eruption of Mount Vesuvius, which commenced on the 26th of May, was still active at the latest advices. The following extracts from correspondence of the London Times show the character and progress of the eruption:

Naples, May 31. Since Saturday the eruption has proceeded with constantly increasing violence, and has presented at night a more and more magnificent spectacle. In my last letter I mentioned that there issued from the great basin of fire in the Atrio a single stream of lava, which, after a tortuous course, was descending the declivity of the mountain. This stream has continued its course, varying in breadth according to the accidents of the ground, and seems now to direct itself to a point between Portici and Torre del Greco, but much nearer the latter than the former. It approaches close to the scattered farmhouses which lie above the towns at the foot of the mountain, many of which it [illegible] two other streams of lava broke out of the great basin, and are descending the mountains towards the neighborhood of Portici. These streams seem to follow the direction of ravines, which run nearly parallel to the ridge on which the Observatory and the Hermitage stand. These buildings have been hitherto saved from submersion by the lava, by their great elevation; the fluid naturally following the direction of the lower ground at either side of them.

Last night the spectacle was peculiarly grand and imposing. The lava was poured in increased quantities along each of the streams already established, and being in a high state of incandescence, presented a peculiarly splendid appearance.

At about 8 o'clock an immense torrent of lava broke over the ridge which confines the basin of craters, in the direction of the Somma, as an immense torrent of liquid fire, and with such extraordinary rapidity that in less than an hour it had descended through a considerable portion of the mountain. Its progress was then retarded, partly by the diminished steepness of the ground, and partly by transverse ravines which must be filled before the fluid can advance. Nothing could exceed the splendor of this torrent of liquid fire, forming the fourth principal stream of lava; but the most extraordinary burst of splendor which has been presented since the commencement of the eruption, took place soon after 9 o'clock, when all the mouths seemed to be simultaneously called into violent action, and to vomit forth such torrents of lava that the entire mountain seemed one blaze of fire; the varied colors produced in different parts, owing probably in part to reflection, presented a beautiful and striking appearance. The lurid light diffused from this enormous burning mass rendered visible the subjacent country, the towns, the coast and the bay.

On each night several thousands of persons of all ranks, from the peer to the peasant, urged by curiosity, repair to the scene of this extraordinary spectacle. The darkness being complete, and the route in many parts difficult, each party is furnished with a torch, and the view of these hundreds of torches flitting about between the streams of lava is most curious, presenting the appearance of multitudes of fireflies.

The hermitage, which is close to the great basin of craters and rivers of lava, is approached by a tolerably good carriage road, and, as may be supposed, hundreds of vehicles of every description, from the caleche of the millionaire to the humble coricolo, are collected there toward midnight. Donkey parties abound, of which ladies do not fear to form a part.

June 1.—The state of the mountain last night was nearly the same as on the preceding night, the eruption, perhaps, being a little less violent. The great streams of lava already described continue to flow slowly in the same direction.

Part of the extraordinary splendor of the spectacle on Sunday night was due to the burning of forest over which the lava passed. The Neapolitans congratulate themselves on the circumstance of the lava having been directed into so many different streams; for if, as in former eruptions, it had all been thrown into one channel, the destruction which must have ensued would have been tremendous.

The lava begins where it did in 1855.

Domestic Summary.

THE FLOOD AT THE WEST.

The St. Louis Democrat of the 16th inst. states that the town of Brooklyn, in Illinois, has been depopulated by the watery invasion arising from the overflow of the Mississippi. The place contained several hundred inhabitants, but on the 14th inst. only two families remained. The place is destroyed. This is the second place, in Illinoise that has been overwhelmed by the floods and deserted by its inhabitants. It has been reported that Cain had shared the same fate, but the last accounts say that the reports have been greatly exaggerated. Severe injuries, however, have doubtless been inflicted upon the city.

The flood on the Missouri has carried away all the bridges between Platte city and Weston. At the latter place two bridges valued at $17,000 were destroyed. All the bottom lands along the river were submerged, and immense damage sustained.

The latest dispatches from the West, we are glad to notice, report the waters as falling rapidly.—[Traveller.

The U. S. steamer Shubrick, from Philadelphia via. Panama, arrived at San Francisco on the 27th of May.

The papers contain more than the usual amount of murders, assassinations, casualties, etc.

Advices from Oregon of May 24 announce a general Indian outbreak there.

Col. Steptoe's command on the snake river was attacked on the 16th of May, and forced to retreat, with a loss of fifty privates, three officers, two howitzers, baggage wagons, and nearly all his animals. Three companies of dragoons and one of infantry were engaged with 1500 Indians. Of the officers killed were Capt. Winder and Lieut. Gassen.

THE REFORM CONVENTION.

Rutland, June 26.

The chief incident of the Convention today was the introduction by Mrs. Julia Branch of New York, of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Slavery and degradation of woman proceeds from the institution of marriage; and by the marriage contract she loses the control of her name, her person, her property, her labor, her affections, her children and her freedom.

An exciting discussion followed upon this resolution, the speakers being Mrs. Branch, H. S. Foster, Joel Tiffany, Mr. Levely, Mrs. Ernestine, L. Rose, F. W. Coans and others.

The afternoon session was devoted to a discussion of the slavery question, and speeches were made P. Pillsbury, Wm. Goodell, J. S. Foster, Mrs. Rose and others. Mr. Foster cared nothing about the Union. He would say, rather than a single slave should be held in bondage, down with the Union, down with the Constitution, down with religion, down with the church, down with the Bible, and let all go to hell and damnation.

The convention is to be continued this evening and to-morrow. About two thousand persons were in attendance to-day, and more were expected to-morrow (Sunday). Great excitement exists here in regard to the Convention.

INCREASING RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN ENGLAND.

[illegible] of the "movement for united prayer" by the opening of prayer meetings in various districts of London. The Central Meeting held at Exeter Hall nearly fills the room. Some ladies are among the number. A larger room will be provided should this be found necessary.

Prayer meetings have been appointed to be held at 48 Great Marlborough street, on Tuesdays; and on Wednesdays at half past 4 P. M., at Stafford House, Marylebone road.

PRAYER MEETING ON A WHALING BARK.

The New Bedford Mercury mentions the institution of a daily morning and evening prayer-meeting in the forecastle of the whaling bark "Iona," which left that port recently. At the first meeting, held before leaving port, the crew adopted a series of resolutions, among other things pledging them against profane swearing, and to sustain the meeting for prayers every night and morning.—[Independent.

For the Crisis.

"THY WILL BE DONE."

No words to me are half so dear
As those I have recorded here;
No prayer so fully comprehend
What I would ask of Christ my Friend.

Thy will (not mine) I know is best;
Let that be done, and I am blest,—
Whate'er befall, where'er I be,
United still I am with Thee.

My will in harmony with Thine;
Thy peace, thy love, I know are mine;
Thy treasures vast, a boundless store,
I claim my own, what need I more?

When self no more I seek to please,
I tread the thorny path with ease;
For what are all its thorns to me,
When I my Savior's imprints see?

When self is fully crucified,
I happy am what'er betide;
For well I know a Father's will,
Assigns me every joy, or ill.

Though foes on every hand are found,
My joy shall still in Christ abound;
He will impart his warlike skill,
If I but sink into his will.

Though threat'ning clouds do me o'erspread,
And lower in darkness round my head;
My feet shall tread a lightsome way,
Illumined bright with heaven's ray.

The angry billows dashing foam,
Will only bring me nearer home;—
Though in the furnace I may be,
The cords but burn to set me free.

The cross doth slay the man of sin,
That a new life may thus begin;
Forth from his dust a saint is born,
God's jewelled casket to adorn.

Eternal Life.

What is eternal life? Ans. "This is eternal life, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Jno. 17: 3. "To be spiritually minded is life." Rom. 8: 6. This is the truth certainly; but say, friend, would you have us limit our idea of eternal life to these two passages alone, or, "comparing spiritual things with spiritual things," would you have us seek more light? "I would have you understand that 'eternal life' does not mean eternal existence, but the 'knowledge of God,' a 'spiritual mind,' one that enjoys the fellowship of the Father and the Son." Yes, then you would have us understand that the righteous receive in this life their full reward! for certainly they are the "servants of God" here, and Paul teaches us (Rom. 6: 22,) that the "end" of such a course is "everlasting life." Paul promised "eternal life" at the end, at the "revelation of the righteous judgment of God," who will at that time render it to to those who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for immortality. (Rom. 2: 5, 6, 7.) You promise it now at the beginning of "well doing." Which of you is inspired?! Paul knew God, but had he eternal life? Why did he then hope for it? (Titus 1: 2)

Again, Christ promised eternal life in the world to come; you say we have it now: Christ puts "eternal life" after the resurrection, (Jno. 5: 28, 29,) you before; which of you is a "teacher sent from God?" There seems to be clashing here. Paul contradicts Paul, and Christ opposes Christ. Would you have us understand matters thus? Would you thus involve God's truth in darkness? You would certainly, if you still persist in your idea that eternal life is mere "reconciliation with God!" And further, I assure you the half of the mischief and perplexity of your idea has not been told yet. But you say, "it reads so." Very well, we read, "This is my body." Is therefore the popish idea of transubstantiation true? It reads so. Again, "My life is wind;" but is the wind Job's life? It reads so. Again we read, "I am the vine." Is therefore a "vine" Christ? It reads so. Again, "I am the resurrection." Is therefore the resurrection Christ? It reads so. Once more. "God is love," "God is light;" yet is "love" or "light" God—the God whose face we seek? It reads so. Hence your idea of "eternal life" has no better foundation than that of transubstantiation, and the same logic which sustains it will sustain all these other absurd ideas which I have mentioned, for they all read so.

[illegible]

away." We are of the dust and unto dust we must return. Gen. 3: 19. But we go not to the grave to be forgotten of God; there is an appointed time at which all shall be remembered. Job 14: 13. All them that are in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; they that have done evil unto the resurrection of condemnation. Jno. 5: 29. The harvest time will then come when every man will reap according to the seed which he has sown in this life. They that have sown to the flesh, (been carnally minded) will of the flesh reap corruption, be hurt of the second death, and die to live no more forever: thus to be carnally minded is death. But they that have sown to the Spirit, (known the living and true God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent, been spiritually minded, &c.,) shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting; Gal. 6: 8; and having put on incorruption and been clothed with immortality, they will die no more. Hence to be spiritually minded is life; it secures in the end eternal life. Herein agreeth Christ, prophet and apostle; darkness is dispersed and light appears. Let us walk in the light, "mind the things of the Spirit," and reap an everlasting life in "the world which is to come." H. F. CARPENTER.

TUNE.—"Star of the evening."

Beautiful Star ere long to rise,
Gilding glory through the skies;
And thy sceptre ere shall rise
Out of Judah, Israel's tribe.
Star of the East,
Bethlehem's star;
Star of the Morning,
Beautiful, beautiful star!

Thou the bright and morning star,
Shall have all glory near and far,
And God shall beautify his place
And make his feet most glorious.
Star of the East,
Bethlehem's star,
Star of the Mornisg,
Beautiful, beautiful star.

Beautiful Star, whose heavenly light
Shone round Shepherds at midnight;
Then thou bid'st the Gentiles come
By thy brightness as the Sun.
Star of the East,

Star of the Morning,
Beautiful, beautiful Star.

Beautiful star, whose brilliant reign
Exceeds the sight of earth's domain,
Rise, and wave thy sceptre here;
Rise, and thy lone subjects cheer.

The Conference in Worcester.

The brethren who met in conference at Worcester on the 8th day of June, came from different parts of the country, of kindred faith and joy, and with the anticipation of the joys of paradise to come.

We had a feast of love and comfort. Many hearts were made glad with the word of God, the good news of Jesus coming soon, and the present position that we occupy in relation to the deceptions of the last days, and to learn that God's word in prophecy has marked the path of the church to walk in, and that God will have a people on the watch to declare it to the people.

The brethren returned home much encouraged to hold fast the beginning of their confidence firm to the end. They concluded it was the best meeting they had enjoyed for some years.

May the Lord bless this weeping band of pilgrims, and strengthen them in the way of righteousness to labor for souls the short time they have to stay, that they may have a good clearance when the Judge shall appear.

Fools' Proverbs.

Get drunk yourself, and say that your neighbor staggers.

Stand on your head, and say that the world is upside down.

Spend your time poking in cess-pools, and wonder that you get yourself dirty.

Mind everybody's business, and wonder at their ingratitude.

Stone a dog, and wonder that he barks at you.

Act like Satan through the week, and [illegible] wonder that your exhortations don't affect his heart.

Hate everybody, and be astonished that men return the compliment.

Believe all you hear, and call yourself a fool for being so credulous.

Give all you have to the rich, and have them forget you when they have got it.

Do all these things, and verily a fool's reward shall be thine. H. L. H.

WHAT SHALL I WISH THEE?

What shall I wish thee, my darling boy?
Shall I wish thee a life of unclouded joy,
That the hours shall pass like the summer wind
And leave not a trace of woe behind?
Not this, my child.

Shall I wish my boy the noble heir
To mines of gold and jewels rare—
A mighty place in the world's estate,
And a lofty home with the wealthy great?
Not this, my child.

Shall I wish for thee an honored name
That shall stand on the golden rolls of fame;
That thy deeds may be echoed along Time's shore
Till the echoes of time shall be heard no more?
Not this, my child.

But oh, for my child a humble seat
On Calvary's mount, at Jesus' feet;
And a home at last in the happy plains
Where the glorious Savior ever reigns:
God grant thee this.

The Vast Army.

BY REV. EDW. MUNRO, PERPETUAL CURATE OF HARROW-WEALD, ENG.

CHAPTER III.—THE APPOINTED PLACE.

We must go back awhile. Ulric had his post to guard, and to run to help Albyn if he wound his horn: the place where Ulric stood was a large plain land on the top of the hill, from which he could see all the country round. The boy had stood for some hours waiting to see what would happen: the day had closed in upon him and he grew impatient at his post. The moon had risen, and Ulric, tired of watching, had wandered from his place.

"They will never come," said he; "no enemy will come to-night: I will go and seek Ezra and ask him to climb yon rocks which look so white in the moonlight."

A Form passed swiftly along Ulric's path; and as it passed, he heard a voice from the hills, which sounded like an echo far away: "You know not when he comes, at midnight or at cock-crowing." Ulric started. The figure and the voice had to do with each other. He looked toward the hills; but all was sleeping, in the pale, cold shining of the moon.

"It was but a sound in the mountains," said the boy; and he went on, turning his back on his forsaken post. At first, the path he had to tread was rough and uneasy, and sometimes so much so that he more than half determined to turn back. Besides, it had many windings, and every minute he was coming in sight of the pass between the rocks which he had been placed to guard. It looked so cold and silent, so solitary, the place seemed as though he ought to be at it. Ezra was stationed above him, and he had some way to go to reach him. Again he fancied he heord footsteps in the path beneath, as of men treading swiftly end softly; but the boy was bent ongaing on, and on he went; the path grew easier as he advanced. One of the soldiers of the Vast Army hailed him.

"Wither away, Ulric," said he, "with your face turned away from the glow on the hills, which shines so bright to-night?"

"Where," said Ulric, coloring, on business, of course."

"Then," I hope, "on business of the great King; for all seem to say he is coming. and you would not be found on your own business when he comes?"

"I shall be back in a minute," said Ulric, hesitating.

"Then you have left your post," said the other earnestly; "and the hills are covered with the enemy; and you say, 'back in a minute;' why, silly boy, the foe may be through the pass in that minute, and then what will become of you if the king comes?"

"Oh, time enough! time enough!" said Ulric. "He will not come yet: "I shall be back in plenty of time;" and he ran laughing on, trying to shake off the uneasy feelings he had.

"The King, the King come to-night!" the words rang in his ears; and he stole a sudden look at the glow behind the hills; it was indeed bright, and the black peaks stood out blacker and sharper than ever. There seemed a stir, too, on the hill; as he turned his eye back, it fell on the part he had left. As he glanced at it he thought a figure glid by under the shadow; but it did not hinder him, and on he went to Erza. The little boy was on the level land, keeping his eye fixed intently on the glow over the hill, while his face rested in his hand, as he lay along the ground. He had left his post.

"The glow looks very bright," said he to himself; "I wonder if the King is coming;" and his heart beat high, and his hand grew cold and clammy: he turned away and gathered little dry flowers, which bloomed under the night wind.

"I won't look at the glow," said he "and then I shall forget it; it will be all one to-morrow, and the sun will put out [illegible] But I'll forget it," said he, while his heart beat so high he could scarce keep it still. the light would throb up higher and higher into the sky, and caught the grass where he lay, and threw the shadow of his hand on the ground.

"You will not be ready for the King by looking at the glow," said a Voice, "nor by trying to forget it."

Erza started. "But I am frightened and want to forget it," said the child.

"Mind the post which was given you," said the Voice, "and you will not be frightened; for your eye will not be fixed on the light, and you will be ready when the King comes."

"Ready when the King comes!" said the boy. "Oh, what a blessing if I were, I do so want it. How I wish Albyn was here, to talk to me and advise me, and I know he would say, 'Go to your appointed place.' Then I will go," cried he, rising up; and the glow caught the young child's brow, and the silver cross upon it; he moved to his post. The vast rocks with their black valleys lay outstretched before him.

"The King!" said little Erza as he moved on to watch and look out; "what if any harm has come to Albyn below, for my not keeping watch?" said he; "what if any damage is done already, how shall I meet the king and how shall I find it out? I wish I never had been divided far from Albyn."

"Albyn, Albyn, always Albyn with you, Erza," cried the rough voice of Ulric behind him.

Erza started at Ulric's voice so near him. "Yes, I do wish he was here," said he; "he always tells me right, and would talk to me about the King's coming."

"I don't believe he'll ever come."

"Oh! Ulric, how can you talk so?" said Erza, looking frightened; "how very shocking!"

"Come with me," said Ulric, going towards the edge of the plain, where it looked out on the rocks and valleys; "see down there; are there not figures moving among the rocks below? Do you not hear a stir?"

"Oh Ulric, suppose it should be the enemy of the King coming; and we have been leaving our post, and I have not been watching to give my signal to Albyn below; what shall I do? Back, back, go back quick to your pass, while I look out."

"But before he had done speaking the noise had increased below, and the pass on which Albyn stood had been filled with armed men. An arrow thrilled through the sky and pierced Erza's breast: a cry as much of fear as of pain broke from the poor boy, and he fell on the ground pale and bleeding."

"Bear up my head; lean it on yonder stone, Ulric," said he; "bear it up away from the glow, for I dare not see it; I have neglected my duty to the great king, and I cannot bear his coming. No, no, place me away from the glow"—and he trembled violently as he spoke, and his eyes were fixed upon the light he longed to avoid.

Ulric propped his head upon the stone, and was busy in helping his wounded comrade, when the noise below increased.

"Away, Ulric! back to your post!" cried Erza. "Do not stay here with me, I have been the cause of harm enough to-day."

There was need enough of this warning; for already shadows appeared creeping along the rocks of Ulric's pass, and he had scarcely time to reach it, when two figures issued from the dark crags towards him. They were dressed as soldiers, their swords were in their sheaths, and, as far as Ulric could see, the cross shone on their brows.

"Brave youth," said one, coming towards Ulric, "can you lead us to the captain of this division of the Vast Army? for we are allies of the great King, and would be led to your captain to speak with him."

Ulric was so confused with his hurried return to his post, and the noise that now increased below the hills, that he could scarcely summon courage enough to think what he had best to do. He glanced at the cross which seemed on their brow, and was on the point of asking to see their pass, which he was strictly bidden to let none go by him without showing. The stranger spoke again before he could ask the question.

"You look a bold youth and gallant," said he. "If the great King's army be made of such as you, there's little doubt of success." So saying, he laid his hand on Ulric's shoulder, and gently led him away from the pass.

Poor Ulric was flattered to hear what was said, and seemed too willing to be led on to drink in all the flattery the stranger poured into his ear.

The pass was now gained, and the enemy in hands passed thoroughly through it. Some of the foremost of them found Ezra lying bleeding on the ground; he was at once made prisoner, bound hand and foot, and was carried away, partly under the hope that something might be got out of him to betray the state of the King's army, and partly to prevent his giving any alarm.

"Oh, Albyn! would you were here! What shall I do when the King comes?" cried the poor boy bitterly. "I have lost the pass by my own neglect—I have not kept my post; he will come, and he will not find me watching: what shall I do?"

But the men only laughed at him, and bid him be still.

Meanwhile the pass was wholly taken, and all that part of the pass belonging to the King's army, which was very important, as leading the enemy very near the camp of the Vast Army, and giving them power to overlook it. Ulric had not seen Erza taken and was now in the midst of the enemy's band, who were sitting round a blazing fire drinking and singing. Ulric had turned his face to the place to avoid looking at, and which ever and anon beat up like a pulse from the distant hills.

He had quite forgot, in his movements and under the flattery, the request to show the men to the captain; they had only asked to lead him from his post, and, finding him easily led, they said nothing more about it.

One of the more daring of the enemy put his cup to his cup and proposed, "Health to the enemies of the King, and a curse on him and his army!"

On a sudden it seemed to rush on Ulric where he was; the color mounted in his face, and he sprung up from the ground.

"I am a soldier of the King," said he with a faltering voice. "You may not drink that before me, or, at least, I may not stop to hear it." And for a moment a throb of light from the mountains caught the cross upon his brow.

"Oh, we meant no harm to the King, your master," said the leader of the men, winking to him who held the cup. "We meant no harm; it was but said to try you to see what kind of fellow you were: we see you're not to be overcome: you're a fine fellow, and if the King has many such in his army, why, he's a lucky man, that's all."

Ulric was delighted with the flattery, and sat down again. But he did not see their laugh, and the look of utter contempt which passed over the face of the man who had spoken.

"I thought you couldn't mean much," said Ulric. "You must forgive me for being too quick; it was from my great wish to do right.'

'Oh, yes, yes, we understand,' said the man.

Meanwhile a great stir was going on below. The Vast Army were moving on in dense columns, each in his own order and place, to join that part of the King's army which was expected daily to come up with the King himself from the hills beyond. They had been marching for years, and for years the king had been daily expected; their fathers had looked ont for the same, but he had not come, still they expected him anxiously; and though centuries had passed by, they had not tired of expecting him, and felt firmly convinced he was close at hand. Year after year the glow had throbbed and flickered behind the hill, now growing brighter and now less. But he had not come: the glow grew now more intensely bright, and every eye was anxiously fixed upon it, as the Vast Army marched on to the meeting. The hill which the enemy had just gained by Ulric's desertion of his post and Erza's carelessness, lay right over the narrow pass along which the enemy must go, to meet the King, who would be coming along the paths of the mountains; and the enemy, having gained the hill, might fearfully annoy and harrass the advancing columns of the army. It was strange Ulric did not seem the least aware of the harm he had done, nor of the great importance the keeping of the pass was to the cause of the King, nor indeed did I notice it at first. It appeared to him, as it did to myself at first, to be but the change of place of one boy out of thousands. It was not till afterwards that I saw that one soldier of the Vast Army, one boy deserting the pass, might bring fearful effects on the whole army of the King, for which he must answer.

The stir, as I said, was now becoming hourly greater. The fact was, messengers had arrived and passed rapidly through the host, saying that the king was really close at hand; and there seemed to be an impression it was so: all were ordered to be watching at their post, at the peril of life and death, and not to flinch by a hair's breadth from their duty. Besides, the enemy were found to have occupied the rocks above, and were seen already in the sta light to be preparing to hurl down rocks and arrows on the columns of the army, as soon as they should pass along the narrow causeway.

But one pass of the rocks still was safe, and this led up to the highest point, and which was of the highest value to the Vast Army as a watch-tower: this pass was the one which Albyn kept, and Albyn had stood firmly to his post, so the rock was safe as yet.

He still leant on his spear, recovering from the effects of his wounds. I heard a Voice which seemed to come from the glow, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" It cheered his fainting spirit like cool water to a thirsty man He lifted up his head—I saw the cross gleam like silver upon his brow. A troop of soldiers came hastily up to where Albyn was standing, bearing orders from the captain.

'Albyn,' said the foremost, 'you have done a good day's work; you have gained a high reward: but the strife is not yet over; I expect the worst is to come. I bear messages and orders for you from the main army.'

"I am ready," said the young soldier.

"You have shown yourself able to do well and ably in a small thing, and you are now to take a high post of danger, for the sake of the King who is coming.'

Albyn bent his head to the order.

'The soldiers of the great King,' said the other, 'have no easy life of it, and those who do one brave act of danger, are but called to further,' continued he.

'You see yonder crag,' he continued, pointing to the rock which frowned black and sharp above them, and which Albyn's brave defence had saved from the enemy. 'You are to ascend thither alone, and to keep a look-out towards the glow, and to send down accounts of what you see by arrows, while the enemy pass below. It is a post of infinite danger. The enemy holds all the country round; you will be seen by them all, and marked out: but [illegible] army to take it. Blessed is that servant whom the King when he comes shall find watching.'

Albyn again bent his head and said he was ready to go.

'There is no time to be lost,' said the Messenger; 'the greatest excitement and stir is going on below, and messengers unseen and swift have passed through the army within these few hours, saying that the King is close at hand, and we must be through the pass before he comes; besides, there is no doubt the glow gets brighter hourly, and strange noises like myriads of chariot wheels riding upon the wind have been heard to-night. But we lose time.'

So saying, the Messenger passed on, leaving Albyn and the rest alone.

'He may say what he likes,' said a man of the party; 'I don't believe the King is coming; they've said that these thousand years, and he has not come yet. I believe the stir is all for nothing.'

'Nay, but, Lufra,' said another, 'there are actual sounds heard and sights seen.'

'Fool,' said Luffra, 'haven't they always said so?'

'Well, well, I can't argue, you know,' said the other thoughtfully, and looking wistfully toward the glow. 'Come what will, we have a work to do; and you do not mean, you will not do your work?'

'No, no, of course not. But I don't see any need to be so very anxious about it. Do one's duty, of course. Of course, do your duty to the King, as every one should; but don't be thinking every puff of wind in the hill is his chariot,' said Lufra, contemptuously.

'You mean. you would not run the risk that boy is running,' said the other, pointing to Albyn; who, during the last speech, had silently withdrawn, and was preparing for his terrible ascent.

'I should think not,' said Lufra, scornfully. 'But enough of this: let him take his chance; every man to his taste: you hold your opinion and I'll hold mine, and he may hold his, though I think him a fool for his pains, after all. But I'll to my post in keeping this pass, and enjoy myself at it, by exploring this dark cavern."

'Suppose the King comes while you are there?' said Rolbe.

'Oh, trust him for that; and if he does, why, here I am. You mind your business and I'll mind mine,' said Lufra, going off.

The last words were true enough; for poor Rolbe, though anxious and frightened about the King's coming, still had not courage or resolution to take up his appointed place, and was continually looking out for one better suited to him than the one given to him.

'The captain bid me keep this pass, but I shall not. I am sure to know best what I am suited to; and staying here will do me no good, but harm, for I cannot answer your argument. I shall go back to the main host; I can serve the King best there, I know. Every man knows what's best for himself. I can do more good among a multitude than in a solitary place like this. So saying, Rolbe went off to the army to change his place, and Lufra was soon out of sight, exploring the deep caverns of the rocks.

CHILD'S PRAYER.

JESUS SAID, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

As infants once to Christ were brought,
That he might bless them there,
So now we, little children, ought
To seek the same by prayer.

For when their feeble hands were spread,
And bent each infaet knee,
"Forbid them not," the Savior said;
And so he says for me.

Though now he is not here below,
But on his heavenly hill,
To him may little children go
And seek a blessing still.

Well pleased that little flock to see,
The Savior kindly smiled;
Oh, then, he will not frown on me
Because I am a child;

For as so many years ago,
Poor babes his blessing drew,
I'm sure he will not let me go
Without a blessing too.

Then while this favor to implore
My little hands are spread,
Do thou thy sacred blessing pour,
Dear Jesus, on my head.

"THY WILL BE DONE."

No words to me are half so dear
As those I have recorded here;
No prayer so fully comprehend
What I would ask of Christ my Friend.

Thy will (not mine) I know is best;
Let that be done, and I am blest,—
Whate'er befall, where'er I be,
United still I am with Thee.

My will in harmony with Thine;
Thy peace, thy love, I know are mine;
Thy treasures vast, a boundless store,
I claim my own, what need I more?

When self no more I seek to please,
I tread the thorny path with ease;
For what are all its thorns to me,
When I my Savior's imprints see?

When self is fully crucified,
I happy am what'er betide;
For well I know a Father's will,
Assigns me every joy, or ill.

Though foes on every hand are found,
My joy shall still in Christ abound;
He will impart his warlike skill,
If I but sink into his will.

Though threat'ning clouds do me o'erspread,
And lower in darkness round my head;
My feet shall tread a lightsome way,
Illumined bright with heaven's ray.

The angry billows dashing foam,
Will only bring me nearer home;—
Though in the furnace I may be,
The cords but burn to set me free.

The cross doth slay the man of sin,
That a new life may thus begin;
Forth from his dust a saint is born,
God's jewelled casket to adorn.

Eternal Life.

What is eternal life? Ans. "This is eternal life, that they might know thee the only true God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Jno. 17: 3. "To be spiritually minded is life." Rom. 8: 6. This is the truth certainly; but say, friend, would you have us limit our idea of eternal life to these two passages alone, or, "comparing spiritual things with spiritual things," would you have us seek more light? "I would have you understand that 'eternal life' does not mean eternal existence, but the 'knowledge of God,' a 'spiritual mind,' one that enjoys the fellowship of the Father and the Son." Yes, then you would have us understand that the righteous receive in this life their full reward! for certainly they are the "servants of God" here, and Paul teaches us (Rom. 6: 22,) that the "end" of such a course is "everlasting life." Paul promised "eternal life" at the end, at the "revelation of the righteous judgment of God," who will at that time render it to to those who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for immortality. (Rom. 2: 5, 6, 7.) You promise it now at the beginning of "well doing." Which of you is inspired?! Paul knew God, but had he eternal life? Why did he then hope for it? (Titus 1: 2)

Again, Christ promised eternal life in the world to come; you say we have it now: Christ puts "eternal life" after the resurrection, (Jno. 5: 28, 29,) you before; which of you is a "teacher sent from God?" There seems to be clashing here. Paul contradicts Paul, and Christ opposes Christ. Would you have us understand matters thus? Would you thus involve God's truth in darkness? You would certainly, if you still persist in your idea that eternal life is mere "reconciliation with God!" And further, I assure you the half of the mischief and perplexity of your idea has not been told yet. But you say, "it reads so." Very well, we read, "This is my body." Is therefore the popish idea of transubstantiation true? It reads so. Again, "My life is wind;" but is the wind Job's life? It reads so. Again we read, "I am the vine." Is therefore a "vine" Christ? It reads so. Again, "I am the resurrection." Is therefore the resurrection Christ? It reads so. Once more. "God is love," "God is light;" yet is "love" or "light" God—the God whose face we seek? It reads so. Hence your idea of "eternal life" has no better foundation than that of transubstantiation, and the same logic which sustains it will sustain all those other absurd ideas which I have [illegible], for they all read so.

[illegible]

away." We are of the dust and unto dust we must return. Gen. 3: 19. But we go not to the grave to be forgotten of God; there is an appointed time at which all shall be remembered. Job 14: 13. All them that are in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life; they that have done evil unto the resurrection of condemnation. Jno. 5: 29. The harvest time will then come when every man will reap according to the seed which he has sown in this life. They that have sown to the flesh, (been carnally minded) will of the flesh reap corruption, be hurt of the second death, and die to live no more forever: thus to be carnally minded is death. But they that have sown to the Spirit, (known the living and true God and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent, been spiritually minded, &c.,) shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting; Gal. 6: 8; and having put on incorruption and been clothed with immortality, they will die no more. Hence to be spiritually minded is life; it secures in the end eternal life. Herein agreeth Christ, prophet and apostle; darkness is dispersed and light appears. Let us walk in the light, "mind the things of the Spirit," and reap an everlasting life in "the world which is to come."

TUNE.—"Star of the evening."

Beautiful Star ere long to rise,
Gilding glory through the skies;
And thy sceptre ere shall rise
Out of Judah, Israel's tribe.
Star of the East,
Bethlehem's star;
Star of the Morning,
Beautiful, beautiful star!

Thou the bright and morning star,
Shall have all glory near and far,
And God shall beautify his place
And make his feet most glorious.
Star of the East,
Bethlehem's star,
Star of the Morning,
Beautiful, beautiful star.

Beautiful Star, whose heavenly light
Shone round Shepherds at midnight;
Then thou bid'st the Gentiles come
By thy brightness as the Sun.
Star of the East,

Star of the Morning,
Beautiful, beautiful Star.

Beautiful star, whose brilliant reign
Exceeds the sight of earth's domain,
Rise, and wave thy sceptre here;
Rise, and thy lone subjects cheer.

The Conference in Worcester.

The brethren who met in conference at Worcester on the 8th day of June, came from different parts of the country, of kindred faith and joy, and with the anticipation of the joys of paradise to come.

We had a feast of love and comfort. Many hearts were made glad with the word of God, the good news of Jesus coming soon, and the present position that we occupy in relation to the deceptions of the last days, and to learn that God's word in prophecy has marked the path of the church to walk in, and that God will have a people on the watch to declare it to the people.

The brethren returned home much encouraged to hold fast the beginning of their confidence firm to the end. They concluded it was the best meeting they had enjoyed for some years.

May the Lord bless this weeping band of pilgrims, and strengthen them in the way of righteousness to labor for souls the short time they have to stay, that they may have a good clearance when the Judge shall appear.

Fools' Proverbs.

Get drunk yourself, and say that your neighbor staggers.

Stand on your head, and say that the world is upside down.

Spend your time poking in cess-pools, and wonder that you get yourself dirty.

Mind everybody's business, and wonder at their ingratitude.

Stone a dog, and wonder that he barks at you.

Act like Satan through the week, and [illegible] wonder that your exhortations don't affect his heart.

Hate everybody, and be astonished that men return the compliment.

Believe all you hear, and call yourself a fool for being so credulous.

Do all these things, and verily a fool's reward shall be thine.

WHAT SHALL I WISH THEE?

What shall I wish thee, my darling boy?
Shall I wish thee a life of unclouded joy,
That the hours shall pass like the summer wind
And leave not a trace of woe behind?
Not this, my child.

Shall I wish my boy the noble heir
To mines of gold and jewels rare—
A mighty place in the world's estate,
And a lofty home with the wealthy great?
Not this, my child.

Shall I wish for thee an honored name
That shall stand on the golden rolls of fame;
That thy deeds may be echoed along Time's shore
Till the echoes of time shall be heard no more?
Not this, my child.

But oh, for my child a humble seat
On Calvary's mount, at Jesus' feet;
And a home at last in the happy plains
Where the glorious Savior ever reigns:
God grant thee this.

The Vast Army.

BY REV. EDW. MUNRO, PERPETUAL CURATE OF HARROW-WEALD, ENG.

CHAPTER III.—THE APPOINTED PLACE.

We must go back awhile. Ulric had his post to guard, and to run to help Albyn if he wound his horn: the place where Ulric stood was a large plain land on the top of the hill, from which he could see all the country round. The boy had stood for some hours waiting to see what would happen: the day had closed in upon him and he grew impatient at his post. The moon had risen, and Ulric, tired of watching, had wandered from his place.

"They will never come," said he; "no enemy will come to-night: I will go and seek Ezra and ash him to climb yon rocks which look so white in the moonlight."

A Form passed swifly along Ulric's path; and as it passed, he heard a voice from the hills, which sounded like an echo far away: "You know not when he comes, at midnight or at cock-crowing." Ulric started. The figure and the voice had to do with each other. He looked toward the hills; but all was sleeping, in the pale, cold shining of the moon.

"It was but a sound in the mountains," said the boy; and he went on, turning his back on his forsaken post. At first, the path he had to tread was rough and uneasy, and sometimes so much so that he more than half determined to turn back. Besides, it had many windings, and every minute he was coming in sight of the pass between the rocks which he had been placed to guard. It looked so cold and silent, so solitary, the place seemed as though he ought to be at it. Ezra was stationed above him, and he had some way to go to reach him. Again he fancied he heord footsteps in the path beneath, as of men treading swiftly and softly; but the boy was bent ongaing on, and on he went; the path grew easier as he advanced. One of the soldiers of the Vast Army hailed him.

"Wither away, Ulric," said he, "with your face turned away from the glow on the hills, which shines so bright tonight?"

"Where," said Ulric, coloring, on business, of course."

"Then," I hope, "on business of the great King; for all seem to say he is coming. and you would not be found on your own business when he comes?"

"I shall be back in a minute," said Ulric, hesitating.

"Then you have left your post," said the other earnestly; "and the hills are covered with the enemy; and you say, 'back in a minute;' why, silly boy, the foe may be through the pass in that minute, and then what will become of you if the king comes?"

"Oh, time enough! time enough!" said Ulric. "He will not come yet: "I shall be back in plenty of time;" and he ran laughing on, trying to shake off the uneasy feelings he had.

"The King, the King come to-night!" the words rang in his ears; and he stole a sudden look at the glow behind the hills; it was indeed bright, and the black peaks stood out blacker and sharper than ever. There seemed a stir, too, on the hill; as he turned his eye back, it fell on the part he had left. As he glanced at it he thought a figure glid by under the shadow; but it did not hinder him, and on he went to Erza. The little boy was on the level land, keeping his eye fixed intently on the glow over the hill, while his face rested in his hand, as he lay along the ground. He had left his post.

"The glow looks very bright," said he to himself; "I wonder if the King is coming;" and his heart beat high, and his hand grew cold and clammy; he turned away and gathered little dry flowers, which bloomed under the night wind.

"I won't look at the glow," said he [illegible] But I'll forget it," said he, while his heart beat so high he could scarce keep it still, the light would throb up higher and higher into the sky, and caught the grass where he lay, and threw the shadow of his hand on the ground.

"You will not be ready for the King by looking at the glow," said a Voice, "nor by trying to forget it."

Erza started. "But I am frightened and want to forget it," said the child.

"Mind the post which was given you," said the Voice, "and you will not be frightened; for your eye will not be fixed on the light, and you will be ready when the King comes."

"Ready when the King comes!" said the boy. "Oh, what a blessing if I were, I do so want it. How I wish Albyn was here, to talk to me and advise me, and I know he would say, 'Go to your appointed place.' Then I will go," cried he, rising up; and the glow caught the young child's brow, and the silver cross upon it; he moved to his post. The vast rocks with their black valleys lay outstretched before him.

"The King!" said little Erza as he moved on to watch and look out; "what if any harm has come to Albyn below, for my not keeping watch?" said he; "what if any damage is done already, how shall I meet the king and how shall I find it out? I wish I never had been divided far from Albyn."

"Albyn, Albyn, always Albyn with you, Erza," cried the rough voice of Ulric behind him.

Erza started at Ulric's voice so near him. "Yes, I do wish he was here," said he; "he always tells me right, and would talk to me about the King's coming."

"I don't believe he'll ever come."

"Oh! Ulric, how can you talk so?" said Erza, looking frightened; "how very shocking!"

"Come with me," said Ulric, going towards the edge of the plain, where it looked out on the rocks and valleys; "see down there; are there not figures moving among the rocks below? Do you not hear a stir?"

"Oh Ulric, suppose it should be the enemy of the King coming; and we have been leaving our post, and I have not been watching to give my signal to Albyn below; what shall I do? Back, back, go back quick to your pass, while I look out."

"But before he had done speaking the noise had increased below, and the pass on which Albyn stood had been filled with armed men. An arrow thrilled through the sky and pierced Erza's breast: a cry as much of fear as of pain broke from the poor boy, and he fell on the ground pale and bleeding."

"Bear up my head; lean it on yonder stone, Ulric," said he; "bear it up away from the glow, for I dare not see it; I have neglected my duty to the great king, and I cannot bear his coming. No, no, place me away from the glow"—and he trembled violently as he spoke, and his eyes were fixed upon the light he longed to avoid.

Ulric propped his head upon the stone, and was busy in helping his wounded comrade, when the noise below increased.

"Away, Ulric! back to your post!" cried Erza. "Do not stay here with me, I have been the cause of harm enough today."

There was need enough of this warning; for already shadows appeared creeping along the rocks of Ulric's pass, and he had scarcely time to reach it, when two figures issued from the dark crags towards him. They were dressed as soldiers, their swords were in their sheaths, and, as far as Ulric could see, the cross shone on their brows.

"Brave youth," said one, coming towards Ulric, "can you lead us to the captain of this division of the Vast Army? for we are allies of the great King, and would be led to your captain to speak with him."

Ulric was so confused with his hurried return to his post, and the noise that now increased below the hills, that he could scarcely summon courage enough to think what he had best to do. He glanced at the cross which seemed on their brow, and was on the point of asking to see their pass, which he was strictly bidden to let none go by him without showing. The stranger spoke again before he could ask the question.

"You look a bold youth and gallant," said he. "If the great King's army be made of such as you, there's little doubt of success." So saying, he laid his hand on Ulric's shoulder, and gently led him away from the pass.

Poor Ulric was flattered to hear what was said, and seemed too willing to be led on to drink in all the flattery the stranger poured into his ear.

The pass was now gained, and the enemy in hands passed thoroughly through it. Some of the foremost of them found Ezra lying bleeding on the ground; he was at once made prisoner, bound hand and foot, and was carried away, partly under the hope that something might be got out of him to betray the state of the King's army, and partly to prevent his giving any alarm.

"Oh, Albyn! would you were here! What shall I do when the King comes?" cried the poor boy bitterly. "I have lost the pass by my own neglect—I have not kept my post; he will come, and he will not find me watching: what shall I do?"

But the men only laughed at him, and bid him be still.

Meanwhile the pass was wholly taken, and all that part of the pass belonging to the King's army, which was very important, as lending the enemy very near the camp of the Vast Army, and giving them power to overlook it. Ulric had not seen Erza taken and was now in the midst of the enemy's band, who were sitting round [illegible] drinking and singing. Ulric [illegible] looking at, and which ever and anon beat up like a pulse from the distant hills.

He had quite forgot, in his movements and under the flattery, the request to show the men to the captain; they had only asked to lead him from his post, and, finding him easily led, they said nothing more about it.

One of the more daring of the enemy put his cup to his cup and proposed, "Health to the enemies of the King, and a curse on him and his army!"

On a sudden it seemed to rush on Ulric where he was; the color mounted in his face, and he sprung up from the ground.

"I am a soldier of the King," said he with a faltering voice. "You may not drink that before me, or, at least, I may not stop to hear it." And for a moment a throb of light from the mountains caught the cross upon his brow.

"Oh, we meant no harm to the King, your master," said the leader of the men, winking to him who held the cup. "We meant no harm; it was but said to try you to see what kind of fellow you were: we see you're not to be overcome: you're a fine fellow, and if the King has many such in his army, why, he's a lucky man, that's all."

Ulric was delighted with the flattery, and sat down again. But he did not see their laugh, and the look of utter contempt which passed over the face of the man who had spoken.

"I thought you couldn't mean much," said Ulric. "You must forgive me for being too quick; it was from my great wish to do right.'

'Oh, yes, yes, we understand,' said the man.

Meanwhile a great stir was going on below. The Vast Army were moving on in dense columns, each in his own order and place, to join that part of the King's army which was expected daily to come up with the King himself from the hills beyond. They had been marching for years, and for years the king had been daily expected; their fathers had looked ont for the same, but he had not come, still they expected him anxiously; and though centuries had passed by, they had not tired of expecting him, and felt firmly convinced he was close at hand. Year after year the glow had throbbed and flickered behind the hill, now growing brighter and now less. But he had not come: the glow grew now more intensely bright, and every eye was anxiously fixed upon it, as the Vast Army marched on to the meeting. The hill which the enemy had just gained by Ulric's desertion of his post and Erza's carelessness, lay right over the narrow pass along which the enemy must go, to meet the King, who would be coming along the paths of the mountains; and the enemy, having gained the hill, might fearfully annoy and harrass the advancing columns of the army. It was strange Ulric did not seem the least aware of the harm he had done, nor of the great importance the keeping of the pass was to the cause of the King, nor indeed did I notice it at first. It appeared to him, as it did to myself at first, to be but the change of place of one boy out of thousands. It was not till afterwards that I saw that one soldier of the Vast Army, one boy deserting the pass, might bring fearful effects on the whole army of the King, for which he must answer.

The stir, as I said, was now becoming hourly greater. The fact was, messengers had arrived and passed rapidly through the host, saying that the king was really close at hand; and there seemed to be an impression it was so: all were ordered to be watching at their post, at the peril of life and death, and not to flinch by a hair's breadth from their duty. Besides, the enemy were found to have occupied the rocks above, and were seen already in the sta light to be preparing to hurl down rocks and arrows on the columns of the army, as soon as they should pass along the narrow causeway.

But one pass of the rocks still was safe, and this led up to the highest point, and which was of the highest value to the Vast Army as a watch-tower: this pass was the one which Albyn kept, and Albyn had stood firmly to his post, so the rock was safe as yet.

He still leant on his spear, recovering from the effects of his wounds. I heard a Voice which seemed to come from the glow, "Well done, good and faithful servant!" It cheered his fainting spirit like cool water to a thirsty man He lifted up his head—I saw the cross gleam like silver upon his brow. A troop of soldiers came hastily up to where Albyn was standing, bearing orders from the captain.

'Albyn,' said the foremost, 'you have done a good day's work; you have gained a high reward: but the strife is not yet over; I expect the worst is to come. I bear messages and orders for you from the main army.'

"I am ready," said the young soldier.

"You have shown yourself able to do well and ably in a small thing, and you are now to take a high post of danger, for the sake of the King who is coming.'

Albyn bent his head to the order.

'The soldiers of the great King,' said the other, 'have no easy life of it, and those who do one brave act of danger, are but called to further,' continued he.

'You see yonder crag,' he continued, pointing to the rock which frowned black and sharp above them, and which Albyn's brave defence had saved from the enemy. 'You are to ascend thither alone, and to keep a look-out towards the glow, and to send down accounts of what you see by arrows, while the enemy pass below. It is a post of infinite danger. The enemy holds all the country round; you will be [illegible] marked out; but [illegible] army to take it. Blessed is that servant whom the King when he comes shall find watching.'

Albyn again bent his head and said he was ready to go.

'There is no time to be lost,' said the Messenger; 'the greatest excitement and stir is going on below, and messengers unseen and swift have passed through the army within these few hours, saying that the King is close at hand, and we must be through the pass before he comes; besides, there is no doubt the glow gets brighter hourly, and strange noises like myriads of chariot wheels riding upon the wind have been heard to-night. But we lose time.'

So saying, the Messenger passed on, leaving Albyn and the rest alone.

'He may say what he likes,' said a man of the party; 'I don't believe the King is coming; they've said that these thousand years, and he has not come yet. I believe the stir is all for nothing.'

'Nay, but, Lufra,' said another, 'there are actual sounds heard and sights seen.'

'Fool,' said Luffra, 'haven't they always said so?'

'Well, well, I can't argue, you know,' said the other thoughtfully, and looking wistfully toward the glow. 'Come what will, we have a work to do; and you do not mean, you will not do your work?'

'No, no, of course not. But I don't see any need to be so very anxious about it. Do one's duty, of course. Of course, do your duty to the King, as every one should; but don't be thinking every puff of wind in the hill is his chariot,' said Lufra, contemptuously.

'You mean. you would not run the risk that boy is running,' said the other, pointing to Albyn; who, during the last speech, had silently withdrawn, and was preparing for his terrible ascent.

'I should think not,' said Lufra, scornfully. 'But enough of this: let him take his chance; every man to his taste: you hold your opinion and I'll hold mine, and he may hold his, though I think him a fool for his pains, after all. But I'll to my post in keeping this pass, and enjoy myself at it, by exploring this dark cavern."

'Suppose the King comes while you are there?' said Rolbe.

'Oh, trust him for that; and if he does, why, here I am. You mind your business and I'll mind mine,' said Lufra, going off.

The last words were true enough; for poor Rolbe, though anxious and frightened about the King's coming, still had not courage or resolution to take up his appointed place, and was continually looking out for one better suited to him than the one given to him.

'The captain bid me keep this pass, but I shall not. I am sure to know best what I am suited to; and staying here will do me no good, but harm, for I cannot answer your argument. I shall go back to the main host; I can serve the King best there, I know. Every man knows what's best for himself. I can do more good among a multitude than in a solitary place like this. So saying, Rolbe went off to the army to change his place, and Lufra was soon out of sight, exploring the deep caverns of the rocks.

CHILD'S PRAYER.

JESUS SAID, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

As infants once to Christ were brought,
That he might bless them there,
So now we, little children, ought
To seek the same by prayer.

For when their feeble hands were spread,
And bent each infant knee,
"Forbid them not," the Savior said;
And so he says for me.

Though now he is not here below,
But on his heavenly hill,
To him may little children go
And seek a blessing still.

Well pleased that little flock to see,
The Savior kindly smiled;
Oh, then, he will not frown on me
Because I am a child;

For as so many years ago,
Poor babes his blessing drew,
I'm sure he will not let me go
Without a blessing too.

Then while this favor to implore
My little hands are spread,
Do thou thy sacred blessing pour,
Dear Jesus, on my head.

[J]ESUS CHRIST THE SINNER'S FRIEND.

AIR.—The Prairie Flower.

When the true believer casts his faithful eye
On the precious promise, now so nigh;
Thinks upon his Savior who to him has given
Hope of endless life in heaven;
How his heart doth yearn to see his coming Lord,
Who both morn and evening daily he adored;
Whom to know is life, and pleasure without end,
Jesus Christ the sinner's ftiend!
Fair among ten thousand, beautiful and bright,
Our dear Emmanuel, fount of light;
Whom to know is life and pleasure without end
Jesus Christ the sinner's friend.

Tho' by sin o'erladen and by guilt oppress'd,
Hear Him cry, "Ye weary, come, I'll give you rest;
Take my yoke upon you and now learn of me,
If from sin ye would be free."
See his arms are open sinners to embrace,
Love and boundless mercy fill his radiant face;
Every son of Adam now in homage bend
To Jesus Christ the sinner's friend.
Fair among ten thousand, &c.

And when the weary watcher sees the promised
King,
While pealing songs of triumph make the heaven
ring,
All his fears and sorows now are chased away
Like night before the coming day.
Then the loud hosannas fill creation wide,
When the Prince of Glory claims his dazzling bride;
Now in ceaseless bliss eternity to spend,
With Jesus Christ the sinner's friend.
Fair among ten thousand, &c.

Are We a People.

No. V.

WHAT IS OUR PRESENT POSITION?

This will be difficult to define; we shall find it a delicate question; for we shall be unable to do so by the principles or name we might, without hesitancy use under other circumstances, being constantly troubled with the questions—"Who are we?—To whom do we belong?" With almost all sects aud parties, the name wlil indicate the position; if not, the name will indicate a habit or usage which will do it. But here the name can not succeed thus; for then we should only know the position of one portion or party. Our position must make our name, and the principle will not distinctly as yet, for brethren are united in fellowship and worship, who differ widely in principles; or more properly, in points of religious belief. Many of this class have agreed to unite together in labor and fellowship.

It will be seen that we are not at all disposed to consider a small portion or a large portion as exclusively the church—even of what has been known as "Advent" or "Second Advent," or any other name by which we may be designated; we embrace all that will possibly bear inspection.

There are, at the present time, two great departments to this cause, in this country. These hold to views somewhat diverse in some things; on other points, they are well agreed. In the matter of church order there is a union of sentiment with leading brethren on either side. In many noble instances there is a disposition to fraternize. In most cases, excepting a few individuals of each party who have made themselves obnoxious to a few persons or places—and excepting also very few societies, there might be reciprocity—and charity would lead us to hope that all these things would wear smooth after a little while. It is plain that the people who are in these two interests as to procedure, (for in this respect there have been two for a long time) might so far coalesce as to subdue all conflicting elements between them, and, at least, do each other no harm from this time forward. We might treat all that have the brotherly disposition as brothers.

Each side publishes and sustains a paper, devoted to the same general purpose. In many places they are both taken. In many congregations the brethren favor, some one side and some the other, yet can unite to worship God. I do not wish these papers, either of them, to die. Do not expect they will. I think each has [illegible] is no conflict between them in the management. They may still live and act fully. There is enough for each to do.

Our people—and we must judge who they are by what they say—by the character of their assembly, the sentiments and truths they utter—by the instructions they receive—the ministers they employ or have to preach—I know of no other way—generally believe in the Congregational form of church government. This would enable each church to occupy an independent position—and still unite for the mutual benefit of the churches, in a Conference or voluntary association. And each of these two interests could come in a short time to unite in a Conference to promote the work of God in the land. There might be two general Conferences—so far as I am concerned, and yet well-accredited ministers, belonging to either body, should labor where they might be acceptable on either side of the field.

There is now a general Conference, but many of us do not feel that we belong to it or could act quite fully in it. Still we might have one which should, at first, be another wing; and it the Adventism one did not strongly conflict with that of the other, soon be found one essentially. We have not such a perfectly constituted institution, in fact, as the one just referred to, which arises from bringing the people together in church order, or the making a people of them.

Some one will remark, the Lord makes his own people—raises up his own church! It needs no organizing. Yes! that is all true. But the Lord uses instrumentalities. He converts men; but he sends us out to preach that he may effect it. He builds up his people "on the most holy faith," but he has a ministry by which to do it. We have a taken-for-granted conference. We have had most gracious manifestations when it has met. We have churches, some of them with order and discipline, and some with none; some of them represented in the conference, by ministers and laymen, and some not represented. We know not who our brethren are, except as it is implied, or as they choose to state, even as they wish to be understood—or as we wish to understand them. There is no one to call for a knowledge of the wants of the churches. There is no one to present those wants—no supply if they were known.

There is not the encouragement for small societies there should be; nor for ministers, especially those who would start out and preach if they could be encouraged to go where there is a demand. As it now is, a few, comparatively, have to do the work; and a few have to bear the burden. Some make the gospel work secondary, who ought to be constantly in the field. Some that should be settled and supported, are very unsettled, perhaps half supported, and the people suffer more for their own folly than by any other means.

"The experiment is the proof!" Very well! We have tried the experiment. The experiment proves a radical defect somewhere! Where is it? What is it? It cannot be in the gospel! We hope our preaching is according to the gospel, and the work a gospel work. It may be a fundamental error in the mode of procedure.

It will not answer to refer to the Convention at Providence—"that did not unite us," says one! Very true. It did not begin right! It will not now satisfy to refer the condition of things to the past action of a portion, or the whole, to some individuals or prevailing influences, or reactions. The question is, "What are we now? What are we going to do now?" It is almost madness—if we expect the continuance of our existence—to leave it all for the Lord to do. To raise and discipline churches, send them ministers, and his people have no responsibility upon them! He has enough to do without that! More properly, he has set us at work, in his vineyard; this seems to be appropriate to us.

"Leadership is always within the compass of some in every enterprise. The fear of leadership, no doubt, has deterred many from the effort to adopt any course that [illegible] of action, with beauty and symmetry in the superstructure. Now let such depend upon leadership where they least expect it often, and all the more unhappy because of the irresponsible position in which each is found. I do not see any cause to object to proper leadership in the christian church. It always did exist and most likely always will. There is a way for "Bishops to rule well." The past proves to us that so far from the principle of no authority in a body or with individuals, being the safest and best way, it has been the worst and most destructive. Those whom the "Holy Ghost has made overcers (all ministers called to preach,) of the flock, have allowed the interests of the church to be run off the track, because the church did not recognize authority in them to govern with the advice and counsel of a proper lay delegation—☞"not to lord it over God's heritage."

Admitting that we exist as a church, though in a broken condition; that by general consent we are a conference or ecclesiastical body, of some name,—what position do we present to the world? And what ground of action do we assume? What effort do we offer to the cause? Do we intend merely to convert men if possible by laboring wherever they (the other churches) will hear us—and then never counsel the converts to join the people to whom we belong; (but to whom do we belong?) or recommending them to go where they please? The churches will let us preach as much as we please if we will bring converts, and what we please if we leave the converts in their care. Now this is not to objetot to exchanges or occasional labors with them, with all due exercise of christian charity, (I shall not be found behind in this) but do object to a loss of our own identity, and such a voluntary service to other people, as to admit that we are not a people—and the other churches as soon have this conviction.

Is it again to have good meetings where all shall come and worship who like, and the meetings shall be supported if the people who compose it like to sustain it,—i. e., from the feelings of the time; and the preachers come if they will, and who will, and where they will,—some churches being thus amply supplied, while others have no help at all—to have many plans depending upon the occasional coming of ministers with no pastoral labor, and others ridden to death with one thing, with never an evangelist to come near? Some things are always well enough till you can do better. So with this. We are, or ought to be, a sufficient church, as a whole, to demand the whole operation of the gospel. Shall we remain in such a condition that we will rather grow smaller than larger from a revival among us? People flocking out while the excitement lasts and being converted and baptized, then no where to be found, because we do not offer them any discipline or watch-care. How long will it take the most of them to lose the convictions of truth received from us? What has been the result heretofore?

We must have an identity. It is true we have one; but it must be improved. "But what plan would you adopt?" I would defer to the wisdom of the ministers and churches who would call a convention for the purpose of determining what shall be done? There is no need, at present, of comments, on the importance of preaching the same things. But there is need of wisdom in our action. We are wasting much by having so many men traveling. Nearly all travel. We do not find the churches built up, because they have no pastors. We find men cannot grow much in purse, in learning and intelligence, as fitting for the ministry, if all the time running on the cars, any more than Job's cattle could get fat snuffing up the East wind.

If you want a good, interesting minister, give him a chance. Let him have a home and books. Almost any man of good sound sense, if called to preach, with books and time for reading, study, and a proper amount of writing, will become an acceptable and useful minister. But you can not expect a great deal if he has to run all over the country, [illegible] ing and attending meetings, nor if he is at work all the week and preaches on Sunday! As a people, in these respects our position should be revolutionized. To us who preach and to the people, two proverbs seem to be quite appropriate, This "pennywise and proud-foolish" plan brings us "out at the little end of the horn."

Some instances of revival exist in which great good is done, and all seem to adhere to us. Some of the brethren who are popular, or who labored with them in the beginning; visit them as often as possible, and it is all well yet. But will it be when these go? Will it be bye and bye? In conclusion, I would say, that we have a position—much of it is rather implied than expressed; some change is needed; some reform! If I wished to make member for any other church, I would go with that church; hence I contend for position here.

The Birth of the Spirit.

BY R. ROBBINS.

No. IV.

[Concluded]

As we have extended this article to a far greater length than we anticipated, we will close by noticing one more point of analogy between Christ and his brethren. With respect to the latter we have seen that, as they are the subjects of two births, they must have two begettings; the second of which consists in their being made partakers of the divine nature, or, in other words, it consists in their complying with the requisitions of the gospel, by which means they are made partakers of the spirit of God, which event completes their begetting. And, as Christ must resemble them in all points, in order that he may truly represent them, we cannot consistently expect that he will realize two births, by virtue of one begetting. That he might inherit the divine nature in a moral sense—which nature sinful flesh can not transmit to its posterity—he was begotten by the Holy Spirit. Yet that begetting was only essential to and in anticipation of his natural birth. Neither in harmony with God's plan, nor with common sense, can we expect one begetting to produce two distinct births.

Respecting Christ's second begetting, it was written of him, (Ps. 2: 7,) "I will declare the decree: the Lord said unto me, thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee." Now mark; this declaration constitutes a decree. "I will declare the decree;" (or as in the margin,) "I will declare for a decree;" (i. e. an appointment; a promise;) "The Lord said unto me, Thou art my son; this day have I begotten thee." But let us notice the application Peter makes of this declaration, or decree, Acts 1[3]: 32–34, "And we declare unto you glad tidings, how that the promise which was made unto the fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again, as it is also written in the second psalm, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee." But let us notice the aphe raised him up from the dead, now no more to see corruption, he said on this wise, I will give you the sure mercies of David.'"

Now the real import of this sentance seems to be, 1. That a certain promise which was made to the fathers, (Abraham, Isaac and Jacob,) had been fulfilled to their children by the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, respecting which promise it is also written in the second psalm, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee;" and, 2. That in prospect of the fulfillment of this promise, as though the event was then in the past, he made the prophetic declaration, "I will give you the sure mercies of David." Now if the decree, "Thou art my Son," &c., was equivalent to a promise of Christ's resurrection or birth from the dead, we may reasonably expect that God would publicly acknowledge him as his Son, at the time this begetting took place. Well, we understand [illegible] "he" (John) "saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him;" (Christ) and that there was a voice from heaven saying, this is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; which seems to be equivolent to saying, This is that which was spoken by the prophet David; "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee."

We see then, that this decree had direct reference to his baptism and reception of the Holy Ghost, (Spirit) in which consisted his being begotten preparatory to his being born of the Spirit, (raised from the dead,) and which amounted to a promise that he should be born from the dead, which promise when it was fulfilled, (Acts 13: 32, 33,) constituted him the everlasting Father of those who will become the children of God, by "being the children of the resurrection;" Luk. 20: 36. And of Christ we affirm, that it was the prospect of his resurrection then in the future, and the fact of his resurrection now in the past, that constituted him all that he ever was; (except a mortal man; the Son of David;) all that he is; and all that he ever will be. And we find by investigating this subject that Christ experienced two births, only, before he could become the veritable Son of God;"—Lord, &c. And, as he was to resemble his brethren in all things, yet, in all things be superior to them, we are slow to believe that they will have three births to his two. Hence we conclude that their being begotten by the word of truth, (converted) does not constitute them born of the Spirit.

Longing for Christ.

BRO. GRANT:—We read of those who long for the appearing of Christ. This is perfectly natural for those who love him, and it appears to me there must be some deficiency in the faith or experience of those who would be his followers, but are hostile to the doctrine of his second coming. But may there not be danger of the mind being so taken up with this subject as to unfit it for present duty? A person who is about starting for a foreign country, must of course learn the ordinary business of his present residence. There is this deficiency, however, between the earthly traveler and the pilgrim; the one knows the time of his departure, while the other is in the dark respecting it; hence the exhortation or command of Christ, to "occupy till I come."

I think this is too much neglected by many who are looking for the return of the Nobleman. If we want Christ to come because we are in trial, or temptation or affliction, we lack patience, which must have its perfect work in us before we are prepared to meet him in peace. My own experience is, that I am something like the child whom his parents have sent to school, but has been playing truant, and wishes the day a little longer, that he may have a chance to learn his lesson. I see there is much to be done, and but a short time in which to do it; and when I get interested in the salvation of others, I almost want Christ to tarry a little longer, as I want an opportunity to gain the crown that is laid up for all his humble followers.

There is a pleasure in serving Christ here; and he who knows not the sweet peace that flows to the soul as the result of laboring in the Lord's vineyard, has never drank very deep at the fountain of living waters. The best way to have our own burdens lightened is to help others.

Cease, then, your murmurings, ye doubting, complaining christians, who are sick of this world and perhaps call it a crazy, sin-cursed earth; first think of the sufferings of Christ and his apostles and the martyrs, and then go to work and improve the talent God has given you, and lay up treasure in heaven. You'll have no desire to complain. Go to that ungodly neighbor whom you have never said a word about salvation, and [illegible]

The trials and troubles of the present day are nothing in comparison to what will be experienced before the Lord comes; for we are assured by inspiration that the time of trouble will exceed any that has ever been experienced since there was a nation. Cheer up, then, and count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptation.

Campmeetings.

In a former letter I offered some suggestions concerning campmeetings, addressed particularly to those who were interested in getting them up, and in making the necessary arrangements connected with them. The present writing is more particularly to those who attend campmeetings and participate in the exercises.

To such persons I would offer the following considerations:

1. Deliberate seriously whether you ought to go to campmeeting. Is it duty? Can I do most good by going or staying away? Can I afford the expense? Let these questions be subjects of serious meditation and prayer.

2. Inquire, Shall I be a help or hindrance at the meeting? Am I alive or dead? Do I go prepared for labor, or only to eat like drones in a beehive? Am I going to do good? If so, have I done what I could nearer home? Am I going to get good?—have I got all I could get in my closet? or around the family altar? (Or don't I have any family altar only when I have a preacher stop at my house? Remember, you needn't go to campmeeting to find God. He is nearer home than that.

3. Do your duties at home before you come to meeting Come in working order. Come full of love and hope. Come full of faith and the Holy Ghost. Pray much for God's blessing to rest upon the assembled congregations.

4. Come to work. Don't think you have the privilege as a backslider to do nothing the whole meeting. Come as early as possible, and then don't waste the time in visiting or looking on till the last end, and then go away grumbling because the meeting is no better. When you come, go to laboring. Unite with others in prayer. Try to be faithful to God.

Expect some inconveniences. Everything will not go to suit you—some will go too fast, some too slow, some will argue and dispute and do nothing else, some will be cross and some crooked, but try always to keep good natured yourself. A kind heart, cheerful countenance, soft words, and a christian disposition will make everything go well.

6. Don't come to whine and grumble about victuals, drink, lodging or any thing else. Endure hardness, and above all don't fret about the management of the meeting. If you have fault to find, go right to the committee and complain to them, and ten chances to one you'll find a man at the other elbow with a complaint just opposite to yours, and then, perhaps you'll see how hard it is to please everybody.

7. Don't imagine that because you are rich, or a gentleman, or a preacher's wife, that you can go and spend the time to your own gratification, without regard to God's glory or the good of those around you. I have heard it remarked that sometimes the finest dressed ladies, and those that seemed to take the least interest in the real labor of a meeting were [illegible] wives. A poor [illegible] profession and their [illegible]

8. Remember that around [illegible] haps be hundreds [illegible] ly impressed with the [illegible] yet who are out of Christ. [illegible] persons need personal effort. Go [illegible] alone. Tell them of Jesus. [illegible] them to pray, [illegible] blessing to attend every effort made to advance his cause, and spread his gospel. Lay aside your elbows and prejudices and bickerings, and look straight to Jesus for salvation. Be in earnest—not wild, but awake, and let the gospel plough go "beam deep." O may the mighty God of Jacob move upon the hearts of men, and may this season be characterised by displays of the wondrous power of the living God!

There are more things that I may yet take occasion to say, and perhaps a few words of admonition and advice for those who preach at campmeetings would be profitable. May be I shall have time to write them another day.

"But who are you that d res to dictate so boldly?" O nobody, nobody; nothing, less than nothing. If the advice isn't good, don't take it. If it is, it costs nothing, and it may not be worth more than it costs. At all events, it contains of one man's views, the PITH.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—Long has been the time since I have written any thing for the Crisis, and as I feel I would do unto others as I would have them do unto me I take the opportunity to let you know that I am still trying to keep in the narrow way that leads to life eternal; for I know the promise is only to them that endure to the end. I sometimes don't know what there is to encourage any one, and yet there are encouragements enough, for we read heaven and earth shall pass away, but the word of God abideth forever.

"Let the world despise and leave me,
They have left my Savior too;
Human looks and hearts deceive me,
Thou art faithful, thou art true."

And if Peter had not denied the Lord, I should feel, let all deny thee, yet will not I. I feel that there is not that engagedness among the children (as a general thing,) there ought to be; but if I keep the beam out of my own eye, in these times of peril, I shall see more clearly to get the mote out of my brother's.

It is truly a great thing to be a christian, to be like Christ, to be conformed to his image; for then we shall be holy in all manner of conversation. I fear, oftentimes, I am lacking; but thank God to-day he has promised grace sufficient, and I am for going forward: and if I could, I would quicken my steps and live more devoted to his cause than I ever yet have done. I do feel, my dear Brn. and Srs., there is much need of our living near to the Lord, being very jealous, praying much, and watching as well as praying.

O Lord, impart the watching spirit to me! for I feel as if I need to watch as well as pray. They must go together, for let us pray ever so much, and neglect to watch, it would avail us nothing.

Brn. and Srs., I mean to meet you

"Where no tears shall ever fall,
Nor heart be sad;" but
"Where the glory is for all,
And all are glad."

Well, thank God, the time is coming we have so long looked for, and if faithful we will triumph at last; and then we can sing—

"Glory to God, all our dangers are o'er,
We stand secure on the glorified shore;
Glory to God we shall shout evermore,
We're home at last, home at last!"

Home sounds good as ever, and I feel as anxious as ever to go home. Praise God for a faint prospect. Farewell, till we meet on Canaan's peaceful shore.

Your sister in the faith and love of the gospel, SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

The World's Crisis.
BOSTON, JULY 7, 1858.

The Reform Convention.

A convention of deep interest has just closed at Rutland, Vt. It commenced June 24th and continued three days. It was called a "reform convention," or more properly a "Spiritualist convention." About two thousand people were in attendance, some of whom came over a thousand miles. There were present some distinguished Deists, Atheists and Spiritualists, who engaged in the discussions. Most, if not all of these, were once professors of the Christian religion, and several of the leading infidels were formerly preachers of the gospel.

The chief aim and object of the Convention seemed to be to destroy the confidence of the people in the Bible and its author.

The following resolution, advocated during the meeting, will give the reader some idea of the theology of this convention.

Resolved:—That nothing is true or right, and nothing is false or wrong, because it is sanctioned or condemned by the Bible; therefore, the Bible is powerless to prove any doctrine to be true, or any practice to be right, and it should never be quoted for that purpose."

This resolution expresses the spirit of the speeches during the convention better than any language of ours. It was painful to hear men of talent, who had once preached the gospel of Christ stand before thousands and in the most public manner ridicule the Bible, its author, and his worship. These men and women seemed to glory in expressing their contempt against the whole system of Christianity.

They also advocated the abolition of the marriage law, and indeed of all law. The following resolutions were presented and defended during the Convention.

Resolved;—That the only true and natural marriage is an exclusive and conjugal love between one man and one woman, and that the only true home is the isolated home based upon this exclusive love."

According to the resolution, we are not married when our love is sanctioned by law, but when we begin to love; hence it follows that we are *un*married when we cease to love, and are married again soon as we love another. If this is not FREE love, then we fail to perceive its import.

In keeping with the foregoing resolution, Mrs. Julia Branch from New York, introduced the following and defended it in company with others according to the best of our abilities.

Resolved;—That the slavery and degredation of woman proceed from the institution of marriage; that by the marriage contract she loses control of her name, her name, her person, her property, her labor, her affections, her children and her freedom."

Men and women are rapidly approaching a state of things similar to that of the French revolution. All that is now wanting is tve political power, which we expect soon to see in the hands of Spiritualists united with every class of infidels. They already speak confidently on this point, and intimate that the time is not far distant when the government of our country will be in their hands. Every thing seems tending to such a result.

I was told by a prominent Spiritualist, a few days since, that they made less noise about what they were doing, intimating that they did not wish people to know all that they were about, lest they should be alarmed at their numbers and strength.

There were some elements in the "Reform Convention" at Rutland that greatly hindered their success, and we think the public generally are very much disgusted with their proceedings; yet they seem to gain more, even in a failure, than truth when it has its best success. People seem to be thirsting for error, and the arch enemy of all truth is sparing no effort to fill them to intoxication with the fables of these last days. Never has the church been in greater danger than at the present time.

We see nothing to hinder them from being swept away by the flood of Spiritualism that is rising higher and higher throughout the wide world. If the churches continue to hold the immortality of the soul, they will be found an easy prey to Spiritualism. As soon as they believe the declaration of the Bible, [illegible]

Spiritualists. This is to them what the doctrine of the resurrection is to the Christian.

In replying to Professor Brittan, we quoted both what the Lord and the devil said to Eve. The Lord said, "thou shalt surely die;" and the devil said, "Ye shall not surely die." We inquired which told the truth? Several voices from the platform cried out,—"the devil." They answered consistently with their belief; and we do not see how any one who believes in the immortality of the soul can honestly give any other answer.

During the convention, it was earnestly advocated by able men, that all laws and government should be abolished, and every one left to be his own law-giver, and to decide what is right or wrong. The following resolution sets forth the position entertained by this class of reformers.

"Resolved;—That the authority of each individual is absolute and final, in deciding all questions as to what is true or false in principle, and right or wrong in practice. Therefore, the individual, the church, or the state, that attempts to control the opinions or the practice of any man or woman, by authority or power outside of his or her own soul, is guilty of a flagrant wrong."

According to this resolution, if any man wishes to leave his wife and take another, no one has a right to interfere. His own authority is absolute. There can be no appeal from his own opintons. Put with this last resolution the one relating to marriage, and we can see the practical bearing of Spiritualism. That declares that when two love each other, they are married. Then if the two lovers happen to be one man's wife and another woman's husband, they are married; and as no church or state has a right "to control the opinions or practice of any man or woman," of course it follows, as a matter of consequence, these two individuals can live together in adultery as long as they please, or till the man loves another man's wife, and his satiated paramour loves another woman's husband, and then their first unlawful marriage ends, and they are again married, which marriage consists not in the sanction of any law, but in the fact that they love one another. Such will be the state of society when these "Reformers" have the power to make their reformation practical. They stated in private circles,—we can't do as we wish now, but soon as we are strong enough to carry the vote, we shall have it our own way.

We are satisfied that the next great move of Spiritualists, will be a political one, and we are satisfied it is but a short distance in the future.

Can any one doubt that Paul wrote the truth when he said, "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." Now is the time for christians to stand up boldly in the defence of the truth of the Bible, exemplifying in their lives the principles of a pure religion. There is an abundance of lukewarm professors in our land, but only a few active, living, self-denying, self-sacrificing christians.

During the convention we improved every opportunity to show the people that the Bible was opposed to Spiritualism, and had foretold its manifestations in these last days, and pointed it out as the work of demons. It was evident to all that they were determined to prevent, if possible any thing being said in favor of the Bible, or in opposition to Spiritualism. On the evening of the last day of the convention, the citizens of Rutland and adjoining towns became so disgusted with the unfair proceedings of its managers, in refusing to hear in this meeting appointed expressly for "FREE DISCUSSION," any thing on the other side, or in favor of the Bible, that they determined we should have a chance to be heard, and made such an earnest demand that we were allowed thirty minutes to speak in defense of the Bible as opposed to the delusion of Spiritualism. Much uneasiness was manifest on the part of the "Reformers," and they soon brought the convention to abrupt conclusion.

The good people of Rutland are satisfied that Spiritualism is of the devil, and can hardly find language sufficiently strong to express their abhorrance against its doctrines and practice. Many who were almost persuaded to be Spiritualists before the convention, now look upon it with utter contempt.

We very much doubt whether the Spiritualists will have another convention for "free discussion." And yet the freedom in this was only in name, and not in fact. [illegible] nounce the Bible and the God of the Bible, that they had seen and heard enough of Spiritualism.

Apparently, this convention has given a death-blow to it in Rutland and vicinity. Said one who was almost persuaded to join them before this meeting, "Spiritualism was worth ninety-five per cent before the convention, and now it is not worth more than five per cent."

In a word, the whole affair was a splendid failure.

[From the Newburyport Herald.]

Sectarianism.

I learned long ago that it is not with men we are at war, but with doctrines and sentiments. I do not, therefore, see any reason why we should act like the sons of Ishmael towards each other. A man embraces a false sentiment,—what then? Is he therefore a hypocrite, a scoundrel, or a liar? Who of all of us do not hold some sentiments which may be wrong? Shall we therefore all fall on each other with words and acts of cruelty? What little Pope among us will start up and say, "I am right—you are all wrong?" Is not every man entitled to respect, love, kindness and consideration? Will it reform any man to look at him with a countenance fraught with wrath and thunder, and call him hard names? But the man is in a fatal error—what then? What will save him from his eraor? Will it make him see his error and our truth by appearing towards him unkind, vinegar-faced and cloudy? Will turning him out of doors by treating him with such cold contempt that he cannot remain in our company, draw him any nearer to the truth and to Christ. This was not the policy of the Galilean. The enemies of Christ said before him, "Behold he receiveth sinners and eateth with them." Hear the reply of the Son of God to all such charges: "They that are whole need no physician, but they that are sick.

One of the primary laws of reformotion, both in doctrine and in practice, is association. Jesus came down from heaven that he might associate with men and reform them. It does not make us sinners to talk with, walk with, eat with, worship with, sinners, of necessity. It does not make them saints to let them all see us shun them and treat them with contempt. When will men learn that bigotry, sectarianism, coldness, contempt, stiffness and reserve, are not attractive elements? When will men learn that they cannot scold, drive, frighten, or repulse human beings into truth? When shall we learn if men are brought into truth at all, it will be done by association, love, plainness, frankness, kindness and argument?

Select a family of eight or ten members—one of the family embraces a fatal sentiment—fatal to the interest of the whole—what is to be done? When the hour of worship arrives shall we, with cold contempt, show him he is unwelcome in the worshipping circle? Will that make him love our truth and our spirit more? Shall we refuse to walk with him to the place of true worship on Sunday because he sometimes goes to a place of false worship? Will that make him love true or false worship more? Shall we treat him with haughty and scornful reserve when he wishes to take part in the worship? Will that incline him to go with us? Shall we not rather help him in all he does attempt right? Shall we not say "amen" when he does say the truth? And when we do say "nay, nay," say it like "christians," and not like "savages." But I know well the sentiments of community on these points. Here is the creed of the sectarian community: "Go with us, or we go against you." "Help build up my church, or I want nothing to do with you." "Be somebody or nobody." This creed is not universal—there are many honorable exceptions to it. May we not hope the exceptions will multiply?

On the Son of God.

Our Father's great Prophet, whom he has commanded us to "hear," Matt. 17: 5, has assured us that "this is life eternal that they might know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." John 17: 3.

How important then is the true knowledge of Jesus Christ. We are not indeed to affirm that a perfect knowledge of him, in the present imperfect state, is absolutely essential to eternal life. Those whom he acknowledged as his true disciples, given him [illegible] membered, that we honor both the Father and the Son, no farther than our minds are in harmony with the revealed truth concerning them.

How various and fallable have been the opinions of fallable men concerning the "Son of the Blessed!" Some have affirmed him to be the "supreme God" himself. Others that he was "eternally begotten," begotten, yet without beginning of existence! Some have declared that he is only a perfect man, a kind of apparition. Others suppose that he was "the Son of God in prospect," not the Son of David, in fact, and the Son of God, in fact, at the same time."

Now, beloved brethren, can we find any one of these propositions which abideth forever? Can we find any divine testimony equivolent to any one of these declarations which is competent to sustain it? I humbly conceive that the plain testimony of the eternal Spirit subverts each and every one of them. What is this testimony? "Thou art the Christ the SON of the living God." Matt. 16: 16. "This is my beloved Son." Matt. 3: 17. "The only BEGOTTEN of the Father." John 1: 14. "The FIRST begotten." Heb. 1: 6. The first born of every creature." Col. 1: 15. "The beginning of the creation of God." Rev. 3: 14. "Made of the seed of David according (or in respect) to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power, according (or in respect) to the spirit of holiness, (which he previously was with the Father before the world was, John 17: 5,) by the resurrection from the dead." Rom. 1: 3, 4. "The image of the invisible God." Col. 1: 15. "Holy, harmless, undefiled;" "without sin." Heb. 4: 15. "A body hath thou prepared me." Heb. 10: 5. "Jesus Christ of the seed of David." 2 Tim. 2: 8. "The man Christ Jesus." I Tim. 2: 5.

This divine testimony is destined to triumph, in its common sense simplicity, over all our mystic theories, over all the dogma's and traditions of fallable men. To us, brethren, as to the first christians, let there be but one God, THE FATHER, of whom are all things," the independent, eternal source of all things. 1 Cor. 8: 6. "And one Lord Jesus Christ, BY whom are all things," the grand agent or medium of all things. See Heb: 2. Col.: 17. Titus 2: 11. 6. Let us partake of the blessing pronounced on the apostle Matt. 16: 17, by making the same good confession "Thou ART, (not shall be) the Christ, the SON of the living God," not God himself. 16th verse. Let us join in the song, "Hosanna to the Son of David;" Matt. 21: 9, which in verity he was, "according to the flesh," Rom. 1: 3. God sent his only begotten Son into the world." 1 John 4: 9. This proves him to have been in reality his Son, when he was sent, and not "in prospect" merely.

The above testimonies clearly teach that he was, in fact, the Son of God and the Son of David at the same time. Thus our Lord himself declared that he was "the Son of God." John 10: 36, and also "the Son of man," 12: 23. Yet alas! how many confess all this—how many cry "Lord, Lord," whom the Savior will deny before his Father and the holy angels! Are we, dear reader, confessing him by our "works"—by bearing his cross after him—by the manifestation of his spirit of holy love, of humility and patience, of devotedness in the service of God and resignation to his holy will in all things? Are we preferring his cause to all the things of the present world, and proving this preference, by humbly endeavoring to promote it in this ungodly and perishing world, with decision of purpose?

We shall be tempted, dear brethren, not only to adhere to error, but to depart from truth. May a gracious God keep our minds in the simplicity of the truth, as it is in Jesus Christ, from which alas! his professed disciples have been so dreadfully corrupted. Let us "abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." HENRY GREW.

The Voice of the Church.

The Rochester Union (N. Y.,) a secular journal, speaks thus of the book:

"The author claims for this volume the character of a compilation only, and the editor esteems it to be a work which fills a void in literature that many have been conscious of. It is designed to prove—and the attainment of that purpose is asserted [illegible] to its destruction is of recent origin. The fulfillment of prophecy is to be beyond this it has been in vogue much too long, for world's scenes and does not consist in the exaltation of a worldly church to the splendors of earthly prosperity and a jubilee of a 1000 years, while the martyrs rest in their cerements and cry unceasingly, 'How long, O Lord, how long!' The coming of the last day is deemed by these writers to be near, and the duty of the church is to sound the warning voice in the ears of the careless and indifferent, lest the blood of those taken away in their iniquity be required at the hands of those set as watchmen on the walls. A great amount of scriptural and other evidence to support this idea is furnished, and the book will no doubt attract attention and excite inquiry and discussion among religious people."

The Impassable Gulf.

The learned Prof. Stuart, of Andover, and an advocate for endless woe, in remarks on the parable of Dives, (Luke 16: 19,) says (in his Essays, p. 150) attempts may be made to fritter it away; they have been made. But how is the impassable gulf fixed between heaven and hell by an Almighty God, to be removed, or rendered passable?

Let us make a small effort to remove it, for I think it has frightened the world long enough. In the first place, Barnes, in his notes on the gospel says, "Parables are not designed to be a history of facts, but only a supposition of a thing, or things, to draw a moral from." So say all good critics on the Bible; and they agree that no doctrine should be founded on a parable, or figurative language. So of course this parable proves no such gulf in existence as Prof. S. supposes. But let us suppose such a gulf to exist, (for it does in the imaginations of millions) and try with the Bible lever to get it out of the way, so that the car of destruction can move on. Dives, if a literal person, and tormented in hades (grave) is with all the wicked, as Pet. 2: 9 tell us, "reserved unto judgment to be punished." Rev. 20: 13 says, "death and hades deliver up the dead which are in them." Dives will then be out of his present abode. Verse 14 tells us "death and hades are cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death." All divines admit that a total end of death and the grave (hades) are here predicted and prefigured by the "second death." If then hades, where it is said that Dives is now suffering, is destroyed at the judgment, and put a final end to, I ask, where this frightful "gulf" will be then. It is a self evident truth that two places must exist, in order to have a place between. To see such a gulf after the judgment, men must be keener-sighted than they were in olden times, when they discerned Tartarus, though, as they said, it was so far below the grave, as heaven was above it.

But again; If the "lake of fire, which is the second death" named in Rev. 20: 14; 21: 8, be a symbol of destruction, and ends death and our creed-sustained hell where Dives now is, then as he must be cast into the same lake, his "name not being in the book of life," he too must be ended, as well as death and hades; and we may ask again, where this terrible gulf will be, and what harm will it do to Dives or any other being?

Stuart in his "Essays on several words relating to future punishment," p. 139, when on 2 Pet. 2: 4, says, "I know not how to avoid the conclusion here, that the apostle does refer to a future and an endless punishment."

Turn to this text and the same in Jude 6, and we see not a word is said about future punishment. Devils, we see, as in law, are indicted, and in prison in the "air," Eph. 2: 2, and "reserved unto judgment" for trial; and Heb. 2: 14 tells us they are to be "destroyed," as well as their "works." 1 John 3: 8.

The reasoning here, and about Dives, amounts to this,—I say to you, John Doe and Richard Roe are to be in prison forever. You show me the records of the court, and sentence of the judge in their case, and it reads, "I remand you to prison for three months and then to be hung by the neck till dead;" still I insist they are to be in prison forever, because they are there now!

Have we not reason to retort and ask Stuart, or rather those who too much pin their faith on great men's sleeves;—why do you "attempt to fritter away" the Bible by such explanations and reasoning as this? When the Bible is properly criticised, free from tradition and the desire of popular [illegible] be a fair specimen of about all the arguments for endless misery and sin, to blot the fair universe of God.

This kind of logic has passed for good currency long enough, and we hope the counterfeit detectors, which are abroad of late, will ere long stop its circulation. Yes, Universalists have shown its spurious character to millions, and thus christians (and I, if one, among the rest) have unwittingly been making Universalists and sceptics by legions. JACOB BLAIN.

EAST AUGUSTA.

At Church Hill there is a good interest to hear preaching—one has lately been reclaimed and is doing well."

POLAND.

L. L. Howard said, "I have not traveled so much the past year as usual, on account of ill health. I went to New Hampshire in the Fall—found many ready to receive the word—some were converted and baptized—and some christians embraced the gospel hope; among others, two ministers became interested in these great truths. The cause has been very low in Poland for some time—we have held a protracted meeting which resulted in a true union between some who have been opposed to each other. Some old prejudices gave way. It was a permanent work. There are some firm and faithful brethren. Some have died in the faith. We expect soon to meet them in the kingdom of God when Jesus comes.

SOUTH CASCO.

The Advent cause was once prosperous in that place, but nearly all the leading members have died. There has been some new interest of late. I have traveled in several other towns, and done what I could in sowing the seed.

PORTLAND.

I have been at Portland several times lately—a few are yet striving to hold on to the faith. It is with much difficulty that they keep up meetings in P. Many have gone to worship with other churches.

RAYMOND.

I find much good fruit of the labors of our late and much lamented Bro. J. Files, who died in the Lord several years ago."

Elder Jesse Partridge said; "For the last year I have labored in Raymond and Casco. At Casco there was much prejudice when I went—after a while I held a protracted meeting of ten days, and a number were converted. The cause is prospering. One year ago I went to Raymond to attend a funeral. Some then wished me to come and labor with them a part of the time. I went—a good interest sprung up, but other influences set in against us, yet several were converted. This spring we had a protracted meeting and a glorious revival. Some sixty were converted. I have baptized thirty-three and organized a church.

Notes and Queries.

Bro. "E. R. C." wants to know about the unjust steward, Luke 16 : 1–12. How are we to "make friends?" What is it to "fail?" Who are they that receive to everlasting habitations?

Some think it an ironical remark intended for, though not addressed to, the Pharisees who were God's stewards of the Law, &c.; and who were to be ejected when the gospel was introduced. and hence they denied him. Ver. 14. I do not think this position very clearly shown by the passage, and will show my opinion.

1. The servant, although he has richly deserved to be turned out penniless, by making use of his opportunities secured a competence, or at least a home.

2. His Lord (not our Lord) commended his cunning and forethought, and Jesus says the children of this age are wiser than the children of light.

3. Mammon is the name of a heathen deity supposed to preside over wealth, and his name is put for money. It is called Mammon of unrighteousness because, frequently gotten by unrighteous acts, the love of it being the root of all evil.

4. We have this mammon in our possession. Our past use of it has not been [illegible] and by and by we shall "fail," ships and be no longer stewards. The word ekleipo, "fail," signifies to abandon, quit, to leave off, cease, to fail, to disappear, and sometimes, though rarely, to die. It is found in the New Testament only in this passage. Luke 22 : 32 and Heb. 1 : 12.

5. Knowing this in advance we have a chance to lay up a little in heaven, and so by means of the mammon we have secure a resting place through obedience to Christ.

6. They may receive you, may refer to others saved or aided through our instrumentalities; but it is probably as well translated according to Whiting's and Wakefield's version, "Ye may be received," &c.

7. Christ will eventually receive those who have been faithful in the unrighteous Mammon, and commit to them the true riches. He will say to them, I was hungry, and ye fed me; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; naked, and ye clothed me; sick and in prison, and ye visited me; and he will call them to take the kingdom and possess it forever.

8. Now if we are as wise as the children of this world, we will do good with our money. Louis Napoleon has been investing some of his funds in England and this country, so that if he fails in France he can have something elsewhere. Now let us have wit enough to lay up our money in heaven rather than hoard it for God to burn up by and by. Put your hand in your pocket and begin. Don't be rash or wasteful. Make every cent tell, but make to yourselves friends of the Mammon of unrighteousness that when ye fail ye may be received into everlasting habitations.

Obituary.

Died, of consumption, in Westboro', Mass., April 23d, 1858, sister Salina W. Peck, wife of Edmund B. Peck, aged 22 years.

Our sister was converted about four years ago, and was baptized by Eld. L. Kimball, of Worcester. One year since she united with the church in this place, of which she was a worthy and esteemed member.

Last Christmas she was taken with bleeding at the lungs, from which time she rapidly declined. During her sickness she was very patient, and bore her sufferings with great fortitude.

She loved the precious truth of Jesus' soon coming, and kindred truths, and often said to me, while speaking of the painful separations caused by death, "O that the Lord would come and take us all home together!" But as death approached, she viewed it with composure, being fully resigned to the will of God. She affectionately entreated all who visited her to prepare to meet God in peace, and exhorted her companion, and also her brethren and sisters of the church, never to neglect a single opportunity for doing good, and never refuse to bear the cross as she had sometimes done. She was very solicitous for the prosperity of the church, and her loss is deeply felt. God grant that her anxiety and prayers may not be in vain.

She leaves an affectionate husband, with whom she was united about one year since, to mourn her loss; but he sorrows not as those without hope. May this heavy stroke from a kind Father's hand, draw him more closely to that Being who afflicts not willingly the children of men, but for their good.

A large circle of mourning relatives and friends were present at her funeral, and the many falling tears evinced their affection for the deceased and sympathy for the bereaved. The services were conducted at the house on Sunday last by the writer, assisted by Eld. C. R. Griggs. The 971st hymn of the Harp, which was selected by our sister, was sung, and the following lines by H. M. Johnson were attached to her coffin :—

"A bride but yesterday all hope and love;
Flowers at her feet and cloudless skies above:—
Bright buds of promise twining round her brow,
Approach, approach, and gaze upon her now.

Come not as on that happy bridal day,
With footsteps light and voices glad and gay,—
But mournfully approach, and with a tear
Gaze on the scene—the lovely bride is here.

Come not in festal robes as once ye came;
The bride is here, but she is not the same
As when ye saw her to the altar led,
And called down blessings on her youthful head.

The cheek is pale that with the rose could vie,
There is no lustre in that rayless eye,
Upon the pallid lips there is no breath,
And she alas! is now the bride of death."

Thus our sister "sleeps in Jesus," awaiting the morning of the first resurrection, when we expect to see her again blooming in immortality, and forever safe from the cruel [illegible] of death. [illegible]

Died, in Turner, Me., May 25, 1858, Betsey, wife of James Peare, aged 30 years and 26 days.

Sr. P. leaves a husband and two very interesting children, with a large circle of relatives and friends, who deeply mourn her loss. She was a lover of Jesus and his truth. The hope of the gospel sustained her in her sickness, and enabled her to meet death with composure. She became interested in the blessed hope of the gospel and embraced the christian faith a few months previous to her death, at a series of meetings held in Livermore, by Eld. D. M. Hanscom and the writer. Up to the time of her death she adorned her profession with a well ordered life and godly conversation.

Her husband has lost his bosom companion, who has shared his sorrows and joys. The children have lost one of the most tender and affectionate mothers. Many are the tears of christian affection that will spring spontaneously and freely flow in memory of her cherished name. She possessed in a high degree the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which, in the sight of God, is of great price. Her last days were most peaceful, in sweet accord with her habitual trust in Jesus.

Nothing but the grace of God can fill the void in her family and large circle of friends. Our earnest prayer is that the void may be so filled. O Lord, endue us more plentifully with thy heavenly grace, that when thou shalt gather thy jewels we may be counted worthy of a place among them and so bear the image of the heavenly. The spirit thrills at the thought of meeting all the excellent, the amiable, the wise and the good, enrobed in glory. Our lamented sister cherished this hope more than life. It is the blessed hope —the appearing of the glory of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; for which event may we be ready, that we may be robed in immortality,

"Where no tear shall ever fall,
Or heart be sad."

E. M. HAGGETT.

Died, in South Livermore, Me., April 26, 1858, John H., only son of Granville and Orantha Gould, aged 5 years, 8 months, 2 days.

It is true, John Henry is gone; but he sleeps in Jesus, under God's covenant of a resurrection to life everlasting. May God sustain the bereaved parents and help them to enjoy the hope of the gospel. That little son, if faithful, we shall greet again in endless life; for that sown in weakness must be raised in power; that sown in corruption must be raised in incorruption, at the last trump.

Death has come and rudely severed
This one tie of life so dear;
Fondest hopes have fled forever,
With his silent presence here.

Cherished one, thou wert most lovely,
Joyous, gay, in health's short hour,
But, like some sweet, beauteous blossom,
Thou art now a faded flower.

Mourning friends, oh, cease thy weeping,
Cease with deep regret to sigh;
When the trumpet wakes the sleeping,
He shall live no more to die!

Domestic Summary.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS IN DACOTAH.—Chicago, June 28.—Reports from Dacotah Territory state that the Yankton Indians, 3000 in number, are committing depredations on the white settlements along the Minnesota river. The cause is dissatisfaction at their annuities, now due, not being paid by the government.

They therefore intend to recover their lands, and drive the whites away. They have destroyed the village of Medary, and burned the town of Flandrau. An emigrant train had also been plundered. The settlers were concentrating at Minnesota Falls, preparatory to defensive operations.

ST. LOUIS, July 2.—A dispatch from St. Joseph, dated the 28th ult., by the U. S. express to Boonville, says the Salt Lake mail arrived there to-day, bringing dates from Salt Lake City to the 12th inst. Gen. Johnston was to start for the city on the 13th, with 3000 men in columns. The army will enter the Valley via. Soda Springs, on Bear river.

Col. Hoffman had arrived at Camp Scott with his men and officers in good health and spirits.

Capt. Marcy's command had arrived from New Mexico with 1500 loose mules.

Commissioners McCulloch and Powell had started for the city in company with Gov. Cumming and Postmaster Morrell.

Col. Hartnett, Secretary of the Territory, left Camp Scott on the 10th inst. for Salt Lake city. There was quite a diversity of opinion at Camp Scott as to what course the Mormons would pursue in regard to allowing the troops to enter the Valley.

The mail party passed about 300 Mormons with horses and mules, and well armed, but they would give no information as to where they were going, or what they intended doing. Fifty Mormons, who had escaped from the Valley, were met at Plattebridge, wending their way to the States. Twelve companies of cavalry or dragoons were met near Fort Laramie, and they had passed Gen. Harney and Col. May, encamped on the Pawnee fork of the Little Blue.

A large number of troops were encamped on the Big Blue. Col. Morrison and his command were at the Little Blue.

The mail party also met supply trains between the fourth and fifth crossings of the Sweetwater. Col. Sanders was at South Pass, and was on the eve of starting on the exploration of the wagon road from that place to Fort Hall.

The report that the Mormons had removed their families to Provo is confirmed. It is not known whether Brigham Young accompanied the Mormons or remained in the city. The Mormons have [illegible] by the authorities at Washington, but would do so next spring, if any but Mormons are placed there to govern them.

DESCRIPTION OF THE TOWN OF UTAH.—Salt Lake City contains about a third of the population of the Territory, and has a great many fine and some elegant buildings, the principal of which are the Tabernacle, in which all religious meetings are held; the Council House, Endowment House, the Temple, in course of erection; Court House, Young's two mansions, nineteen public school houses, together with the costly houses erected for the elders.

The next settlement north is called Sessions, eight miles from Salt Lake City, and contains several fine houses. It is situated on the main road; the houses are not compactly built, but extend nearly five miles.

Farmington city comes next—a very pretty little town—the county seat of Davis county; it contains about 1000 inhabitants.

Eight miles north is Keysville, containing about the same number of inhabitants.

Weber river is about eight miles further north. On it has been built two forts, called east and West Weber Forts, containing about 500 inhabitants each.

Ogden City, one of the principal cities of the Territory, is about three miles from Weber. It has many costly buildings.

North of Ogden City, about two miles, is a large, well built fort, called Bingham's Fort. It has about 700 inhabitants.

Northeast of this, three miles, is Ogden Hole. It contains about 500 inhabitants.

North of the "Hole," twelve miles, is a well located fort, called Willow Creek Fort

Five miles north is Box Elder, or Brigham's City. It is built upon a plain, about 200 feet above the level of Bear River.

On Bear River there are two small settlements, and further north two others.—Cor Alta Californian.

HE CARETH FOR THEE.

Brilliant gems are gleaming in their splendor rude,—
Beauteous flowers are blooming unseen in solitude;
But their hidden beauty knows a secret care,
Kindly are they cherished—God's hand placed them
there

Tiny dew-drops falling find their silent path
To hidden springs that gather deep within the earth;
'Though in deserts dreary their gushing waters
stray,
Yet an unseen finger pointeth out their way

Myriad insects flitting in the summer air,
Songsters sweetly warbling music soft and rare,
Tell our Father's wisdom, and his love to all;—
Not without his notice can one sparrow fall.

Burdened hearts are sighing, cheerless and alone,
Silent mourners weeping for the loved and gone;
But a Savior's pity moves for every woe;
For his sorrowing children doth his heart o'erflow.

Cherished ones are sleeping in the silent tomb,
Yet a ray of sunlight pierces through its gloom;
For the polished jewels, glorified and blest,
Shall be called and gathered to an heavenly rest.

TRIP LIGHTLY.

Trip lightly over trouble,
Trip lightly over wrong,
We only make grief double
By dwelling on it long.
Why clasp woe's hands so tightly?
Why sigh o'er blossoms dead?
Why cling to forms unsightly?
Why not to joys instead?

Trip lightly over sorrow,
Though this day may be dark,
The sun may shine to-morrow,
And gladly sing the lark;
Fair hope has not departed,
Though roses may have fled;
Then never be down-hearted,
But look to joy instead.

Trip lightly over sadness,
Stand not to rail at doom,
We've pearls to string of gladness,
On this side of the tomb;
While stars are nightly shining,
And heaven is overhead,
Encourage not repining,
But look for joy instead.

"ABIDE WITH US."

BY THE REV. H. F. LYTE.

"Abide with us; for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent."—LUKE 24: 29.

Abide with me; fast falls the eventide;
The darkness thickens. Lord, with me abide;
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me.

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see—
O Thou who changest not, abide with me.

Not a brief glance I crave, a passing word;
But as thou dwell'st with thy disciples, Lord—
Familiar, condescending, patient, free;
Come not to sojourn, but abide with me.

Come not in terrors, as the King of kings,
But kind and good, with healing in thy wings—
Tears for all woes, a heart for every plea;
Come, Friend of sinners, thus abide with me.

Thou on my head in early youth didst smile;
And though rebellious and perverse meanwhile,
Thou hast not left me, oft as I left thee:
On to the close, O Lord, abide with me.

I need thy presence every passing hour;
What but thy grace can foil the tempter's power?
Who like thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, O abide with me.

I fear no foe with thee at hand to bless;
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness,
Where is Death's sting? Where, Grave, the victory?
I triumph still, if thou abide with me.

Hold thou thy cross before my closing eyes,
Shine through the gloom, and point me to the skies!
Heaven's morning breaks, and earth's vain shadows flee:
In life, in death, O Lord, abide with me.

Reply to "S. C."

"Was he (the Son of God) an immortal being?" Immortality, like many other terms, is used in the sacred Scriptures, in different senses. In the sense of past and future independent immortality, God "ONLY hath Immortality." I am aware that some theologians have applied this affirmation to the Son. Waving the absurdity of this construction, as excluding the Father from the possession of Immortality in this high sense; and also its refutation by innumerable texts; we may truly affirm, that the context of the passage itself forbids such a construction. The apostle presents the animating fact of the second "appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, which in his times he (i. e. the Father who "shall send Jesus Christ," Acts 3: 20,) shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate—who only hath Immortality." The Son is the object shown. The Father is the person who shows him, or sends him, and who only hath Immortality; i. e., in the highest sense, viz., independently.

All created beings, without exception, are dependent for existence on the Creator. Thus the Son of God declares, "I live by the Father." John 6: 57. He affirms this dependence without limiting it to any particular nature. Indeed in the strongest expression he ever used respecting possessing "life in himself," he declares even this to have been "given" by the Father. John 5: 26.

To the question, "Was he an immortal being?" let us give his own reply. "I am he that liveth, and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore. Amen." Rev. 1: 18. He is now, by the pleasure of the Father, immortal, and can die no more, yet dependent on the Father for Immortality. If he had been created immortal, he could not have died for us. It is a contradiction to say that an immortal being can be subject to death.

The perfect holiness of the Son of God is perfectly compatible with all the changes of nature, and humiliation, and suffering, and death, the wisdom of God appointed, in order to accomplish the great and glorious work of redeeming love, consistently with the divine perfections. All this work of love is indeed voluntary on the part of the Son of the Blessed, who honors his Father and delights to do his will. For [illegible] humiliation and obedience [illegible] God hath highly exalted him, [illegible] a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and that every [illegible] Jesus Christ is [illegible] glory of God the Father." The Vast Army.

BY REV. EDW. MUNRO, PERPETUAL CURATE OF HARROW-WEALD, ENG.

CHAPTER IV.—THE APPOINTED PLACE.

On a crag opposite the peak to which Albyn was climbing, there had gathered a group of men; by their dark brows and low caps, they were of the enemies of the King: they seemed to be dragging along a boy to the edge of the rocks.

'There's only that one condition on which we will save your life,' said the cruel voice of the leader. 'Reach yonder boy on the crag—Albyn, you call him; bring him here alive, or hurl him from the rock, and your life shall be saved, otherwise you know your end," said he, approaching the edge of the rock nearer.

Poor Erza's face was deadly pale, as, bound hand and foot, he stood close to the dark precipice which yawned below.

'If I am dashed to pieces here,' said he, "I go to meet the King, whose coming is so terrible to me; and if I do as they tell me, it is to hurt Albyn, and I wouldn't see a hair of his head hurt;' and the fire for a moment mounted to Ezra's eye, and the color to his face, and he refused the conditions of life.

'Do what you will to me, I will not hurt him who stands there at his post: I have done harm enough, and I can't tell how I shall ever meet the King. Oh! my place, my place! my deserted place!' cried he, burying his face in his hands.

'Then go and meet the King, as he doesn't come to meet you,' said the man, lifting the bound figure of the boy up in the air, and letting him fall down the dark abyss, which opened beneath.

Erza uttered a piercing cry of terror and alarm, as his eye fell on the fearful darkness beneath, and a thousand terrible sights rushed before him in a moment—the King and his neglected post. I saw his white dress float in the air; I saw him hang a moment over its fearful depth; I thought all must be over with him, when I noticed a stir among the men who were looking over the chasm.

'He has caught by his dress on the crag below,' cried the man, 'and he swings backwards and forwards in the night wind.'

'Hurl down this rock on him,' said another; 'he will not swing long then.'

'You are all fools for your pains,' cried one who had just joined them, with two or three others who were with him. 'Here is a youth here who belonged to the Vast Army, who says that the young boy has knowledge about the ways and intentions of the King's soldiers, which would be well worth our while to know: you are silly fools to let him slip.'

'He can be saved yet,' said the foremost man, bending over the crag.

'There he hangs just below, and crying out about the King, I'll be bound, for that's always his cry; and I hear him speaking," said Ulric, who was now plainly one of those among them.

At this moment my eye rested on the figure of Erza. He seemed to be resting on the rock which saved him from being dashed to pieces. Those above did not see that he had been saved on a ledge, where one tended him who looked like the messenger of the great King. After a short discussion, the men determined on drawing the little boy up again, that he might be made use of against the cause of the King.

The work was quickly done; and without speaking, they hurried Erza to a small cavern, which was formed by overhanging rocks, and thrusting him in, bound as he was, they rolled a huge stone to the entrance, and left him. The little boy fell down, heavily laden with his bonds, to the ground of the dark cave. But though I saw his tears were falling fast down his face, he did not speak or murmur, nor did he show the same terror he had on other occasions. I thought, perhaps, the Messenger had said words to comfort him, by bringing him some message from the King he so much dreaded, yet loved; for my guide told me that the King, through his messengers, knew all the concerns of the youngest in his army, and always exactly sent them what they wanted.

I could not at first take my eyes off Erza as he lay weeping on the ground. Presently I saw a light on the cross on his brow, which shone brightly like silver; it seemed to come from a crevice in the rock, and made Erza himself look up; and a Voice came, a sweet, calm Voice, which breathed softly through the dark cavern, and said, 'Fear not, Erza; it is the King's good pleasure to bring you to the kingdom.' So calm and beautiful was the Voice, that little Erza scarce breathed with delight and surprise, and I saw the boy's eye light up with joy, and his whole face become for a moment bright, as he looked towards the crevice of the rock from which the Voice seemed to come. I never saw a face so suddenly change from sorrow to joy.

'What a sweet Voice,' said Erza, after he had knelt listening for a while. 'I wonder where it was. It seemed to come from yonder crevice where the light comes. I will climb up and see. I wonder if it was Albyn's voice. But I am always fancying all beautiful sounds are Albyn's, for I love him so. Oh, don't I love him! he's always so kind and good;' and a shade of sadness came over Erza's brow, and a tear again came down his cheek. 'Dear Albyn! I'll try and be like him—brave and good [illegible] and I now saw the light, which had come through and shone on Erza's brow, was from the glow. As soon as the boy had clambered up the rock which seemed to shut n the crevice, he was able to see out into the scene around. He found the space was large enough to force his own body into it. Right before him rose the tall crag, on which at the top, standing out dark and small against the glow, Erza saw Albyn's figure. It was the crag the enemy were so anxious to gain, and what Albyn's courage had kept, and was still keeping from them. The brave boy was standing firm at his post, looking out and watching for the King beyond the hills, as he had been appointed. He neither left his post from curiosity, nor shrunk from fear.

'There's Albyn,' said Erza, trying to draw up his hand to lean more securely on the edge of the crevice. 'There's Albyn; how I wish I could get at him! Oh, doesn't he stand brave at his post! and I've left mine: and he can look out for the King; I can't:' and he buried his face in his hands and cried. Again he looked up at the crag.

It was night. The stars were shining clear as crystal drops in the deep sky. The crag stood up, black, and sharp, and ragged, against the glow, which was certainly throbbing more and more intensely than usual. On the top of the crag Albyn's figure was still quietly resting, looking out.

'But what's that?' cried Erza, turning his eye down to the lower side of the rock, where a dark figure of one, with his soldier's cloak bound closely around him, was softly and silently stealing up the rugged path which led to the place where Albyn was standing.

The man trod softly and cautiously, making sure of each step, lest he should displace a stone, the fall of which would betray him. His sword hung by his side, and a bow at his back, which was seen by the light starlight.

'Oh, he's going to kill Albyn!' screamed Erza, with an agony of terror; 'and Albyn doesn't know he's coming, and will be taken by surprise. Oh, that I could get out of this horrid place!' said he, making a violent effort at the crevice. But the place was too small even for his small body, and he only fell back again.

I saw the dark figure silently mounting a little nearer Albyn along the dark footways, and Albyn's calm figure unceasingly watched the glow, with his eyes fixed so intently that he saw nothing else. The prisoned boy watched the stealthy tread of him who was intent on Albyn's life. Twice he lost him behind the hill where the path wound round it, and twice again. and higher up, he caught his cap with the single feather. A third time he lost him, and a third time the head peered over a crag against the glow.

'One push for Albyn, though it cost my life!' cried Erza in agony; and he made a violent effort to press his body through the narrow causeway. So violent was his effort, that to his own surprise, the boy found himself outside the dungeon in the pure air, torn and bleeding by the ragged rocks, which on all sides had caught him in the desperate thrust. The young boy stayed not a moment, but binding his dress around him, torn and shattered as it was, he rushed towards the hill. His eye was fixed on the small, dark figure of Albyn, and taking that for his guide, rocks and chasms did not hinder him in his desperate effort.

'The glow grows bright, and there are movements in it, as of shapes I can scarce discern. The noise increases below. Men seem pressing on as to some desperate conflict. What if it be the last!' said Albyn aloud, as he stood at his appointed post.

He looked to see if his sword was keen and bright, and his shield firm and unriven; and the young soldier looked up again to the glow. A voice said from below, 'Watch, and be ready; for the King is at hand!'

More than once Albyn had half doubted whether he should not leave his place and go to the pass beneath, where, from the strange noises and stir he heard, he guessed that some unusual pressure was going on. But each time he remembered he was at his post; 'and there I will remain,' said he, 'come what will, till the King or his messengers bid me leave.'

An arrow hissed through the air, and struck the shield by Albyn's side. The blunted point struck the ground. The boy started round.

'Take that,' cried a voice which Albyn knew, as with the glance of lightning a sword-blade came down on Albyn's head. But, quick as light, an arm was stretched out between his head and the weapon, and received the blow.

'It is all I have to fight with for you, Albyn,' cried Erza, 'and I gladly give it you,' as his shattered arm fell dead and powerless on Albyn's helmet. 'It's all I have,' continued he, panting for breath, and exhausted with the speed with which he had hastened to help Albyn before the dark, stealthy figure. 'And now, at least, you can bear witness to the King that I was at my post, can't you, dear Albyn?' cried he, his eye sparkling with a hope and joy it had long lost, and which seemed to make him forget all his pain in the thought of the King's approach.

'He comes, and his reward is with him!' said a Voice passing by.

Albyn had scarcely recovered from his surprise, so quickly had all happened, before the youth who had levelled the blow had fallen at his feet, and thrown his arm round his knee.

'Forgive me, forgive me, Albyn! [illegible] forgive me! O, beg for me to the King!' [illegible] forgive you, and Erza does, I know,' said he, looking kindly into the pale face of the anxious boy.

But Erza was too much taken up with watching the glow to heed any thing which was going on. The light was growing so rapidly higher, and the stir so evidently more loud each moment, that there could be no doubt something remarkable was approaching.

'Wretched boy, we forgive you; but for the King, there is no pardon for you unless you are found at your post,' continued Albyn.

'But where is my post?' cried Ulric bitterly; 'I have so long left it, I do not know how to reach it again. Show me the post; Albyn, do show me. I will go,' cried the terrified boy. 'Come with me, do come with me, and show me, or I shall be utterly lost.'

'I may not come with you, Ulric, I cannot leave my post; you must go seek it alone.'

'But the way is dark and winding, and I know not how to find it,—indeed, indeed, I cannot. Oh, that I had never found those wicked men! and then, to think if the King comes, I am not only far, far from my appointed place, but been trying to kill you! Oh! Albyn, what shall I do? what shall I do?'

'Look, look, Albyn!' cried Erza eagerly, and pointing to the glow; 'see, see the burning, blazing light, and the forms of myriads on the hills, as they bend and move so swiftly in the light. Are they men, or what?'

Albyn turned; it was indeed a wondrous sight. On a sudden the glow had become intensely bright, and shone like a silver flood. Figures, swift and air-like, seemed advancing in myriads along the hill-tops, and the sound of unnumbered chariot-wheels was rolling among the valleys. Meanwhile, rock and peak, jagged points and shadowed valley, shot back the living lustre of the glow from ten thousand points around; above them the sky burnt with a dark and ruddy lustre, as if the heavens were hot, like a parchment of marl, and the hosts of the army below were struck out so clearly and keenly, in the intense light, that you might have counted every man, and could distinguish each plume that waved over their helmed heads: there they were in vast masses below, moving slowly on, while every point on the rocks around shot back the burning light above them.

'It is the King! it is the King!' shouted Erza, throwing himself on the ground, with his face buried in his hands, and so that his wound bled afresh; 'I know that it is the King, and what shall I do when I meet him? I have left my post, my appointed place. The King! the King!'

Albyn bent his head against the rock, and leant his head on his hand.

Ulric, pale as a ghost, stood by, shuddering, turning his face away from the awful glow, and trying to think there was nothing more than common in the light, while his chattering teeth, and his cold, damp forehead, told you how little he believed that it was no more than common.

'Oh! Ulric, away! find your post before it is too late,' said Albyn.

A messenger swift as light came up at this moment from the army of the great King. He had a message for each; the time was short in which he spoke.

'You, Albyn, haste to the valley, to lead the centre of the army; for they must at once make an effort to break through the enemy to join the King, and you are counted worthy of the place and work; you have been found faithful.'

Albyn moved to his post.

'You, Erza, also have your work, to bear the banner along the hill-top, and not to leave it till the King bid you. It bears upon it the sign which the soldiers may look at when weary, and they will be refreshed. You have been careless at your post before; prove yourself worthy of the King's love in giving you another.'

Erza, who still lay with his face covered with his hand, trembling at the sight of the increasing glow, rose quickly. His face was pale, and his eye anxious, yet burning with eagerness to do his work appointed him. The Messenger applied a healing balm to his wound, and Erza silently and anxiously followed Albyn's footsteps.

Ulric yet remained.

'And to you, false boy,' said the Messenger sternly, 'the King even yet vouchsafes to give a work. Away to the rear of yonder columns, to follow when thou art bidden; thou hast been faithless hitherto, but even now, if humbly and faithfully you will do your work, you may regain the King's favor.'

'Go, go,' Albyn said; 'go to the place the King will yet give you; for indeed, indeed, Ulric, you do not deserve it, and He is near at hand; I forgive you freely all you have done to me. May the King, when He comes, do the same!'

'I will, I will,' cried he; 'I will go to my place, and no one shall take me from it;' for he was sorely frightened, and his face was pale, and his whole body trembling.

He set off instantly to his work. He had not gone far down the hill-side, when he saw a light, as of torches, gleaming from a cavern, and the sound of merriment broke out. The whole sky so glowed with the increasing light, that he could scarcely distinguish the lamplight which burst from the cave.

He was not sorry to turn his face away: the lantern light which he saw from the cavern at once made him think of escaping the glow. Ulric's fears grew less, and he followed the Messenger with a slower step [illegible] voice, as from the cave; 'whither away so quick?'

'Do not stop me,' said the boy, 'I am going on the King's work; and the light grows so strong on the hill, I am afraid of lingering.'

'The light,' said the other scoffingly; 'and I suppose you are one of those fools who think, because it is a little clearer to-night, that therefore, for certain, the King is coming. I thought you were wiser than that; come in here with us and you will not see the glow at all; our lamplight puts it out.'

By this time Ulric had faced the cavern, and the glare they had made so effectually put out the other light, that he for the moment forgot it.

'Ulric,' said the stern voice of the Messenger, 'it is your last hope; the King will give you no other post after this.'

The boy hesitated.

'Come in, come in,' cried his old companions; 'we have got a matter in hand which will amuse you."

He looked in: round a fire, in the middle, a large group were seated, armed from head to foot, their faces pale and wan with the excesses they had been living in, to try and forget the alarm which some of them really felt at the increase of the glow. Their long spears leant against the rugged sides of the cave, and the flame shone on the polished surface of the shields, on which some of them were resting; some seemed in deep conversation, while one or two were looking anxiously every now and then out of the entrance, as if to see the state of the sky; on all their faces the sullen, settled look of distrust and envy was fixed. Ulric had been with them before; they were the same band he was with.

'Oh! come in, come in; what do you stand lingering for?'

The Voice in the distance spoke Ulric's name; it was faint and far, as of one who speaks to a lingerer, and cannot wait.

'I cannot stop,' said Ulric, 'I must go; I told you I belonged to the King's army, and must fight for him,' said he fretfully.

'Well, I never thought you'd do that; why, foolish boy, you know we've told you before we're all friends of the King, and mean to be ready when He comes. It is only some of his foolish subjects we are going to fight against, and to stop their mad expectations of his coming, which so unfits every one for this work, that's all.'

'Well!' said Ulric, turning his back on the glow, and facing the firelight.

'Ulric!' uttered a voice which was now scarcely more than an echo whispering along the hill in the air. He started and looked; he tried to perceive the shadow of the Messenger's figure, but in vain: he saw nothing.

It was but a Voice, and that now scarcely more than a whisper; a look of bitter doubt rested a moment on Ulric's eye.

'It's too late to go now, at all events,' said the boy.

'Too late now!' said a far off echo among the hills; 'too late now! too late now!' and it died away.

'Who spoke that?' said Ulric, shuddering, and looking round.

'It was your own voice, fool,' said the soldier; 'don't you know your own echo yet?'

'What a silly one I am!' said Ulric, smiling sadly, or rather trying to laugh; 'I shall soon not know the sound of my own voice.'

The band gathered round the fire, and seemed soon lost in deep consultation

'Who commands the western division which are to burst their way through the defiles?' asked the Leader.

'Albyn, the young warrior, they say,' replied the other; 'a Messenger passed swiftly through the host, they say, bearing orders from the King that young Albyn should have the chief command.' The other was thoughtful. 'Albyn is wise as well as fearless. Nothing can deceive him—and who bears the banner which they say gives the King's soldiers courage?'

'Erza,' said the other.

'He's a child,' said the other, 'and can soon be led away from his post.'

'Who commands the right wing, which is to make its way over the plain ground?'

'Rolfe,' said the other.

'A weak and timid man,' said the Leader; 'we must to work, and that soon; young Albyn must die.'

His eye, as he spoke, rested on Ulric, who was leaning on a spear over the fire blaze, listening to every word, and pale as death.

'Ulric,' said the Leader—

'It's too late now,' said Ulric, starting as from a dream.

'Fool,' said the other, 'are you still frightened at your own shadow?'

'I forgot,' said he faintly.

A footstep hastily stepped across the threshold.

'There is no time to lose,' said the new comer; 'the whole army is all in motion; young Albyn's presence has raised every drooping heart. The vast banners of the cross wave from the hill; the boy Erza is as bold as a lion; the glow throbs high in the sky. Look, look, you can see it now o'er yonder hill!'

Ulric's sickly eye turned quickly and wildly to the opening, and as rapidly to the fire.

'Too late now!' he muttered; 'the fire burns bright on the rock; I think he meant this. I see no glow; though his face belied his words.'

'You know your work,' said the Leader, as he stepped [illegible] doing no great harm, I am only acting a part for a time. I really love the King at heart. If I went against these men they would kill me, and I am not fit to meet one figure, alone, did not turn to give the answer; he was climbing alone a difficult path, and seemed taken up with his own thoughts; the figure moved as of one in anguish and doubt; now he lingered, and now walked quickly, and then stopped to listen: he looked eagerly towards the glow, and then away from it. "'Each to your post,' said he; 'each to your post. Yes, that's the word; your post, your own post; they to theirs, and I to mine. But I thought there was something about 'too late now,' wasn't there?" and the wild boy stopped and put his hand upon his brow to think. "'Albyn must die,' and 'you know your reward, Ulric;' yes, these were his last words, and I won't be frightened at a thought and an echo. Besides, I am the King; and besides, it would set them more than ever against the true cause, and by seeming to give it to them, I shall win them over: then, to be sure, the King will give me a post to my mind. But who's there? who spoke?" cried the boy, looking wildly round, and standing still, "who said that? there! there! who said 'Give him a post, and it's too late now?' who was it?" and he shook all over with fear; all was still as death: he moved on slowly and fearfully, still muttering to himself, "And then as to killing Albyn, why, I said I would, and that's what I am going for; but it won't be done; of course the King will take care that he does not die; and though I am going to do it, still you know, you know what?" said he, his voice sinking to a whisper, and he again looked round; "why, you know I shouldn't really do it, though I am going to do it! Ha! ha! that's droll," and the boy tried to laugh, and the wild chatter that he made echoed among the rocks and hills, and came back chattering to where he stood. "Ha! the echo again, it did speak, the old echo, 'too late now.' But I say it's not too late, for I am not going to kill Albyn. I am not thinking of it, nor dreaming of it; I only said I was. I'll desert, I'll go back to the Vast Army, see if I won't; at least I'll say to myself I will, all the while I am on the way to kill him; and if I say I am not going to kill him, I shall not feel as if I were," said he again, winking with his eye, and his voice sinking into a whisper. "But I am though, ha! who said that? what a fool I was for saying that; I'd better have kept it to myself; I am not then, still there was some comfort in saying I was going to do it; it seemed to soothe me. Well, well, here goes; I am, and I am not."

At this moment he again turned a sharp corner, and the whole of the Vast Army lay outstretched before him; column after column were moving on in dense masses among the rocks; above them all the tall and slender figure of their youthful leader. It was a great and solemn sight to see the dense lines all moving on in perfect order, each in his appointed place, scarce a word uttered; while along the edge of the opposite hill, the huge banner moved along at equal pace, borne by a boy, to which every eye of the Vast Army was turned, as they marched in their silent order. Ulric threw himself down, and drew himself along over the edge to look down to the scene that was going on beneath; he could distinctly see the movements as of silent and rapid millions passing on, and the glow giving an intense light in the sky above. But somehow it did not seem to strike him, nor to terrify him as it did: between the advancing millions of the King and the moving columns of the army, the enemy was drawn up in huge masses, to prevent the Vast Army joining the King. There was something awful in the stillness and order in which all the movements were making.

'Now is my time!' said Ulric.

He darted down the hill-side, and found himself presently in the moving columns of the army; at the bottom of the hill he met the enemies of the King, whom he had just parted with.

'Our work must be by trick more than by force,' said they; young Albyn will never be managed by open attack; we must lure him from his post, or draw him aside, it's the only hope we have.'

NAAMAN THE LEPER.

I.

In ancient days a leper came
At sound of good Elisha's name,
From Syria's heathen land afar,
To boldly seek a healing Star
That lighteth not his native shore,
But beamed a foreign nation o'er;
He came in pomp of kingly state
As if to show the king his fate,
The wealth of shining mines he brought,
With change of raiment fair he sought
To win the favor of the holy seer
Whose aid he sought with trembling fear.

II.

But wrath within his heart was stirred,
When first he heard the prophet's word,—
"Now go and wash in Jordan's stream,
Then shall thy flesh again be clean."
The leper turned away in scorn,
Such task could not to him belong;
"Are Abana's fair, winding streams,
And Pharpar's rills whose sunny gleams
Light up with joy Damascan fields
Not better than this nation yields?
Have not their waters balm as well
As fairest streams of Israel?

III.

Then round the leper gently thronged
His servants near, who ever longed
To seek their waters good and said—
"My father! if the prophet bade
Thee do some wondrous thing, to share
The blessed boon, wouldst thou dispair?"
Then humbled was Naaman's pride;
He sought and bathed in Jordan's tide,
And when he left its healing flow,
He felt the flush of childhood's glow,—
He was no more a leper now,
But youthful health beamed on his brow.

IV.

This lesson deep the proud man taught,
Great deeds by humblest means are wrought,
And that to trust God's will is wise,
For he views not with human eyes,
But from the lowest forms of earth
Draws out at will redeeming worth.
Now as he sought his home once more
Glowing with health he'd known of yore,
He bowed him down on Syrian sod,
And raised his thoughts in praise to God,
And calmly blessed that happy hour
When first he felt his wondrous power.

The Bread of Life.—No. 2.

A DISCOURSE BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

"I am the bread of life."—John 6: 48.

Some religionists indignantly reject every thing which has the slightest appearance of materiality about it from their creeds, as though it partook of infidelity. Let such remember (we say it with all due reverence) that God who formed the worlds is a materialist, for he once pronounced this world and all its primal beauty and furniture not only "good," but the super lative was added—"very good;" and He saw it was so, for we are informed that "God saw every thing that he had made," and was highly pleased therewith. Gen. 1: 31. And thus it will be again in the restitution, when the curse is entirely removed. Some theologians seem to confound the curse with the earth. It is not the earth, but the curse which is to be removed. We do not read, and there was no more earth, but we do read, "And there shall be no more curse." Rev. 22: 3. This is a very comprehensive phrase and goes over the entire ground of evil consequent upon the primeval transgression; when this is removed, which the Son of God is yet and soon to accomplish on his second advent,—for he is to destroy the works of the devil in toto,—when this is consummated, then all, as it was prior to sin entering into the world, will again be "very good."

We would not thus long have dwelt here, on apparently a matter foreign to our subject, had we not conceived this redeemed materiality to be inseparably connected with the future life of promise. Eph. 1: 14.

And now to return, in a few words, touching some prominent features in "the life which is to come," we remark, that its superiority over the common life is such as to be designated "the life of God." Eph. 4: 18. Its pre-eminence is also confirmed by considering its origin. Its subjects are said not to be the product of man, as the blood life, but the product of God. Man, naturally [illegible] it, for such are "born (or begotten) not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, (neither of its impassioned wishes or unholy desires,) nor of the (oft perverted) will of man, but of God." John 1: 13.

Moreover, its superiority is shown over the other by being, as it is called, an "endless life," or "eternal life." Again, it is a hidden or concealed one, for thus we learn in relation to its favored recipients;—"For ye are dead (i. e., dead to sin and the pleasures, plans and schemes commonly associated with the breath of life,) and your life (the life of promise) is hid (hid from the world which is incapable of recognizing it, or your favored position and relation to the Messiah. John 14: 19; John 15: 4; 1 John 3: 1;) with Christ in God; when Christ who is our life (i. e., Life-Giver) shall APPEAR, then shall ye also APPEAR with HIM in GLORY." (Col. 3: 3, 4; John 14: 3; John 17: 24.)

And, lastly, another marked distinction between the nature of this life and that which is to come, is, as we previously intimated, the production of the will, wishes, desires and thinkings of the sinful flesh of the unregenerate man, with but few exceptions, and is common and free as the air we breathe to all animated beings in the natural and fallen world, and in the sense of immediate presence, action, and renewed labor. God has no hand in it, as a general thing; as is affirmed in a former quotation, it is "not of God." He originally formed man, and then instituted certain and invariable laws, that the species might be propagated apart from the divine energy's immediate exertion; and so it is in this sense; the Almighty has nothing to do with bringing them into the world in the fallen Adam, possessing a death principle inherited from him. But He has to do with regenerating and bringing them forth by the life and power of His requickening Spirit in Christ Jesus, and moulding them into the "image of the heavenly"—new creatures after the lovely pattern of the Messiah. And this is styled a gift life. For thus runs the record,—"The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 6: 23. And now we pass to notice,

2. How Jesus Christ becomes the bread of life, or why he appropriates that phrase to himself,—"I am the bread of life." Here the blessed Savior styles himself "the bread of life." Now this is the most appropriate thing in nature, perhaps, which divine wisdom could have selected to illustrate the important truth intended; for it is something which all mankind have some acquaintance with, and its life-perpetuating effects. Bread is the most beautiful and truthful emblem of life that we have any conception of. It is proverbially "the staff of life," and when regarded in its largest sense as embracing all things necessary for this present life, we at once see the force of the figure, when Jesus represents himself as such, and that nothing else in creation could have been chosen more opportune and proper to present himself to a dying and perishing race of mortals than this. But we must bear in mind here that the life which Jesus had reference to was not that which the natural bread sustaineth, but the superior life which we have discussed in the preceding section; for he clearly makes the distinction in his discourse on this topic, as you will find, thus: "This is the bread that cometh down from heaven, which a man may eat and not die," plainly intimating also that those who partake only of the natural bread must eventually perish. John 6: 27. Furthermore, he says, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead," but he that eateth of this bread shall live forever.

Again, this bread is distinguished from the former, by being designated "the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." It likewise claims a pre-eminence by being styled "living bread." "I am the living bread which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." And you will observe, by glancing at the second, that here the unregenerate man could not follow him any further in the profound depths and sublimities of his doctrine. He spake as none other man spake. "The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, how can this man give us his flesh to eat? Then said Jesus unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you, (i. e., the divine life.) Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood dwelleth in me and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." John 6.

Now the teachings contained in this language, however strange and apparently hard to be understood, is in reality not so, but very plain and simple; and when comprehended in all their beautiful simplicity, there is a life-imparting power in them which is mighty to save. He teaches us, simply, with what earnestness we should imbibe the word of God; (Deu. 8: 3,) how our very being should become completely saturated with his blessed Spirit, (Eph. 3: 17, 19; 5: 18,) and how the entire man should become impregnated with the excellent principles of the gospel, (Col. 3: 16,) and indoctrinated in all its holy precepts. It also unfolds to us that dear and intimate connection which exists between Christ and the Church. Eph. 5: 30.

The eating of the flesh of the Son of God and drinking his blood, we understand, in a word, to be receiving him and his doctrine as scripturally set forth: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved;" or, as it should be translated, "have life." "He that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him." "He that believeth on the Son of God hath everlasting life." "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" or "have life." "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." These passages are equivalent in their teachings with the one above, with this difference—the Savior may have had an allusion to the holy eucharist, for when partaking of the last supper with his disciples, we learn that "He took bread, and blessed it, and break it, and gave it to his disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my body. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, drink ye all of it. For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins." We must acknowledge, however, in the passage at point, that there is a depth surrounding it which the unenlightened may never be able to penetrate; (1 Cor. 2: 14,) and there are sublimities contained in the glorious gospel that men may never be able or permitted to behold unless he is truly "spiritually minded." That the dissertation is highly figurative and spiritual we at once observe from Jesus' concluding remarks: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life."

And now we hasten to consider why he appropriates that phrase to himself, or why he represents himself the "bread of life."

1. He is the great antetype of the Tree of Life, which originally flourished in the garden of Eden, and which is to be restored and placed in the midst of the Paradise of God.

2. This was his special business to our fallen planet, as he thus affirms; "I come to give life unto the world."

3. Him hath God the Father sealed, set apart, or delegated. Hence he came clothed in divine authority for this specific purpose.

4. There is no divine or immortal life to be obtained [illegible] race but in and through Jesus Christ; "neither is there salvation (i. e. eternal life) in any other; for there is none other name (way or system, John 10: 7; 14: 6,) under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Acts 4: 12. "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son of God, hath not life," or shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him, i. e., the doom of eternal death which is the primal wages of sin. (John 3: 36; 1 John 5: 12.) This is why he styles himself the bread of life, because it all centers in him; as the Psalmist says, "With Thee is the Fountain of life." Ps. 36: 9. He is the great Fabulum or Reservoir of life. "In Him dwelleth the fulness of the Godhead bodily." "It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell" in respect to this divine life and world to come. "And he is before all things and by him all things consist." Col. 1: 13–20.

And it is with him alone and his exclusive and peculiar prerogative to confer life upon all whom he will. 1. From his own affirmation—"Ye will not come to me that ye might have life;" (John 5: 40,) most emphatically implying that if you do not comply with the divine scheme portrayed in the gospel, which is tantamount to rejecting Him, (Mark 8: 38; John 14: 23, 24,) that you will never obtain this life, and consequently perish.

2. From the ready acknowledgment of the inspired apostle on one occasion, when Christ charges some with deserting him, and then inquires of the twelve with much pathos—"Will ye also go away?" Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ the Son of the living God."

These, together with many other powerful arguments contained in the Holy Scriptures which might be brought to bear upon this point, discover most obviously why he designates himself the bread of life, and why it is, as given in the Syriac version of the New Testament, that he is distinguished in the apostolic writings, "The Life-Giver." (See 1 Tim. 1: 1; Tit. 2: 13.

3. He occupies a position similar to the patriarch Joseph, who was betrayed and sold into Egypt by his brethren, but "God was with him;" though they designed evil, yet God permitted it for good, "to save much people alive." Through this beloved patriarch's instrumentality, the awful effect of the seven years famine were arrested; he was raised from his prison house to the highest post of honor in the kingdom, Pharaoh only reserving the pre-eminence in the throne; he was invested with every administrative power and function, particularly the domestic department, having the supervision of every thing that could minister to, and sustain life. So Christ was betrayed by his brethren, taken by wicked hands and put to death, yet God raised him from the dead and set him at his own right hand as a Prince and Savior or Life-Giver, giving him a name which is above every name, and committing all judgment or government unto him, (Matt. 28: 18; John 5: 27,) only himself being greater in the throne. John 14: 28; Rev. 3: 21. They meant evil as in the case of Joseph's brethren, but God permitted it for good, (John 11: 49, 50; Acts 2: 23, 24;) as will be discovered ere long. Rom. 11: 15, [illegible] None could obtain "corn" or bread but through Joseph in his day, and would have perished without, who became their Savior or Life-Giver; so none under the present dispensation can obtain the corn or "wine and milk" of the gospel—the heavenly nourishment—the celestial food, but through the greater Joseph. All future life is suspended upon him, and is predicated alone upon either a resurrection from "the dead in Christ," or a translation at his coming; and we can see no hope for any of the human family of a future existence, save through this divine plan.

This being the true state of the case, [illegible] energy and living power [illegible] clothed—"I Am [illegible]" should we feel to adopt the petition of those favored hearers of Jesus' sublime life sermon, (John 6: 34)—"Lord, evermore give us this bread!" for we cannot do without it, we must have it or die. Take away all the necessary means of subsistence from man, deprive him of all alimentary substances now, and how long would he continue "a living soul?" But a little while, as he would inevitably perish for want of food. So take away Christ from the bright firmament of the economy of grace, and you obscurate "the bright and morning star;" you throw a pall of death over the once animated scene; you destroy every vestige of the hope of a future existence for any of the children of men. Then, in conclusion on this head, we repeat and pray with the infant church,—"LORD, EVERMORE GIVE US THIS BREAD!"

The bread of life on us bestow,
That we, O Lord, may ever live;
As full as living waters flow,
Sure Thou this bread will freely give.

1 Cor. 15: 24-28.

I desire with humility to offer a few thoughts on this interesting passage.

It is indeed evident from Matt. 28: 18; Eph. 1: 20, 21; and other texts, that the Lord Jesus Christ now possesses great power, both in heaven and earth, by the pleasure of the Father, while sitting at his right hand, until God makes his enemies his footstool. Ps. 110.

When will this be? Will it not be when "Jehovah shall send the rod of strength out of Zion," (Ps. 110: 1, 2,) even when he shall set his King "upon (the) holy hill of Zion" (Ps. 2: 6;) and his enemies be dashed "in pieces like a potter's vessel?" It appears from Rev. 3: 21 that, whatever power or rule Jesus Christ now possesses, he is not now on his own throne, or the throne of his Father David in Zion, which the Father hath promised to give him. Acts 2: 30. He is now "set down with (his) Father in his throne."

From Dan. 7: 13, 14, it clearly appears that the kingdom, or reign on the throne of his Father David, is not to be given him until he shall come "with the clouds of heaven;" then will be "given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him," &c. The divine testimony connects "his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1. He has gone to receive a kingdom, to return and reign, as a man goes to Washington to receive an office and returns to occupy it.

From 1 Cor. 15: 25, 26, it appears that on this throne of his Father David, he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy is death," which Rev. 20 teaches will not be destroyed until he has reigned a thousand years.

What kingdom or reign does he deliver up to the Father, and when does he deliver it up? From the 24th verse it appears to be the kingdom or reign in which he shall "put down all rule and all authority and power" of the kingdoms of this world, which, when the seventh angel shall sound, will "become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ." Rev. 11: 15. Now compare this with 2d Psalm, and see if this rule and power over the nations is not to be accomplished when he is "King upon (God's) holy hill of Zion," even on the throne of his Father David, even when his saints "shall reign on the earth," Rev. 5: 10, with him and have "power over the nations." Rev. 2: 26. This I understand is the kingdom he will give up to the Father, "that God may be ALL IN ALL."

The time of delivering it up will be at "THE END," when all the great conflicts between the powers of light and darkness shall terminate in a glorious and eternal victory in favor of the former, to the praise of Jehovah and his Christ, and the everlasting joy of a holy and happy universe. "When all things shall be subdued unto him, [illegible] him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all." By this representation, I understand that the one and only independent God and Father of all will be more manifestly the only King and Ruler of the universe, for whom "all things are and were created."

To this view it may be objected, that the kingdom of Christ is to continue "forever," that it is to have "no end," &c.

To this I reply, that every biblical student knows that the terms forever and ever are frequently used in the sacred Scriptures in a limited sense. The term "no end" imports no longer duration than the literal term forever. That which is literally forever, can have no end.

I reply, secondly, that this reign of Christ which he himself calls several times "MY kingdom," Luke 22: 30; John 18: 36, is also frequently denominated "the kingdom of God." Rev. 12: 10, &c. It is "the kingdom of God" and the reign and "power of his Christ." As the kingdom of God, or his reign of righteousness, peace and love, it will be strictly without end, though it will be improved in the New Jerusalem state. Rev. 21: 1–5.

It has been supposed that the work of making "Christ's foes his footstool," cannot be properly said to be done by the Father while all power is in Christ's hands; because now the long-suffering of God and the intercession of Christ stay the merited punishment of sin. Consequently Christ must deliver up or hand over or give up the kingdom to God, even the Father; that the Father may overthrow the enemies of God." It is supposed that the kingdom referred to in the passage under consideration, as being given up to the Father, is Christ's "present jurisdiction over the world as Mediator between God and man," and not the millenial reign or kingdom.

This view of this interesting subject appears to me to be attended with insuperable Scriptural objections. By the pleasure of the Father, Christ possessed power in the beginning; and when on earth, "power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as "the Father had given him." John 17: 2; but he had not then a kingdom. "My kingdom (or reign, he said) is not of this age or state." Yet he was Mediator between God and man. He is seated now with his Father on his throne, not yet on his own. Rev. 3: 21. He has therefore no kingdom yet to deliver up. When the Father fulfils the decree of the 2d Psalm and sets him on David's throne, "on the holy hill of Zion," then he will be on his own throne, and certainly, when a king takes his throne, that is the period, not of delivering up power, but of taking power. Thus, when the seventh angel shall sound, the glorious announcement shall ring through heaven and earth, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and THE POWER OF HIS CHRIST." Is it not incongruous to suppose, that at the very era when he shall receive "dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him;" Dan. 7: 14, is the very period when he delivers up the kingdom to the Father?

He indeed manifested his power during his first advent, but the full manifestation of his power and glory is reserved for his millennium reign. During this reign "all things shall be subdued unto him." 1 Cor. 15: 28. Until this work of "restitution of all things" for which the Father sends him, Acts 3: 20, 21, is accomplished, and the last enemy, death, is destroyed, he will not deliver up the kingdom. So I understand the subject, "for he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet." 25th verse. At his glorious appearing he will commence the work by breaking the guilty nations "with a rod of iron." Ps. 2: 9, treading the winepress of the Father's wrath [illegible]

NAAMAN THE LEPER.

I.

In ancient days a leper came
At sound of good Elisha's name,
From Syria's heathen land afar,
To boldly seek a healing Star
That lighteth not his native shore,
But beamed a foreign nation o'er;
He came in pomp of kingly state
As if to show the king his fate,
The wealth of shining mines he brought,
With change of raiment fair he sought
To win the favor of the holy seer
Whose aid he sought with trembling fear.

II.

But wrath within his heart was stirred,
When first he heard the prophet's word,—
"Now go and wash in Jordan's stream,
Then shall thy flesh again be clean."
The leper turned away in scorn,
Such task could not to him belong;
"Are Abana's fair, winding streams,
And Pharpar's rills whose sunny gleams
Light up with joy Damascan fields
Not better than this nation yields?
Have not their waters balm as well
As fairest streams of Israel?

III.

Then round the leper gently thronged
His servants near, who ever longed
To seek their waters good and said—
"My father! if the prophet bade
Thee do some wondrous thing, to share
The blessed boon, wouldst thou dispair?"
Then humbled was Naaman's pride;
He sought and bathed in Jordan's tide,
And when he left its healing flow,
He felt the flush of childhood's glow,—
He was no more a leper now,
But youthful health beamed on his brow.

IV.

This lesson deep the proud man taught,
Great deeds by humblest means are wrought,
And that to trust God's will is wise,
For he views not with human eyes,
But from the lowest forms of earth
Draws out at will redeeming worth.
Now as he sought his home once more
Glowing with health he'd known of yore,
He bowed him down on Syrian sod,
And raised his thoughts in praise to God,
And calmly blessed that happy hour
When first he felt his wondrous power.

The Bread of Life.—No. 2.

A DISCOURSE BY WILLIAM SHEPHERD.

"I am the bread of life."—John 6: 48.

Some religionists indignantly reject every thing which has the slightest appearance of materiality about it from their creeds, as though it partook of infidelity. Let such remember (we say it with all due reverence) that God who formed the worlds is a materialist, for he once pronounced this world and all its primal beauty and furniture not only "good," but the super lative was added—"very good;" and He saw it was so, for we are informed that "God saw every thing that he had made," and was highly pleased therewith. Gen. 1: 31. And thus it will be again in the restitution, when the curse is entirely removed. Some theologians seem to confound the curse with the earth. It is not the earth, but the curse which is to be removed. We do not read, and there was no more earth, but we do read, "And there shall be no more curse." Rev. 22: 3. This is a very comprehensive phrase and goes over the entire ground of evil consequent upon the primeval transgression; when this is removed, which the Son of God is yet and soon to accomplish on his second advent,—for he is to destroy the works of the devil in toto,—when this is consummated, then all, as it was prior to sin entering into the world, will again be "very good."

We would not thus long have dwelt here, on apparently a matter foreign to our subject, had we not conceived this redeemed materiality to be inseparably connected with the future life of promise. Eph. 1: 14.

And now to return, in a few words, touching some prominent features in "the life which is to come," we remark, that its superiority over the common life is such as to be designated "the life of God." Eph. 4: 18. Its pre-eminence is also confirmed by considering its origin. Its subjects are said not to be the product of man, as the blood life, but the product of God. Man, [illegible] it, for such are "born (or begotten) not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, (neither of its impassioned wishes or unholy desires,) nor of the (oft perverted) will of man, but of God." John 1: 13.

Moreover, its superiority is shown over the other by being, as it is called, an "endless life," or "eternal life." Again, it is a hidden or concealed one, for thus we learn in relation to its favored recipients;—"For ye are dead (i. e., dead to sin and the pleasures, plans and schemes commonly associated with the breath of life,) and your life (the life of promise) is hid (hid from the world which is incapable of recognizing it, or your favored position and relation to the Messiah. John 14: 19; John 15: 4; 1 John 3: 1;) with Christ in God; when Christ who is our life (i. e., Life-Giver) shall APPEAR, then shall ye also APPEAR with HIM in GLORY." (Col. 3: 3, 4; John 14: 3; John 17: 24.)

And, lastly, another marked distinction between the nature of this life and that which is to come, is, as we previously intimated, the production of the will, wishes, desires and thinkings of the sinful flesh of the unregenerate man, with but few exceptions, and is common and free as the air we breathe to all animated beings in the natural and fallen world, and in the sense of immediate presence, action, and renewed labor. God has no hand in it, as a general thing; as is affirmed in a former quotation, it is "not of God." He originally formed man, and then instituted certain and invariable laws, that the species might be propagated apart from the divine energy's immediate exertion; and so it is in this sense; the Almighty has nothing to do with bringing them into the world in the fallen Adam, possessing a death principle inherited from him. But He has to do with regenerating and bringing them forth by the life and power of His requickening Spirit in Christ Jesus, and moulding them into the "image of the heavenly"—new creatures after the lovely pattern of the Messiah. And this is styled a gift life. For thus runs the record,—"The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 6: 23. And now we pass to notice,

2. How Jesus Christ becomes the bread of life, or why he appropriates that phrase to himself,—"I am the bread of life." Here the blessed Savior styles himself "the bread of life." Now this is the most appropriate thing in nature, perhaps, which divine wisdom could have selected to illustrate the important truth intended; for it is something which all mankind have some acquaintance with, and its life-perpetuating effects. Bread is the most beautiful and truthful emblem of life that we have any conception of. It is proverbially "the staff of life," and when regarded in its largest sense as embracing all things necessary for this present life, we at once see the force of the figure, when Jesus represents himself as such, and that nothing else in creation could have been chosen more opportune and proper to present himself to a dying and perishing race of mortals than this. But we must bear in mind here that the life which Jesus had reference to was not that which the natural bread sustaineth, but the superior life which we have discussed in the preceding section; for he clearly makes the distinction in his discourse on this topic, as you will find, thus: "This is the bread that cometh down from heaven, which a man may eat and not die," plainly intimating also that those who partake only of the natural bread must eventually perish. John 6: 27. Furthermore, he says, "Your fathers did eat manna in the wilderness, and are dead," but he that eateth of this bread shall live forever.

Again, this bread is distinguished from the former, by being designated "the true bread from heaven. For the bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven, and giveth life unto the world." It likewise claims a pre-eminence by being styled "living bread." "I am the living bread which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." And you will observe, by glancing at the second, that here the unregenerate man could not follow him any further in the profound depths and sublimities of his doctrine. He spake as none other man spake. "The Jews therefore strove among themselves, saying, how can this man give us his flesh to eat? Then said Jesus unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you, (i. e., the divine life.) Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood dwelleth in me and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father, so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me." John 6.

Now the teachings contained in this language, however strange and apparently hard to be understood, is in reality not so, but very plain and simple; and when comprehended in all their beautiful simplicity, there is a life-imparting power in them which is mighty to save. He teaches us, simply, with what earnestness we should imbibe the word of God; (Deu. 8: 3,) how our very being should become completely saturated with his blessed Spirit, (Eph. 3: 17, 19; 5: 18,) and how the entire man should become impregnated with the excellent principles of the gospel, (Col. 3: 16,) and indoctrinated in all its holy precepts. It also unfolds to us that dear and intimate connection which exists between Christ and the Church. Eph. 5: 30.

The eating of the flesh of the Son of God and drinking his blood, we understand, in a word, to be receiving him and his doctrine as scripturally set forth: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved;" or, as it should be translated, "have life." "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." These passages are equivalent in their teachings with the one above, with this difference—the Savior may have had an allusion to the holy eucharist, for when partaking of the last supper with his disciples, we learn that "He took bread, and blessed it, and break it, and gave it to his disciples, and said, Take, eat, this is my body. That the dissertation is highly figurative and spiritual we at once observe from Jesus' concluding remarks: "It is the Spirit that quickeneth, the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life."

And now we hasten to consider why he appropriates that phrase to himself, or why he represents himself the "bread of life."

1. He is the great antetype of the Tree of Life, which originally flourished in the garden of Eden, and which is to be restored and placed in the midst of the Paradise of God.

And it is with him alone and his exclusive and peculiar prerogative to confer life upon all whom he will. 1. From his own affirmation—"Ye will not come to me that ye might have life;" (John 5: 40,) most emphatically implying that if you do not comply with the divine scheme portrayed in the gospel, which is tantamount to rejecting Him, (Mark 8: 38; John 14: 23, 24,) that you will never obtain this life, and consequently perish.

2. From the ready acknowledgment of the inspired apostle on one occasion, when Christ charges some with deserting him, and then inquires of the twelve with much pathos—"Will ye also go away?" Then Simon Peter answered him, Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life, and we believe and are sure that Thou art that Christ the Son of the living God."

These, together with many other powerful arguments contained in the Holy Scriptures which might be brought to bear upon this point, discover most obviously why he designates himself the bread of life, and why it is, as given in the Syriac version of the New Testament, that he is distinguished in the apostolic writings, "The Life-Giver." (See 1 Tim. 1: 1; Tit. 2: 13.

3. He occupies a position similar to the patriarch Joseph, who was betrayed and sold into Egypt by his brethren, but "God was with him;" though they designed evil, yet God permitted it for good, "to save much people alive." Through this beloved patriarch's instrumentality, the awful effect of the seven years famine were arrested; he was raised from his prison house to the highest post of honor in the kingdom, Pharaoh only reserving the pre-eminence in the throne; he was invested with every administrative power and function, particularly the domestic department, having the supervision of every thing that could minister to, and sustain life. So Christ was betrayed by his brethren, taken by wicked hands and put to death, yet God raised him from the dead and set him at his own right hand as a Prince and Savior or Life-Giver, giving him a name which is above every name, and committing all judgment or government unto him, (Matt. 28: 18; John 5: 27,) only himself being greater in the throne. John 14: 28; Rev. 3: 21. They meant evil as in the case of Joseph's brethren, but God permitted it for good, (John 11: 49, 50; Acts 2: 23, 24;) as will be discovered ere long. Rom. 11: 15, 26. None could obtain "corn" or bread but through Joseph in his day, and would have perished without, who became their Savior or Life-Giver; so none under the present dispensation can obtain the corn or "wine and milk" of the gospel—the heavenly nourishment—the celestial food, but through the greater Joseph. All future life is suspended upon him, and is predicated alone upon either a resurrection from "the dead in Christ," or a translation at his coming; and we can see no hope for any of the human family of a future existence save through this divine plan.

This being the true state of the case, then with what an energy and living power is the language of our text clothed—"I AM [illegible] should we feel to adopt the petition of those favored hearers of Jesus' sublime life sermon, (John 6: 34)—"Lord, evermore give us this bread!" for we cannot do without it, we must have it or die. Take away all the necessary means of subsistence from man, deprive him of all alimentary substances now, and how long would he continue "a living soul?" But a little while, as he would inevitably perish for want of food. So take away Christ from the bright firmament of the economy of grace, and you obscurate "the bright and morning star;" you throw a pall of death over the once animated scene; you destroy every vestige of the hope of a future existence for any of the children of men. Then, in conclusion on this head, we repeat and pray with the infant church,—"LORD, EVERMORE GIVE US THIS BREAD!"

The bread of life on us bestow,
That we, O Lord, may ever live;
As full as living waters flow,
Sure Thou this bread will freely give.

(To be concluded.)

For the Crisis.

1 Cor. 15: 24–28.

I desire with humility to offer a few thoughts on this interesting passage.

It is indeed evident from Matt. 28: 18; Eph. 1: 20, 21; and other texts, that the Lord Jesus Christ now possesses great power, both in heaven and earth, by the pleasure of the Father, while sitting at his right hand, until God makes his enemies his footstool. Ps. 110.

When will this be? Will it not be when "Jehovah shall send the rod of strength out of Zion," (Ps. 110: 1, 2,) even when he shall set his King "upon (the) holy hill of Zion" (Ps. 2: 6;) and his enemies be dashed "in pieces like a potter's vessel?" It appears from Rev. 3: 21 that, whatever power or rule Jesus Christ now possesses, he is not now on his own throne, or the throne of his Father David in Zion, which the Father hath promised to give him. Acts 2: 30. He is now "set down with (his) Father in his throne."

From Dan. 7: 13, 14, it clearly appears that the kingdom, or reign on the throne of his Father David, is not to be given him until he shall come "with the clouds of heaven;" then will be "given him dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him," &c. The divine testimony connects "his appearing and his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1. He has gone to receive a kingdom, to return and reign, as a man goes to Washington to receive an office and returns to occupy it.

From 1 Cor. 15: 25, 26, it appears that on this throne of his Father David, he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy is death," which Rev. 20 teaches will not be destroyed until he has reigned a thousand years.

What kingdom or reign does he deliver up to the Father, and when does he deliver it up? From the 24th verse it appears to be the kingdom or reign in which he shall "put down all rule and all authority and power" of the kingdoms of this world, which, when the seventh angel shall sound, will "become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ." Rev. 11: 15. Now compare this with 2d Psalm, and see if this rule and power over the nations is not to be accomplished when he is "King upon (God's) holy hill of Zion," even on the throne of his Father David, even when his saints "shall reign on the earth," Rev. 5: 10, with him and have "power over the nations." Rev. 2: 26. This I understand is the kingdom he will give up to the Father, "that God may be ALL IN ALL."

The time of delivering it up will be at "THE END," when all the great conflicts between the powers of light and darkness shall terminate in a glorious and eternal victory in favor of the former, to the praise of Jehovah and his Christ and the everlasting joy of a holy and happy universe. "When all things shall be subdued unto him, (is not this the very object for which he is coming [illegible] him that put all things under him, that God may be all in all." By this representation, I understand that the one and only independent God and Father of all will be more manifestly the only King and Ruler of the universe, for whom "all things are and were created."

To this view it may be objected, that the kingdom of Christ is to continue "forever," that it is to have "no end," &c.

To this I reply, that every biblical student knows that the terms forever and ever are frequently used in the sacred Scriptures in a limited sense. The term "no end" imports no longer duration than the literal term forever. That which is literally forever, can have no end.

I reply, secondly, that this reign of Christ which he himself calls several times "MY kingdom," Luke 22: 30; John 18: 36, is also frequently denominated "the kingdom of God." Rev. 12: 10, &c. It is "the kingdom of God" and the reign and "power of his Christ." As the kingdom of God, or his reign of righteousness, peace and love, it will be strictly without end, though it will be improved in the New Jerusalem state. Rev. 21: 1–5.

It has been supposed that the work of making "Christ's foes his footstool," cannot be properly said to be done by the Father while all power is in Christ's hands; because now the long-suffering of God and the intercession of Christ stay the merited punishment of sin. Consequently Christ must deliver up or hand over or give up the kingdom to God, even the Father; that the Father may overthrow the enemies of God." It is supposed that the kingdom referred to in the passage under consideration, as being given up to the Father, is Christ's "present jurisdiction over the world as Mediator between God and man," and not the millenial reign or kingdom.

This view of this interesting subject appears to me to be attended with insuperable Scriptural objections. By the pleasure of the Father, Christ possessed power in the beginning; and when on earth, "power over all flesh, that he should give eternal life to as many as "the Father had given him." John 17: 2; but be had not then a kingdom. "My kingdom (or reign, he said) is not of this age or state." Yet he was Mediator between God and man. He is seated now with his Father on his throne, not yet on his own. Rev. 3: 21. He has therefore no kingdom yet to deliver up. When the Father fulfils the decree of the 2d Psalm and sets him on David's throne, "on the holy hill of Zion," then he will be on his own throne, and certainly, when a king takes his throne, that is the period, not of delivering up power, but of taking power. Thus, when the seventh angel shall sound, the glorious announcement shall ring through heaven and earth, "Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and THE POWER OF HIS CHRIST." Is it not incongruous to suppose, that at the very era when he shall receive "dominion and glory and a kingdom, that all people, nations and languages should serve him;" Dan. 7: 14, is the very period when he delivers up the kingdom to the Father?

He indeed manifested his power during his first advent, but the full manifestation of his power and glory is reserved for his millennium reign. During this reign "all things shall be subdued unto him." 1 Cor. 15: 28. Until this work of "restitution of all things" for which the Father sends him, Acts 3: 20, 21, is accomplished, and the last enemy, death, is destroyed, he will not deliver up the kingdom. So I understand the subject, "for he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet." 25th verse. At his glorious appearing he will commence the work, by breaking the guilty nations "with a rod of iron," Ps. 2: 9, treading the wine press of the Father's wrath (Isa. 63: 3) in his fury. In unison, however, with the rule of righteous and avenging justice, [illegible]

awful judgments of righteousness shall be followed with the "building again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down— that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things." Acts 15: 17. Then shall the knowledge of the Lord fill the earth as the waters the sea; Isa. 11: 9, and multitudes shall be converted to God and Immortality, to swell the anthem of praise of that blessed company which no man can number.

It is admitted that our blessed Lord Jesus does not receive "the kingdom and dominion and glory" until according to Dan. 7: 13 he comes "with the clouds of heaven." Yet it is supposed that according to Rev. 11: 15-18, "The Lord God Almighty (then) takes to himself his great power (that has been given into Christ's hands, but is now delivered up) and reigns."

Now observe, by Rev. 12: 10, that this very era of the kingdom of God, or the Father taking to himself his great power, is the very period of "the power of his Christ," i. e., of Christ's receiving power, not of delivering it up. The truth is, that all that Christ does, in any dispensation, God does by him. Acts 2. 22. The Father is the "one God OF whom are all things;" and the Son is the one Lord BY whom are all things; 1 Cor. 8: 6.

I understand the divine testimony to teach that it remains for the era of millennial glory to exhibit the great honor, and power, and majesty of the Son of God, as "King of kings and Lord of lords," as a reward for his obedience unto death, for the accomplishment of our salvation according to the eternal purpose of Jehovah's wisdom and love. "All things shall be subdued unto him (during this reign) then shall the Son also himself be (more manifestly) subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be All in All." 1 Cor. 15: 28. Respectfully and humbly submitted by your servant for Jesus' sake.

For the Crisis.

Dividing the Child!

The pretended and monstrous mother said, "Divide it!" But the mother said, in no wise slay it, but give her the living child. 1 Kings 3: 16-28. This may illustrate the recklessness with which the Lord Jesus—the only Savior—is oft set forth as "The Word" mutilated—as "Christ divided." 1 Cor. 1: 13. "Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it," said one who knew not, or could forget a mother's love. But the truth in us says, "In no wise slay it," let it live any how, or some how.

THE SON of God is set forth as "Prophet," "Priest," and "King." Deut. 18: 18; Ps. 110: 4; Isa. 9: 6-7. To confound this distinction is like gluing and binding together a good man's hands; they are thus made useless, and may become a burden. To deny Christ's kingly office by cutting out and crowding down the strong assertions of his actual coming, kingdom and reign over "the nations," &c., Dan. 7: 14; Ps. 72; is to leave Him before the anxious people as "Christ divided." The poor erring Jew would have had Him all King. But the like erring christian would have Him all "Prophet and Priest."

FAITH cries, "In no wise slay" Him, or divide Him. Let us have the living Christ to REIGN. The Holy Ghost saith, HE was "born king." John 18: 33-38; Matt. 2: 2; Isa. 9: 6-7. Thus His royal destiny, His kingdom, is asserted with an emphasis and a fulness and frequency that is distinguishing and overwhelming. In no other office is Christ so plainly and palpably set forth in prophecy and promise. The doubting christian is a thousand times more guilty than the doubting Jew.

THE NUMBER of Scriptures setting forth our Redeemer as "ruler, judge, king, Lord, (or sovereign) and Deliverer," are to those which disclose Him as prophet or priest, as ONE to TEN!

EACH OFFICE has its place.

First, we have his ministry as Prophet in His first advent.

Second, His priestly work—his offering himself—His going within the veil and interceding for us.

Third, His "COMING in HIS KINGDOM." This third manifestation or official working begins "AT HIS appearing;" because this appearing is "at his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1-8; 1 Tim. 6: 15; Acts 17: 31; Rev. 11: 17; Ps. 2: 6; Matt. 25: 34. Let [illegible] ... [illegible] dissipate or in any way destroy OUR KING. Amen. We shall yet see Him, the Son of man, coming in HIS KINGDOM." Amen. All that is said of his ruling or his "reign over the nations and over the house of Israel," belongs there!

Daily Prayer Meetings.

These meetings—the most remarkable of the kind during the christian dispensation—are being closed during the warm season. They have done a great work, but it remains to be seen how lasting will be the effect. There is still a mystery hanging over the wonderful religious interest felt during the last eight months. As the result of these meetings, many new doors have been opened to receive the great truths of the Bible in which we rejoice, and which are so well adapted to fortify the people against the fables and strong delusions of these last days. While we receive a welcome in these meetings, to join in the worship of God, we can make no compromise of the truth for the sake of a union. Let us use all kind and christian methods to remove the darkness resting upon the minds of the people, and to show them the plain truths of the Bible. People are calling for light. Those who have it should let it shine. Do not put it under a bushel, or say, "if they want it, they can come after it;" but go in the spirit of christian meekness and carry it to them, as you would take a valuable medicine to a sick friend; and be assured, there are many yet who will give you a hearty welcome. Remember the important direction of the apostle, "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." If we do not administer medicine in kindness, the sick may well feel that we are not friendly, but only acting from some selfish motive. The same is true in the moral relations. While we stand immovable in the defence of the truth, let us show by our gentle manner and unwavering zeal, in connection with constant self-denial, that we do not occupy our position because we are obstinate; but from the fact that the truth of the Bible will allow us to hold no other. Thousands would embrace the truth if they could only have it properly presented. While many are losing interest, let us be more engaged.

The following extract from Burleigh's correspondence to the Boston Journal will give an idea of the present state of the daily prayer meetings in New York:

One by one the daily prayer meetings have come to an end. The hot weather, the absence from town of the best supporters of these daily convocations, the revival of trade, all compel the suspension. The business men's prayer meetings on Broadway came to an abrupt termination last week. The room was loaned the meeting, and the unexpected renting of the store called for the close of the meeting on the short notice. To-day the Greenwich street prayer-meeting, held up by the South street merchants and the shipmasters, one of the most vigorous meetings of the city, closed, to be opened on the tenth of September. The meeting to-day was crowded, and the time was extended to one hour and a half. It was a tender, a melting season. Men who had met daily for ten months in that place of prayer, took leave of each other. Some who had been converted during that time made very feeling remarks. Men who had been revived during the time, were melted to tears. The singing was very spirited. And perhaps of all the daily meetings held the past season, none had been more spirited and feeling. The whole concluded with singing the hymn—

"Blest be the tie that binds!"

Palestine.

All eyes appear to be turned towards the original home of man,—the garden of Eden, where paradise once bloomed, occupied by a happy pair, but is now trodden down by the enemies of the Lord. How long must it be in the hands of the oppressor? Jesus answers,—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." We apprehend, that, when the Gentile times are fulfilled, or filled full, all the world will know it. It will then be of no use to preach longer to them. Their day of mercy will be over. But such is not the case now, hence all efforts to take possession of Palestine before the Gentile times are completed, will prove abortive.

Some have thought, that the treading [illegible] ... [illegible]

will overturn, overturn, overturn it; until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Christ must come before we have any permanent change in the land of promise. The following gives some idea of the present condition of the country.

ROBBERIES IN PALESTINE.—The Utica Herald of July 1, publishes the following extract from a letter from Jerusalem, written by Mr. Williams, associate editor of that Journal:

"Numerous outrages have thoroughly alarmed the American residents throughout Palestine and Syria. Robberies are of almost daily occurrence. Two American missionaries were assailed between Beyrout and Jerusalem on Monday last by a band of armed Bedouins, who pointed their guns at their breasts and commanded them to surrender. A similar outrage was committed upon an American party coming from Damascus a few days previous. There is no government in Palestine just now. The Bedouin robbers are the virtual rulers of the land. Robberies occur almost every day under the very walls of Jerusalem.

I attended last evening an informal meeting of American residents in Jerusalem, Jaffa, Beyrout, Damascus and Nazareth, to consider the propriety of representing to the government at Washington the insecurity to life and property of Americans travelling in Palestine; and of requesting its protection against the insolence and extortion of the Turkish robbers. I can assure you that the array of facts upon which the petition will be based is quite startling.

You are of course familiar with the circumstances of the horrible outrages recently committed upon an American family near Jaffa, in which one man was murdered and two women were brutally violated. I have since seen two of the outraged parties, Mr. Dickson, at whose house the outrage was committed, and his daughter, an exceedingly interesting young woman.—They gave me a detailed narration of the sad tragedy, and I assure you it is one calculated to excite horror and indignation. The young lady was dragged over the dead body of her husband, a pistol was presented at her bosom, her resistance overcome by brutal force, and then her person violated by four ruffians in succession. And yet the Turkish authorities allowed several days to elapse before taking any means to ferret out the offenders, and it was only after a threat to order men-of-war before the town that they took any action. Finally four men were arrested, but there is no certain proof that they are the guilty persons. Mr. D is firm in the belief that the authorities winked, if they did not connive at the outrage."

Business.

The word "perplexity" still expresses the feelings of the business men in all parts of the world. All their hopes appear to be blasted. Their plans all fail. With deep anxiety they still inquire, "what do these things mean?" "When will the times change?" If they would but look into the Bible, the mystery would be solved, for that tells us plainly that these "perilous times" are indicative that the Great King is about to come and reign. It seems as though he was trying in all possible ways to wean men from this world, and persuade them to prepare for the glorious one about to come.

Some have taken heed unto the "sure word of prophecy," and found it as "a light that shineth in a dark place." But those who neglect the prophets must walk in darkness.

A New York correspondent of the Boston Journal says:—

Business is dull—very dull. Hundreds of young men have no work. Four thousands clerks have left the city for want of employ. Fine looking, intelligent and capable young men take any menial service rather than not have work to do. One young man, a capable bookkeeper, thrown out of employment by the convulsion, may be seen daily on a dray, with his horse, getting a living on that plan. Some of the corporations have cut down the pay of the employees to starvation prices—from $1500 per year to $600—and while the Presidents get the enormous salaries of $10,000 or $20,000, they tell the men that they can employ Germans to do their work for 50 cents a day, and who would be glad to work for that. At no time since the panic began have "times" been so hard for men of moderate means. We have a great many of your Boston young men here, out of employment, who left good, comfortable situations at the East, attracted by the glare and temptation of New York. Many of them wish themselves at home. All business is overdone—the law, physic, merchandise, trade, clerkships—all but preaching. If any man, "right smart," wants to come into the mission field of our city, work like a galley slave and get his "victuals and clothes," the first scanty, and the last coarse, he can come to New York and get employment. All others had better stay away.

"The Vast Army."

In speaking of this interesting article now being published in the Crisis, Bro. D. T. Taylor remarks, "It is too good to go unread by any. The author is evidently a pre-millenialist, and the climax of the story is the coming of Jesus. Never was [illegible]

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

It is understood that our great annual meeting will be at Wilbraham, where we held it last year, commencing Monday, Aug. 23d, and continuing one week. The location is pleasant, and we anticipate the best meeting we have ever had. Ample preparation will be made for boarding all who wish to be accommodated. It is expected that the fare will be reduced on all the railroads that run in the vicinity of the Camp-ground. We hope to see a large gathering.

As soon as we receive the particulars, we shall present them to our readers.

New Chapel.

Our brethren in East Boston have just completed and dedicated a neat chapel, at the corner of London and Decatur streets. Bro. Burnham preached the dedication sermon, Wednesday evening, July 7th. His subject was the "christian's hope," which he presented in a very interesting manner. We felt that we had no reason to be ashamed of such a hope. It was a soul-cheering time for the saints, and the remembrance of it will ever be pleasing. Our brethren hold prayer meetings in the new chapel every Wednesday and Friday evening. All christians, who may visit East Boston, are invited to attend.

Prayer meetings at our office in Boston, 167 Hanover street, every Monday and Thursday evening, at 7 3-4 o'clock. Those visiting the city are invited to attend.

A Worthy Example.

A correspondent of the Providence Journal, in giving a report of the Quaker meeting at Newport, says:—

The preachers here from abroad are Prescilla Greene and Mary Nicholson, from England; Thomas Jay and Only Thompson, from Indiana; and James Jordan and Mary Ann Sands, from the State of New York. Prescilla Greene and Mary Nicholson came alone to this country on a visit, nearly two years ago, and will shortly return. During their stay they have visited all parts of the country unattended; have been present at all the yearly meetings, North and South, East and West, and have passed from meeting to meeting without expense to themselves. This is one of the peculiar customs of the Society. Their ministers, furnished with a certificate from their own meeting, can pass through a foreign country and receive all the attention they would from friends at home; those who entertain them paying their expenses to the place they are next to visit, and thus they are cared for and passed on in their mission to the people. The Friends have the same regard for the poor of the Society, none of whom are allowed to become a town charge, but all are sustained and fed, as members of one great family.

This looks like the spirit of primitive christianity. Would that all the professed churches of Christ could have the same said of them. How good the expression sounds,—"Members of one great family." Should not this be the feeling of all the followers of Christ? Jesus prays, "that they all may be one." Whatever prevents this oneness of all the true disciples of Christ, is wrong.

We shall ever find this principle true; to wit, the more we sacrifice for one another, the stronger our christian love, and the closer our union in Christ. Selfishness and christian love are incompatible with each other. When one takes possession of the heart, the other is excluded. One of the characteristics of the professors of the last days, as declared by the Apostle, is, they "shall be lovers of their own selves." Shall we be found loving such unworthy objects when the Lord comes?

A Change of Heart.

Every man's life, practically speaking, is shaped by his love. If it is a downward, earthly love, then his actions will be tinged by it, all his life will be as his reigning love. This love, you perceive, is not a mere sentiment, or casual emotion, but is the man's settled affinity; it is that which is, to his character, what the magnetic force is to the needle, the power that adjusts all his aims and works, and practically determines the man. And then, as this love changes, it works a general revolution of the man. Hence it is that so much is said of the heart in the Gospel, and of a change of the heart; for it is what proceeds out of the heart that defileth the man. The meaning is, not that Christianity proposes to give us a new organ of soul, or to extract one member of the soul and insert another, but that it will change the love of the heart. [illegible]

GLOUCESTER.

There is a good work going on, and a prospect of much good. New doors are constantly opening for preaching. I am much interested in seeking the best method to spread these truths and save men. Let us seek wisdom from God."

Elder R. R. York, of Yarmouth, said, "I have no evil report to bring of the land. I have had to labor with my hands to support my family. I have long labored and prayed for the people in Yarmouth, without seeing success. It is a hard place—much sectarian prejudice. I thought I could not preach there, and we had no place to preach in. I traveled and preached in other places—Brunswick, Freeport, &c. Finally we tried for a house to worship in, and found a place readily. The people came in—an interest sprung up. About twenty have been converted. I have baptized seventeen, and expect to baptize others soon. I go for Bible order —we have a church, but have not chosen a deacon yet; intend to soon.

The cause in Y. is good. If brethren wish to go farther than Bible on order—to add anything to it, I shall not agree to it. I will not oppose any work the brethren think best to adopt."

Elder T. J. Dudley, of Augusta, said, "I have not much report to make—have not labored much the past six months on account of ill health. Have been obliged to undergo a surgical operation. Have enjoyed peace—trust the Lord has been with me. My health is improving. Before I was laid by, I labored some in Belgrade and Sydney, Windsor and Augusta—have seen some revival. Labored in union with the Freewill Baptists, Methodists and Baptists. Several were converted. Have not always expressed our views among them, knowing their opposition to them. But I cannot go back to them. I have vowed unto the Lord, and it looks like a step back to unite with a sect from which I came out."

Elder E. M. Hagget, of Hartford, said, "In the region where I live, I am one of those fortunate ones who believe the truth, and therefore act it out. I have labored in company with Brother Hanscome, the past winter, not for sectarianism, but for the conversion of souls. We had a protracted meeting in South Livermore. Some of most all classes embraced the truth. About 35 were converted—16 were baptized at one time, and several since. We organized a church. We have labored in several other places with all classes, and good has been done. I like that spirit which unites the hearts of christians, so that they can work together. I can say that I love God. I have labored in Livermore, Turner, Dixfield, &c. I have seen the penitent's tear, and souls converted. Doors are open to us everywhere. Union with all christians is my motto, and not smite when reviled. We were invited to the Baptist meeting house in Livermore. We began—the power of God was with us—a little flock has been raised up. Every class of opposition has operated, but God has helped. At Hartford there were some converted, and are waiting to go forward in baptism. We need faithful laborers in the vineyard."

Brother James Dudley said, "I am glad to be here—my labors have been small and weak—have labored some in Belgrade, Rome, Vassalboro' and Augusta. There are some more believers now than before. In Augusta there are three times as many. In Rome there has been good done under the labors of Elder Levey. The reformation continues."

Brother Lovejoy, of Augusta, said, "I love the truth of the Bible. It has been but a short time since I believed in the coming of Christ. I love it with all my heart. I heard the word from Brothers Dudley, Smith and Wellcome. Lately God has appeared in mercy. Some 20 or 30 of us now have the privilege of going up to worship God. There are others who have the truth in the heart, but dare not come out. Brother Damman came among us last fall and preached nearly 8 months. God revived his work, and good was done. He has baptized 10. We have but little preaching. Bros. Partridge, Wellcome and Smith have been with us some."

Brother John Campbell, of Damariscotta, said, "There is no advent cause in our place. There has been, but we are shut [illegible] ... place, and I go to Round [illegible] word is preached. I have spent considerable for books and tracts to circulate, and they are working in the community. I hope God may open a door for us yet."

Brother R. Herley, of Newcastle, said, "There are three families of us, who I trust are Adventists. We keep up our little meetings on Sabbath, and occasionally have a lecture. Bro. T. Smith sometimes comes. We are not at all discouraged about the success of the Advent cause—it is of God, and He will sustain it."

Bro. William Patten, of Topsham, said, "There is no Advent cause in Topsham to report—the cause was never lower in that place. There are a few good brethren, but no meetings."

Brother T. M. Storer, of Brunswick, said, "I have not so good a report to bring as others, but thank God for one so good. I am glad to be here, and hear from the brethren I never saw before, and from those who first came to preach the hope to us. The past year we have had but little preaching. Brothers York and Wellcome have preached some. Satan has been making inroads among us. Some have been revived. We have several good substantial members. We still hope for good. In another district the F. W. Baptists and Methodists have had some revival. We met with them some, and find them in a better spirit toward us than formerly. They see things differently. The revival has been quite extensive. We are still looking for the Lord, and are praying, 'Thy kingdom come.'"

Bro. Thompson said, "I am glad to be here and see the brethren. I am glad to see there is more union of ideas and action than formerly. Let us get rid of sectarianism—it does us no good, but hurt. Go preach the gospel to every creature. Don't give them too much at a time—be wise as serpents, and harmless as doves."

Bro. C. Dinsmore, Bowdoinham, said, "I never loved my brethren better. I am going down in old age. I began with the cause, when it commenced. I have not been into all the things we have had among us. I did not want to. I labored in Bowdoinham, and got others to labor. The cause was planted—it prospered, and run over the wall. I rejoiced. But it has changed and gone down. There are a few brethren yet who love the truth. Our hearts are pained—we are grieved and weep for the work that has been done among us. I yet hope to see the cause revived. I am still looking and waiting for the coming of the Lord.

Bro. John Dickerson said, "My heart has been revived of late. It has been a time of mourning with me on account of the state of the cause in Bowdoinham. I sometimes meet with the F. W. Baptists, and have good meetings. Also with the Methodists Let us have wisdom not to give them too much at a time, and we may do them good."

Eld. John Morrill, Newburgh, said, "The cause in our vicinity is in a scattered state. Many are backslidden—the brethren are divided since the time movement. We came up on time, expecting the Lord. Since that we have not sustained meetings in Newburgh. Have tried, but failed several times. But there are some brethren holding on to God. At North Searsport there are some good brethren. God is at work there, and some are revived."

DIXMONT.

There was quite a large society in Dixmont, but they are dreadfully scattered by not attending to gospel order. They numbered more than one hundred, but having no system, they are divided and scattered, and now maintain no meetings I believe.

PLYMOUTH.

The Plymouth church is divided and scattered. There is a great want of union. I have been trying to do what I could, and have suffered much in mind because of the scattered state of things.

Bro. S. Mitchell, Litchfield, said, "We are in rather a scattered state, yet the few who are united are trying to live. Have no meetings except when some brother comes along. Bro. Smith, (the doctor,) and Wellcome come and preach to us occasionally.

NETTLES AND DUTIES.—If you take up nettles slowly and cautiously they will sting you, but if you grasp them and hold them tightly, they cannot pierce your hand. So when you approach a duty which is full of prickles and apprehensiveness, do not take it up with slow timidity, but grasp it, master it, and it will be deprived of its difficulties and its pain.

awful judgments of righteousness shall be followed with the "building again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down—that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things." Acts 15: 17. Then shall the knowledge of the Lord fill the earth as the waters the sea; Isa. 11: 9, and multitudes shall be converted to God and Immortality, to swell the anthem of praise of that blessed company which no man can number.

It is admitted that our blessed Lord Jesus does not receive "the kingdom and dominion and glory" until according to Dan. 7: 13 he comes "with the clouds of heaven." Yet it is supposed that according to Rev. 11: 15–18, "The Lord God Almighty (then) takes to himself his great power (that has been given into Christ's hands, but is now delivered up) and reigns."

Now observe, by Rev. 12: 10, that this very era of the kingdom of God, or the Father taking to himself his great power, is the very period of "the power of his Christ," i. e., of Christ's receiving power, not of delivering it up. The truth is, that all that Christ does, in any dispensation, God does by him. Acts 2. 22. The Father is the "one God OF whom are all things;" and the Son is the one Lord BY whom are all things; 1 Cor. 8: 6.

I understand the divine testimony to teach that it remains for the era of millennial glory to exhibit the great honor, and power, and majesty of the Son of God, as "King of kings and Lord of lords," as a reward for his obedience unto death, for the accomplishment of our salvation according to the eternal purpose of Jehovah's wisdom and love. "All things shall be subdued unto him (during this reign) then shall the Son also himself be (more manifestly) subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be All in All." 1 Cor. 15: 28. Respectfully and humbly submitted by your servant for Jesus' sake.

For the Crisis.

Dividing the Child!

The pretended and monstrous mother said, "Divide it!" But the mother said, in no wise slay it, but give her the living child. 1 Kings 3: 16–28. This may illustrate the recklessness with which the Lord Jesus—the only Savior—is oft set forth as "The Word" mutilated—as "Christ divided." 1 Cor. 1: 13. "Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it," said one who knew not, or could forget a mother's love. But the truth in us says, "In no wise slay it," let it live any how, or some how.

THE SON of God is set forth as "Prophet," "Priest," and "King." Deut. 18: 18; Ps. 110: 4; Isa. 9: 6–7. To confound this distinction is like gluing and binding together a good man's hands; they are thus made useless, and may become a burden. To deny Christ's kingly office by cutting out and crowding down the strong assertions of his actual coming, kingdom and reign over "the nations," &c., Dan. 7: 14; Ps. 72; is to leave Him before the anxious people as "Christ divided." The poor erring Jew would have had Him all King. But the like erring christian would have Him all "Prophet and Priest."

FAITH cries, "In no wise slay" Him, or divide Him. Let us have the living Christ to REIGN. The Holy Ghost saith, HE was "born king." John 18: 33–38; Matt. 2: 2; Isa. 9: 6–7. Thus His royal destiny, His kingdom, is asserted with an emphasis and a fulness and frequency that is distinguishing and overwhelming. In no other office is Christ so plainly and palpably set forth in prophecy and promise. The doubting christian is a thousand times more guilty than the doubting Jew.

THE NUMBER of Scriptures setting forth our Redeemer as "ruler, judge, king, Lord, (or sovereign) and Deliverer," are to those which disclose Him as prophet or priest, as one to ten!

EACH OFFICE has its place.

First, we have his ministry as Prophet in His first advent.

Second, His priestly work—his offering himself—His going within the veil and interceding for us.

Third, His "COMING in HIS KINGDOM." This [illegible] manifestation or official working begins "at His appearing;" because this appearing is "at his kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: [illegible] 15; Acts 17: 31; Rev. [illegible] 6; Matt. 25: 34. Let [illegible]

dissipate or in any way destroy OUR KING. Amen. We shall yet see Him, the Son of man, coming in HIS KINGDOM." Amen. All that is said of his ruling or his "reign over the nations and over the house of Israel," belongs there!

Daily Prayer Meetings.

These meetings—the most remarkable of the kind during the christian dispensation—are being closed during the warm season. They have done a great work, but it remains to be seen how lasting will be the effect. There is still a mystery hanging over the wonderful religious interest felt during the last eight months. As the result of these meetings, many new doors have been opened to receive the great truths of the Bible in which we rejoice, and which are so well adapted to fortify the people against the fables and strong delusions of these last days. While we receive a welcome in these meetings, to join in the worship of God, we can make no compromise of the truth for the sake of a union. Let us use all kind and christian methods to remove the darkness resting upon the minds of the people, and to show them the plain truths of the Bible. People are calling for light. Those who have it should let it shine. Do not put it under a bushel, or say, "if they want it, they can come after it;" but go in the spirit of christian meekness and carry it to them, as you would take a valuable medicine to a sick friend; and be assured, there are many yet who will give you a hearty welcome. Remember the important direction of the apostle, "In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves." If we do not administer medicine in kindness, the sick may well feel that we are not friendly, but only acting from some selfish motive. The same is true in the moral relations. While we stand immovable in the defence of the truth, let us show by our gentle manner and unwavering zeal, in connection with constant self-denial, that we do not occupy our position because we are obstinate; but from the fact that the truth of the Bible will allow us to hold no other. Thousands would embrace the truth if they could only have it properly presented. While many are losing interest, let us be more engaged.

The following extract from Burleigh's correspondence to the Boston Journal will give an idea of the present state of the daily prayer meetings in New York:

One by one the daily prayer meetings have come to an end. The hot weather, the absence from town of the best supporters of these daily convocations, the revival of trade, all compel the suspension. The business men's prayer meetings on Broadway came to an abrupt termination last week. The room was loaned the meeting, and the unexpected renting of the store called for the close of the meeting on the short notice. To-day the Greenwich street prayer-meeting, held up by the South street merchants and the shipmasters, one of the most vigorous meetings of the city, closed, to be opened on the tenth of September. The meeting to-day was crowded, and the time was extended to one hour and a half. It was a tender, a melting season. Men who had met daily for ten months in that place of prayer, took leave of each other. Some who had been converted during that time made very feeling remarks. Men who had been revived during the time, were melted to tears. The singing was very spirited. And perhaps of all the daily meetings held the past season, none had been more spirited and feeling. The whole concluded with singing the hymn—

"Blest be the tie that binds!"

Palestine.

All eyes appear to be turned towards the original home of man,—the garden of Eden, where paradise once bloomed, occupied by a happy pair, but is now trodden down by the enemies of the Lord. How long must it be in the hands of the oppressor? Jesus answers,—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." We apprehend, that, when the Gentile times are fulfilled, or filled full, all the world will know it. It will then be of no use to preach longer to them. Their day of mercy will be over. But such is not the case now, hence all efforts to take possession of Palestine before the Gentile times are completed, will prove abortive.

Some have thought, that the treading [illegible]

will overturn, overturn, overturn it; until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him." Christ must come before we have any permanent change in the land of promise. The following gives some idea of the present condition of the country.

ROBBERIES IN PALESTINE.—The Utica Herald of July 1, publishes the following extract from a letter from Jerusalem, written by Mr. Williams, associate editor of that Journal:

"Numerous outrages have thoroughly alarmed the American residents throughout Palestine and Syria. Robberies are of almost daily occurrence. Two American missionaries were assailed between Beyrout and Jerusalem on Monday last by a band of armed Bedouins, who pointed their guns at their breasts and commanded them to surrender. A similar outrage was committed upon an American party coming from Damascus a few days previous. There is no government in Palestine just now. The Bedouin robbers are the virtual rulers of the land. Robberies occur almost every day under the very walls of Jerusalem.

I attended last evening an informal meeting of American residents in Jerusalem, Jaffa, Beyrout, Damascus and Nazareth, to consider the propriety of representing to the government at Washington the insecurity to life and property of Americans travelling in Palestine; and of requesting its protection against the insolence and extortion of the Turkish robbers. I can assure you that the array of facts upon which the petition will be based is quite startling.

You are of course familiar with the circumstances of the horrible outrages recently committed upon an American family near Jaffa, in which one man was murdered and two women were brutally violated. I have since seen two of the outraged parties, Mr. Dickson, at whose house the outrage was committed, and his daughter, an exceedingly interesting young woman.—They gave me a detailed narration of the sad tragedy, and I assure you it is one calculated to excite horror and indignation. The young lady was dragged over the dead body of her husband, a pistol was presented at her bosom, her resistance overcome by brutal force, and then her person violated by four ruffians in succession. And yet the Turkish authorities allowed several days to elapse before taking any means to ferret out the offenders, and it was only after a threat to order men-of-war before the town that they took any action. Finally four men were arrested, but there is no certain proof that they are the guilty persons. Mr. D. is firm in the belief that the authorities winked, if they did not connive at the outrage."

Business.

The word "perplexity" still expresses the feelings of the business men in all parts of the world. All their hopes appear to be blasted. Their plans all fail. With deep anxiety they still inquire, "what do these things mean?" "When will the times change?" If they would but look into the Bible, the mystery would be solved, for that tells us plainly that these "perilous times" are indicative that the Great King is about to come and reign. It seems as though he was trying in all possible ways to wean men from this world, and persuade them to prepare for the glorious one about to come.

Some have taken heed unto the "sure word of prophecy," and found it as "a light that shineth in a dark place." But those who neglect the prophets must walk in darkness.

A New York correspondent of the Boston Journal says:—

Business is dull—very dull. Hundreds of young men have no work. Four thousands clerks have left the city for want of employ. Fine looking, intelligent and capable young men take any menial service rather than not have work to do. One young man, a capable bookkeeper, thrown out of employment by the convulsion, may be seen daily on a dray, with his horse, getting a living on that plan. Some of the corporations have cut down the pay of the employees to starvation prices—from $1500 per year to $600—and while the Presidents get the enormous salaries of $10,000 or $20,000, they tell the men that they can employ Germans to do their work for 50 cents a day, and who would be glad to work for that. At no time since the panic began have "times" been so hard for men of moderate means. We have a great many of your Boston young men here, out of employment, who left good, comfortable situations at the East, attracted by the glare and temptation of New York. Many of them wish themselves at home. All business is overdone—the law, physic, merchandise, trade, clerkships—all but preaching. If any man, "right smart," wants to come into the mission field of our city, work like a galley slave and get his "victuals and clothes," the first scanty, and the last coarse, he can come to New York and get employment. All others had better stay away.

"The Vast Army."

In speaking of this interesting article now being published in the Crisis, Bro. D. T. Taylor remarks, "It is too good to go unread by any. The author is evidently a pre-millennialist, and the climax of the story is the coming of Jesus. Never was [illegible]

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

It is understood that our great annual meeting will be at Wilbraham, where we held it last year, commencing Monday, Aug. 23d, and continuing one week. The location is pleasant, and we anticipate the best meeting we have ever had. Ample preparation will be made for boarding all who wish to be accommodated. It is expected that the fare will be reduced on all the railroads that run in the vicinity of the Camp-ground. We hope to see a large gathering.

As soon as we receive the particulars, we shall present them to our readers.

New Chapel.

Our brethren in East Boston have just completed and dedicated a neat chapel, at the corner of London and Decatur streets. Bro. Burnham preached the dedication sermon, Wednesday evening, July 7th. His subject was the "christian's hope," which he presented in a very interesting manner. We felt that we had no reason to be ashamed of such a hope. It was a soul-cheering time for the saints, and the remembrance of it will ever be pleasing. Our brethren hold prayer meetings in the new chapel every Wednesday and Friday evening. All christians, who may visit East Boston, are invited to attend.

Prayer meetings at our office in Boston, 167 Hanover street, every Monday and Thursday evening, at 7 3-4 o'clock. Those visiting the city are invited to attend.

A Worthy Example.

A correspondent of the Providence Journal, in giving a report of the Quaker meeting at Newport, says:—

The preachers here from abroad are Prescilla Greene and Mary Nicholson, from England; Thomas Jay and Only Thompson, from Indiana; and James Jordan and Mary Ann Sands, from the State of New York. Prescilla Greene and Mary Nicholson came alone to this country on a visit, nearly two years ago, and will shortly return. During their stay they have visited all parts of the country unattended; have been present at all the yearly meetings, North and South, East and West, and have passed from meeting to meeting without expense to themselves. This is one of the peculiar customs of the Society. Their ministers, furnished with a certificate from their own meeting, can pass through a foreign country and receive all the attention they would from friends at home; those who entertain them paying their expenses to the place they are next to visit, and thus they are cared for and passed on in their mission to the people. The Friends have the same regard for the poor of the Society, none of whom are allowed to become a town charge, but all are sustained and fed, as members of one great family.

This looks like the spirit of primitive christianity. Would that all the professed churches of Christ could have the same said of them. How good the expression sounds,—"Members of one great family." Should not this be the feeling of all the followers of Christ? Jesus prays, "that they all may be one." Whatever prevents this oneness of all the true disciples of Christ, is wrong.

We shall ever find this principle true; to wit, the more we sacrifice for one another, the stronger our christian love, and the closer our union in Christ. Selfishness and christian love are incompatible with each other. When one takes possession of the heart, the other is excluded. One of the characteristics of the professors of the last days, as declared by the Apostle, is, they "shall be lovers of their own selves." Shall we be found loving such unworthy objects when the Lord comes?

A Change of Heart.

Every man's life, practically speaking, is shaped by his love. If it is a downward, earthly love, then his actions will be tinged by it, all his life will be as his reigning love. This love, you perceive, is not a mere sentiment, or casual emotion, but is the man's settled affinity; it is that which is, to his character, what the magnetic force is to the needle, the power that adjusts all his aims and works, and practically determines the man. And then, as this love changes, it works a general revolution of the man. Hence it is that so much is said of the heart in the Gospel, and of a change of the heart; for it is what proceeds out of the heart that defileth the man. The meaning is, not that Christianity proposes to give us a new organ of soul, or to extract one member of the soul and insert another, but that it will change the love of the heart. [illegible]

GLOUCESTER.

There is a good work going on, and a prospect of much good. New doors are constantly opening for preaching. I am much interested in seeking the best method to spread these truths and save men. Let us seek wisdom from God."

Elder R. R. York, of Yarmouth, said, "I have no evil report to bring of the land. I have had to labor with my hands to support my family. I have long labored and prayed for the people in Yarmouth, without seeing success. It is a hard place—much sectarian prejudice. I thought I could not preach there, and we had no place to preach in. I traveled and preached in other places—Brunswick, Freeport, &c. Finally we tried for a house to worship in, and found a place readily. The people came in—an interest sprung up. About twenty have been converted. I have baptized seventeen, and expect to baptize others soon. I go for Bible order—we have a church, but have not chosen a deacon yet; intend to soon.

The cause in Y. is good. If brethren wish to go farther than Bible on order—to add anything to it, I shall not agree to it. I will not oppose any work the brethren think best to adopt."

Elder T. J. Dudley, of Augusta, said, "I have not much report to make—have not labored much the past six months on account of ill health. Have been obliged to undergo a surgical operation. Have enjoyed peace—trust the Lord has been with me. My health is improving. Before I was laid by, I labored some in Belgrade and Sydney, Windsor and Augusta—have seen some revival. Labored in union with the Freewill Baptists, Methodists and Baptists. Several were converted. Have not always expressed our views among them, knowing their opposition to them. But I cannot go back to them. I have vowed unto the Lord, and it looks like a step back to unite with a sect from which I came out."

Elder E. M. Hagget, of Hartford, said, "In the region where I live, I am one of those fortunate ones who believe the truth, and therefore act it out. I have labored in company with Brother Hanscome, the past winter, not for sectarianism, but for the conversion of souls. We had a protracted meeting in South Livermore. Some of most all classes embraced the truth. About 35 were converted—16 were baptized at one time, and several since. We organized a church. We have labored in several other places with all classes, and good has been done. I like that spirit which unites the hearts of christians, so that they can work together. I can say that I love God. I have labored in Livermore, Turner, Dixfield, &c. I have seen the penitent's tear, and souls converted. Doors are open to us everywhere. Union with all christians is my motto, and not smite when reviled. We were invited to the Baptist meeting house in Livermore. We began—the power of God was with us—a little flock has been raised up. Every class of opposition has operated, but God has helped. At Hartford there were some converted, and are waiting to go forward in baptism. We need faithful laborers in the vineyard."

Brother James Dudley said, "I am glad to be here—my labors have been small and weak—have labored some in Belgrade, Rome, Vassalboro' and Augusta. There are some more believers now than before. In Augusta there are three times as many. In Rome there has been good done under the labors of Elder Levey. The reformation continues."

Brother Lovejoy, of Augusta, said, "I love the truth of the Bible. It has been but a short time since I believed in the coming of Christ. I love it with all my heart. I heard the word from Brothers Dudley, Smith and Wellcome. Lately God has appeared in mercy. Some 20 or 30 of us now have the privilege of going up to worship God. There are others who have the truth in the heart, but dare not come out. Brother Damman came among us last fall and preached nearly 3 months. God revived his work, and good was done. He has baptized 10. We have but little preaching. Bros. Partridge, Wellcome and Smith have been with us some."

Brother John Campbell, of Damariscotta, said, "There is no advent cause in our place. [illegible]

Health Department.

The following interesting communication is taken from the Letter Box, published at the Glen Haven Water Cure, Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y.

To Parents.

I was sitting in my office two years and a half ago, when a rap at the door broke up a reverie into which, from being alone, I had fallen. I rose, opened the door, and was face to face with a gentleman. He was a stranger, and I invited him to walk in. Offering him a seat, I also took mine, and inquired in what way I could serve him.

"Do you ever leave home to visit the sick?" he asked.

"I do," I said.

"Then I wish you to go with me and see my daughter."

"Where do you live?"

"On ———."

"Who are you, if I may ask?"

"My name is ———."

"O! ah!" I exclaimed, "I am glad to see you, though I am chagrined at my stupidity in not knowing you. I have said to myself a great many times, that I should know you by instinct, by intuition, without the aid of an introduction; so much in accord with your sentiments are my own on the question of the Age."

He smiled, as if gratified at my enthusiasm in respect to the certainty of my knowing him psychometrically, and then reverted to his errand.

"Will you go with me?" he asked.

"I will."

"How soon?"

"Two hours. What is the matter with your daughter?"

"Cannot tell. Physicians differ, and I have come to ask you to go with me and give your opinion."

"And add perhaps to the uncertainty and the general confusion respecting the case." I added.

"Yes, perhaps, but this risk I readily run because I enhance the possibility of being told the truth, and thus saving my daughter."

I commenced preparations, and as soon as possible we were under way, and in one hour's time I stood before his daughter—a lovely girl of some sixteen summers.

She was dying of Scrofula. It had fastened itself upon the organ of Nutrition, and she was being starved to death, though her appetite for food was in a ratio inverse to the nutrition energy.

I concluded the case in my own mind instanter, and said,

"Your daughter is dying from Scrofula, which was introduced into her system when a child from eating pork."

"How do you know this?" he asked.

"By signs and symptoms," I replied.

"Well: you must be right, I think, for she was taken sick at nine years of age immediately after eating fried liver."

"I thought so."

"So there is no hope?"

"Not a whit."

He turned, walked out of the room, and as soon as the door was closed fell to the floor like one dead—had fainted. On recovery, he told me the details of the original sickness, and such was his ingenuousness that I was charmed.

As the doom of death was over his daughter, and I could not break it, I bade him adieu, and in four weeks from the day I saw her, they laid her body in the family vault, the victim of Swine Poison.

If you value your children's lives keep them from eating stye-fed and stall-fed meats.

By the arrival of the city of Washington, we have news from Liverpool to the 23d ult.

News unimportant. No tidings from the telegraph cable fleet.

The case of John B. Gough, the Temperance Lecturer, against Dr. Lees, for libel, has resulted in favor of Mr. Gough, Dr. Lees having retracted the charges on which the suit was instituted.

The Pope of Rome is going to increase his navy.

In the Island of Rhodes, according to recent letters, all the crops were perishing from drouth, murrain had broken out amongst the cattle, and extensive depredations were committed by birds of passage. The Governor of the Island had formed a corps of 150 practised marksmen to kill the birds.

RUSSIA.

Letters from St. Petersburg state that the Emperor is gathering about him every day men belonging to the progressive party. The cabinet is impressed with the necessity of approaching Western civilization, and the next generation will not find any trace of slavery in Russia. This policy is opposed by the old Russian party headed by Prince Menschikoff. The old German party, headed by Prince Nesselrode, has not much influence. Russia is on the very worst terms with Austria, and on the very best with France. England is by no means popular, and Russia threatens to make any alliance hostile to Great Britain. Russia is very active in Turkey not to create any actual revolt, but to gain the feelings of the Christians.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMSHIP FULTON.

No news from the Atlantic Telegraph.

The transformation of sailing ships into steamers is going on with great activity in France.

LATER FROM INDIA.

The latest telegraph advices from India are of considerable interest. Sir Hugh Rose has captured Calpee. He was twice ineffectually attacked by the rebels, when a rapid pursuit of them was made, resulting in the capture of large stores of guns, elephants, gunpowder and camp equipage.

The Designs of France against England.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser writes:

"It may be asked, What are the real intentions of France toward England? I heard yesterday a Counsellor of State say this: 'It is not our policy to quarrel with England, because the interests of the two nations are too closely identified; but she has heaped upon us lately insult after insult to such a point that France is ready now for war, and only waits an occasion, but if it comes she will accept it with delight. England is counteracting us in every measure we propose in the interest of the East; she is leagued with Austria to assist in this ungrateful work; she insults us gratuitously and boldly in her parliamentary discussions on the slave trade, and in singular contrast with her servility to the United States; she exercises a most impudent surveillance over our vessels and our coast; she has just acquitted two more of her propagators of assassination, and she has never yet given the Emperor one word of satisfaction on the refugee question. Is it curious that our forbearance, even in presence of the immense interests which unite the two countries, should be on the point of giving way?'"

The Civil War in Mexico.—Blood is beginning to flow freely in Mexico, and on several occasions after a battle, all of the officers captured have been summarily shot. At San Juan de Los Lagos, the followers of the Church were routed by the Liberals. The leader of the former was a notorious priest named Santillana, who was captured with one hundred of his followers. As soon as Colonel Zuazua received the report of the action he ordered Colonel Blanco to execute the priest, as all others captured, and who had figured as the leading officers.—Boston Traveller.

A War Probable in Utah.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce says:—

"Those who are so eager for a war in Utah will not be disappointed. Every thing, except Gov. Cumming's prudence and humanity and disinterestedness tends that way. The disposition made of the United States troops that were to be despatched on the second expedition and the discretionary orders to Gen. Harney do not prevent the prosecution of the war. Gen. Harney will, no doubt, get such advices as will authorize him to proceed."

The Weather.—A weather prophet, writing to an agricultural paper, says:

"When you wish to know what the weather is to be, go out and select the smallest cloud you see; keep your eye upon it, and if it decreases and disappears, it shows a state of the air which will be sure to be followed by fine weather; but if it increases in size, take your great coat with you, if you are going from home, for falling weather will not be far off. The reason is this: when the air is becoming charged with electricity, you will see every cloud attracting all lesser ones to it, until it gathers into a shower; and, on the contrary, when the fluid is passing off or diffusing itself, then a large cloud will be seen breaking to pieces and dissolving."

Items.

It is calculated that a fluent speaker utters between 7000 and 7500 words in the course of an hour's uninterrupted speaking. Many orators of more than usually rapid utterance will reach 8000 and even 9000. But 125 words a minute, or 7500 an hour, is a fair average.

Farewell Sermon of Mr. Coolidge.—Rev. J. I. T. Coolidge, for 16 years pastor of the Thirteenth Congregational Unitarian Church, Boston, having, says the Courier, accepted the creed held by the Orthodox churches, on Sunday parted from his congregation by preaching a farewell sermon. He gave the reasons for the change in his belief, and said that Unitarianism led to irreverence, irreligion and disbelief.

Obituary.

Died in Portsmouth, N. H., April 25th, Sister Sarah Holman, widow of Silas Holman, aged 80.

She was a worthy and highly esteemed member of the Congregationalist Church in P——, for 48 years. Being bereft of an affectionate husband in early life, and left with small children, she has passed through half a century of widowhood with changing scenes and divers fortunes. She maintained the most perfect calmness, equanimity and christian fortitude. For several years past she has been a firm believer in the soon coming of her Lord to raise the dead, change the righteous living, and give eternal life to all that obey him.

She was faithful to all around her, and on her tongue was the law of kindness, and having the spirit of her Master, she loved to do good. It was her delight to go to the house of God and hear the glad sound of Jesus' coming. She was then but two Sabbaths before her death. Her last days were those of the righteous, and the Lord was with her in her expiring moments.

I was with her a few hours before her death, and as I drew near her bedside, she extended her hand with a warm grasp, and a heavenly smile upon her countenance, which was the sequel to her christian life.

Truly a mother in Israel has left us, and the world has lost a true friend. The last prayer of that mother was for her children, that they might be with her in the promised land. May the Lord hear and answer. I tried to comfort the mourners from 1 Cor.

SPRING TIME.

O Spring-time delightful! bright morn of the year,
How happily truthful her beauties appear,
Sweetly drawing the mind and charming the heart,
She does in her sweetness that sweetness impart.

O Spring-time delightful! we truly may say,
For blessing, it points to a happier day,
And blessing, it leads to the blessing foreseen,
Rejoicing the moments that so intervene.

O Spring-time delightful! we truly may say,
For blessing, it points to a happier day,
And blessing, it leads to the blessings foreseen,
Rejoicing the moments that so intervene.

O Spring-time delightful! blest emblem art thou
Of the Spring-time of grace when in its rich flow,
Of mercies and blisses, it sweetly doth tend
To that day of glory that never shall end.

That bright day of glory, what will it display?
More splendor than fancy can ever portray;
When the fulness celestial ever shall shine,
And superlative glow with the lustre divine.

That bright day of glory, O rapturous day!
Where heavenly love to the saints shall convey
Those plenary blessings, which constantly spring
From the presence, the joy, of the heavenly King.

That bright day of glory, of holiest joy,
Third birthday of those who their powers employ,
In living for glory, by living to Him
Who once came to suffer, but now to redeem.

O happy believers, who joyfully trace
The beauties of life in the beauties of grace,
Who counting his presence the acme of gain,
Are searching the time he is coming to reign!

SABBATH EVE.

It is sweet,
At such an hour, to wander out beneath
The eternal sky, to gaze into its depths,
To picture angel-shapes on every star,
To listen to the mystic songs that seem
To Fancy's ear to wander down to Earth
From the far gates of Eden, and to feel
The deep and gentle spirit, that pervades
The blessed air, sink like a holy spell
Upon life's troubled waters.

Hark! the bell
Tolls out the midnight hour! How glorious
And yet how lonely is the face of things
At this still hour of musings! Vale and hill,
And plain and stream, and lake and ancient wood
Glow in the distance, and Religion rests
Upon them like a mantle. O, I love,
On eves like this, to kneel in solitude
At nature's shrine. The gentle dews that bathe
My brow, seem God's own baptism, and each voice
That speaks in mystic eloquence from the sky,
And air, and earth, and ocean, calls the soul
To mingle with the holiness of heaven.

Access to God.

However early in the morning you seek the gate of access, you find it already open; and however deep the midnight moment when you find yourself in the sudden arms of death, the winged prayer can bring an instant Saviour near; and this wherever you are. It needs not that you ascend a special Pisgah or Moriah. It needs not that you should enter some awful shrine, or put off your shoes on some holy ground. Could a memento be reared on every spot from which an acceptable prayer has passed away, and on which a prompt answer has come down, we should find Jehovah-shammah, "the Lord hath been here," inscribed on many a cottage hearth and many a dungeon floor. We should find it not only in Jerusalem's proud temple, David's cedar galleries, but in the fisherman's cottage, by the brink in Genesareth and in the upper chamber where Pentecost began. And whether it be the field where Isaac went to meditate, or the rocky knoll where Jacob lay down to sleep, or the brook where Israel wrestled, or the den where Daniel gazed on the hungry lions and the lions gazed on him, or the hill-sides where the man of sorrows prayed all night, we should still discern the prints of the ladder's feet let down from heaven—the landing-place of mercies because the starting-point of prayer.—Hamilton.

Discipline of the Young.—The oldest son of President Edwards, while congratulating a friend on having a family of sons, said to him, with much earnestness: "Remember there is but one mode of family government. I have brought up fourteen boys, two of whom I suffered to grow up without the rod. One of these was my youngest brother, and the other was Aaron Burr, my sister's only son—both of whom had lost their parents in their childhood; and, from both my observation and experience, I tell you, sir, a maple-sugar government will never answer. Beware how you let the first act of disobedience in your little boys go unnoticed, and, unless evidence of repentance be manifest, unpun-

EARNEST WORDS.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

It may be glorious to write
Thoughts that shall glad the two or three High souls, like those far stars that come in sight
Once in a century;—

But better far is it to speak
One simple word, which now and then
Shall waken their free nature in the weak
And friendless sons of men;

To write some earnest verse or line,
Which, seeking not the praise of art,
Shall make a clearer faith and manhood shine
In the untutored heart.

He who doth this, in verse or prose,
May be forgotten in his day,
But surely shall be crowned at last with those
Who live and speak for aye.

For the Crisis.

A Few Thoughts.

The idea advanced by W. S. C., in a recent communication, that our course, as a people, in the investigation of the prophetic scriptures, etc., "allied us though unworthy to the prophets themselves," seems to me as truthful as it does ennobling. Although while pursuing this heaven directed course for some fifteen years past, we have necessarily encountered many of Ezekiel's therns and briers, yet having had our "feet shod with the preparation of the gospel" has secured us against sliding, while taking heed to the prophecies, which, according to Peter, are just as necessary to the church as a light in a dark place. 2 Pet. 1: 19. When necessity obliges us to travel in a very dark night, we can realise the force of this scripture: a small light even may save us from the fatal stumble.

If then the prophetic scriptures are of such momentous importance, why do not more seek and follow their light, is a question which naturally forces itself upon us; and especially, why do those who have once taken this glorious light to illume their pathway, lay it aside as useless, or conceal it as though it might be dangerous, or cast it out to be trodden under foot like the salt bereft of its savor? I say, why do they thus, after having experienced its utility in delivering them from the bondage of uncertainty and dread; and giving them a certainty of sharing the same reward promised to faithful Abraham, which is the kingdom under the whole heavens?

Is it not because the flesh—the old man—is sufficiently alive to be sensitive to those briars and thorns? (Ezek. 2: 6,) the first of which I understand to represent non-professors, the latter the professed church of God. Briars annoy and cause some pain, but are incapable of piercing as deeply as the thorn. Just so we see the professed church have always been capable of thrusting as much more poignant darts at Christ's little flock as the size of the thorn exceeds that of the briar. The reason of this capability is obvious. They are usually deserters; or, what is more commonly termed, backsliders. Like the traitor to his country who can inflict more real injury on the army he has left than a score of those who have ever remained with their own company! And why? Because he is capable of apprising the foe of their most vulnerable places; like Judas, when the professed church clamored for the blood of Jesus Christ—he knows the PLACE. John 18: 2.

But, says one, I am organized with so large a share of approbativeness, I am exceedingly sensitive to the frowns of my fellow beings, and especially those with whom I have been associated on terms of intimacy. Dear soul! if your Creator has organized you with large approbativeness, do you not know it is your prerogative to lay the reins of truth upon it, and guide it in the right channel? Just think of Him who maketh the clouds his chariots—who holds the winds in His fists, and taketh up the islands as a very little thing, and can with one word end your existence; and methinks this kind of reasoning would guide your approbation in the right channel. But I seem wholly incapacitated to endure that cold frown—that contemptuous curl of the lip, &c.: to tell you the truth, I feel quite unpleasantly if not invited and [illegible]. Well, if you are [illegible] of these worldly associations [illegible] love to see those who are so enamored with the coming king and kingdom, that when their flesh is filled with this kind of thorns, they will not lay by even a day on the account. Thank God, there are some whose flesh has become so dead, that when they actually see these thorns making deep incisions, in the form of the most cruel invectives, they remain calm and peaceful as the moonbeams of June. And why? because they are DEAD.

The Apostle often uses death as a comparison, to show how perfectly insensible God's children should be to the censure or praise of men. Significant comparison! Place before a dead man all the gold of Ophir, it has no incentive to move him; heap upon him all the opprobrious epithets the enemy of God and man can invent, he frowns not, neither makes any attempt to avenge himself: he is DEAD!

And is it so that all the true prophets of God, and those who follow their precepts, may expect to experience the thorns of persecution? Should one feel disposed to reply in the negative, I would inquire with Stephen—"Which of the Prophets have not your fathers persecuted?" No matter how lovely their person, how interesting their address, how deep their lore, how honorable their standing and pedigree, let them but receive the spirit of prophecy and they are calumniated, and if Cæsar's law will allow, they must receive corporeal punishment—perhaps death.

Look, if you please, at the amiable, unoffending Joseph. Who could have thought that such indignity and cruelties would have been inflicted on his person by his brethren, in consequence of his receiving and obeying the voice of prophecy? Read, if you please, the 6th chapter of Amos, from the 3d to the 8th verses inclusive, and see how the ire of Jehovah is kindled against those who roll in luxury and pleasure, but they "are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph!"

Do any excuse themselves with the plea of ignorance relative to what Joseph's affliction was, and consequently are unconscious whether they have offended; or are approved in this solemn declaration of the Almighty? One thing is obvious, that this denunciation does not refer to the personal enemies of Joseph. ENEMIES, did I say? These words were not addressed to the avowed, decided enemies of Joseph; but to those easy-minded, luxurious livers who had every avenue of kindness and sympathy closed against those afflicted like Joseph—enjoying so many creature comforts that Gallio-like, they care for none of these things. They were uttered some nine hundred years subsequent to the time Joseph in person endured his afflictions. Now if they will apply to persons living nine hundred years after Joseph, may they not apply to those possessing the same spirit twenty-six hundred years after? But to Joseph's afflictions. The spirit of prophecy came upon him—God showed him what was to be in the future! And he conducted himself just as though he believed what God said. This so excited the hatred and envy of his brethren that one so much their junior should arrogate to himself such superior knowledge, that it determined them to intercept this prophecy by imbuing their hands in their brother's blood: thus they ruthlessly cast him into a pit to die with hunger, or from the sting of some poisonous reptile!

Think you he ever endured deeper affliction than when shut up in that deep cavern? Behold an innocent and delicate lad, reared amid the tenderest affection of a fond and partial father, whose heart had been made the more sensitive by the death of his dear Rachel, which deprived this dear boy of maternal affection. See him (as he must have supposed) forever shut out from that fond father's embrace, with not even a juvenile associate to assuage his grief, to die by the hands of those who should have been his protectors: and all because he had followed the voice of prophecy!

But the ire of Jehovah does not rest on these cruel perpetrators exclusively, but upon those who are enjoying all the comforts, yea, luxuries of this life, but have no sympathy for the woes of those who suffer by obeying prophecy. They "are at ease in Zion."

And has this nineteenth century witnessed a manifestation of this same spirit? Has there been a "little flock" who have incurred the hatred of their professed brethren for adhering to the voice of prophecy? And is there not a class who do not condescend to all this malignity, yet [illegible] used?" They mean to be saved, but they will not take the cross of prophecy upon them.

But ye, "little flock," with whom I have the honor to be associated, shall Ezekiel's briars and thorns, or even a want of sympathy in those from whom we have a right to expect it, deter us from following the prophetic road? Methinks I hear you exclaim with more fervor than did even Napoleon to his army, who were in very adverse and trying circumstances—"ONWARD!" What if others do assert there are other good roads which lead to the kingdom, far less difficult, not intercepted by so many briars and thorns; is it not enough that the Captain of our Salvation has pointed us to this road, warning us to take heed unto it as unto a light in a dark place? Can we feel any surety when we turn into another path? More anon.

No. VIII.

DEAR UNCLE FRED:—Did I not prove to you that Abraham could not have inherited the land that was promised to him for an everlasting possession? If you still question this, why I can produce testimony in addition that will place the matter beyond dispute.

Bro. Stephen, I want you to come forward here, and testify to my dear Uncle Fred, for I know that he will believe you. Did God give Abraham an inheritance in Canaan? "He gave him none inheritance in it, no, not so much as to set his foot on."

That is very direct and positive, but I want to ask one question more, for there are a great many who believe that the promise had reference only to the natural seed of Abraham, and was fulfilled in their possession of Canaan. I don't know as Uncle Fred believes this, but to make it all straight I wish to know if Abraham did actually have a promise of the land for himself, as well as for his seed? "He promised that he would give it to HIM for a possession, and to his seed after him."

Thank you, Bro. Stephen, that will do. I think your testimony ought to settle this question forever, that Abraham himself was promised the land, and as you state that he had no inheritance in it, not even sufficient to set his foot on, why it must be that the possession of it is yet future, and I think that Bro. Paul has stated something which goes to establish this point, when speaking of the same thing. Bro. Paul, will you give your testimony to Uncle Fred, touching this matter? Did Abraham and his heirs come into possession of their inheritance during their present life?

"These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. For they that say such things, declare plainly that they seek a country. And truly if they had been mindful of that country from whence they came out, they might have had an opportunity to have returned. But now they desire a better country, that is an heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city."

It is certain, Uncle Fred, from the testimony formerly presented, that God did by oath and covenant promise to Abraham all the land that he could behold. It is equally as certain that Abraham never possessed a foot of it, but died in the faith that he would inherit it. Now is it not also as certain that after he is resurrected from the dead, he will receive it for an everlasting possession, and that then will be fulfilled the language of our Savior to the unbelieving Jews—"They shall come from the east and from the west and from the north and from the south, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of God." "Ye shall see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of God, and ye yourselves thrust out?"

Do you say that according to Paul's testimony, the country promised was to be an "heavenly" one, and cannot therefore be this earth? I answer, Paul does indeed say that that country will be "heavenly," and are we not sometimes permitted to "sit together in heavenly places," when assembled for the worship of God, and Jesus grants us very sweet and abundant communications of his grace? But how [illegible] the curse pronounced upon it when Adam sinned, shall bloom forth again, clad in her Eden robe—when her wilderness places shall be as the garden of the Lord—when the tree of life shall yield her abundant and varied fruit—when the beasts of the field will again be in subjection to man, and nothing shall hurt or destroy in all of God's holy mountain—but the whole earth be filled with the glory of the Lord. When all sin shall be forever banished—all sorrow removed—death be unknown, and man stand forth resplendent with the light of immortality and the image of his Maker. When Christ shall reign in righteousness, and "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox—and the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den." Then violence will no more be heard in the land, wasting nor destruction within its borders, but the walls of Zion shall be called Salvation, and her gates Praise. The people shall be all righteous, they shall inherit the land forever.

Will not this be an heavenly country, dear Uncle? Could you conceive of any thing more nearly in affinity with heaven than this?

Our eyes have never beheld the glories of that Paradise which was lost, but they may behold, feast upon and enjoy the glories of Paradise restored. The restitution is a subject of prophecy; it will surely come at the revelation of Jesus Christ, and why not then desire his return, and with the Revelator exclaim, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!"

Yours affectionately, KATE.

The Vast Army.

BY REV. EDW. MUNRO, PERPETUAL CURATE OF HARROW-WEALD, ENG.

CHAPTER V.—THE STRIFE.

The armies were engaged in battle together; that is, part of each had met, and the struggle had begun. Many had fallen on either side. Those who fell in the ranks of the King's army were at once carried away, I saw, to the land beyond the hills. Erza had been close by Albyn's side, and bore the banner bravely. He had not feared shaft or bolt, which were showered around on every side.

"Meet me, Erza," said Albyn, "round the point of yonder hills, and bear the banner, and lead those few men with you; it will be a pass gained for the hosts of the King.

Delighted to have a post of trust, Erza sprang forward, and I saw the banner sail gallantly along as the boy bore it along the pass. The men followed Erza, and all gave way before him and the banner.

The pass grew narrower and darker, and had more than one turn in the direction which led towards the King's army. Erza was in doubt which to take. He knew the time was short, and he must meet Albyn at a given moment; a mistake in the path would be infinitely dangerous; and he stopped to consider. The roar of the battle rose to the sky. He tried to guide himself by that, for he knew Albyn was in the thick of it. At this moment some figures were seen coming up one of the paths: they were dressed in the dress of the King's army, and came towards Erza: they bowed before the banner as they came near. Eager to get on, and without sufficient thought to notice that the men had their backs turned to the King's advancing army, Erza asked which path led to the point he wished to gain.

"This way," said they, pointing down a left-hand path. "We will go before you, and guide you; for the path is difficult and dangerous."

Erza quickly consented. The men turned down the pass, and the boy, holding up the banner, followed. The path grew darker and more difficult. The din of the battle grew gradually more distant, and Erza felt, beyond doubt, he was not approaching the spot he had meant.

"You are leading me falsely," cried he, drawing himself up against a rock, as if he would go no further.

The men only continued pointing the way in which they had been bending, and assured him all was right. One sign Erza might have looked for, which would have decided him,—the glow of light. Wherever that was, the soldiers of the King might be, and no where else. Erza, in his eager desire to obey Albyn, had forgotten to look for it. He now looked round; not a ray of the glow shone on rock, or hill, or stone. The boy grew alarmed. His heart beat high. He had again, he thought, betrayed his trust, and the King would come, and he would not be there to meet Him; He would call him, and he would not be ready.

"I go no further," said Erza, drawing a javelin from his quiver, and preparing to make a stand.

The men who followed now grew [illegible]

"You have led us so far," said they, "and we must go on. Those men who guide us will not lead us wrong. We will not return."

"It is through my unwatchfulness that you are all led wrong," said Erza bitterly, and scarce restraining a tear.

"You may go back, if you will," said they; "we follow the guides you chose."

"Go back!" cried the men in front scoffingly. "It is impossible; there is no way back. Come after us, my brave fellows; we will lead you safe. Leave that brain-sick boy to his own wilful way. He will find it no easy work to find his way back, we'll warrant."

The manner of the men showed Erza he was betrayed. Without Albyn, the darkness thickening round him, no glow to be seen, and the noise of the distant battle sounding far off over the hills, poor Erza felt in despair.

"I have again lost my charge, though I meant it well. What shall I do?" He turned round to retrace his steps. "What shall I do if you men attack me? They never will have brought me to this without carrying out their work further."

While he thought thus, an arrow struck the rock above his head, and glanced at his feet. It flew from the dark part of the path down which the men had gone. The next instant a footstep came hurriedly up, and one of his own men returned.

"Fly, Erza! fly! they are traitors. The rest of your men have joined them, and they are bent on your life. There is no time to lose."

Erza began to retrace his lost way.

"Want of watching!" said he to himself; "want of watching! what trouble it has brought on me!"

As soon as he turned, the glow became visible behind the hill, and he took heart.

"This way, this way," cried the soldier, groping his way in the darkness over some high stones towards a pass in the rocks, which seemed to shine with the glow.

"Nay," said Erza, "we must go over the same way we came. No other way will lead us safely."

"But the path is dark and long. We shall never find our way; and hark! I hear talking in the distance."

But Erza knew he must retrace his own steps, however tedious and difficult. Want of watchfulness and thought led him into the trouble.

"This way, this way," shouted the men behind, who, finding they could persuade Erza to follow no further, were returning to attack the boy in the pass.

An arrow whizzed through the dark, and the soldier by Erza's side fell dead at his feet.

Erza made all speed to escape, but their steps were close behind him, and only the darkness above hid him from them.

"Where is Erza? where can he be?" cried Albyn, who was engaged in the very heat of the battle, and by determined courage was doing wonders in valor and wisdom. The King's army had been just joined, and the whole mass of the foe cut through. "Where is Erza? for the fight draws near its end, and we shall soon have to meet the King in person, and I would not Erza were away for worlds."

"Erza has deserted to the enemy," cried a voice from the crowd.

"It is false," said Albyn, laying his hand on his sword.

"I saw him," said the soldier, who stepped out dressed in the King's colors. "I saw him with a band of the enemy just now, going down a pass away from the direction we are taking."

Albyn looked distressed; but it was a soldier of the King who spoke, and he did not know how to disbelieve him. He took out his horn and wound it; three times it sounded, and three times it came back from the hills, but no answer came from Erza.

The night was fast coming on, and Albyn had drawn off to let his men repose, as the armies had separated from the strife; but Albyn did not sleep: his band filed up a defile of rocks, which, through the legions of the enemy opened a way to the army of the King. Under the rocks, and beneath their huge shadows, Albyn's men laid down, but each man with his sword drawn, and his shield thrown over his breast. Albyn alone was awake and watching. He paced along to and fro the outworks of his post. The light glowed all round, so as sometimes to obscure the light of the moon, which gradually seemed to lose its own light before the advancing glory on the hills. All around glanced the light of huge fires which the enemy had lit to put out the glow. A figure moved in the light, and was hid again in the shadow. Albyn watched it. Again he saw it come out and return; and each time it seemed to draw nearer to where he was standing. It seemed to be a man, who was crouching down to avoid being seen, and still came closer each leap to where Albyn was standing. The young warrior saw it, and placed himself on his guard. At length, with a single bound, the figure sprang on to the wall of rock along which Albyn was pacing his watch. Albyn did not move, but, grasping his sword in his hand, waited to see what the strange figure which now lay coiled up before him would do. Presently the man, having cautiously looked around, drew himself up to his full height before Albyn.

"Whence and who are you," said Albyn, "who appear thus stealthily? Stand, before you advance another —"

"Hush!" said the man, placing his finger on his lip; "I am one who am weary of serving the enemy of the King, and would join the host you command; and more, I have a secret I can give you worth mines of gold. I can open to you a [illegible] through yonder hills which will lead you quickly to the very centre of the army of the King, [illegible] the host of the King, and that is straight before us, and our means of passing, the shield and the sword. There is no other—there is but one way the King we serve has bid us approach Him; and by that way alone we will go."

"You are foolish," cried the other. "Rolfe, whom I know is good, and works for the King, has just drawn off with a division of his troops, and through the other path is fast reaching the army of the King, far faster than you along this rough way."

Albyn looked up, and saw that the part of the valley lately occupied by Rolfe and his men was left empty and deserted.

"How long has Rolfe left us?" cried Albyn, somewhat surprised.

"Only just now," said the other; "and he has made rapid progress already. He was partly dissatisfied with those who led the army, and felt he could manage better for himself; and so it seems he can, for by taking the other way he is advancing far more easily and rapidly."

"Poor Rolfe!" sighed Albyn, "he will be found wrong, and on the wrong side, at the last struggle."

"But of the shorter way," said the stranger; "will you accept it?"

"I gave you my answer," said Albyn sternly. "Away from this ledge of rocks, seducer!" said he, "or I must compel thee."

"At least," answered he, "I may join the ranks you command. By the cross upon my brow you can see that I belonged to the army of the King once, though by its scorching fire you can see I have deserted my trust. Woe betide me for it!"

"Pass through, then," said Albyn with hesitation, "and see thou act faithfully. You fight not in the front ranks. Convey this stranger," said Albyn, "to the back part of the camp," as a soldier, who had been roused by the stranger's voice, was drawing near his leader. The man bowed, and obeyed, and retired with the stranger.

Albyn looked after him with an anxious eye, but his thoughts soon returned to his post and the approach of the King.

Before the dawn of day Albyn gave up his post to one to hold a short time while he took rest in his tent. He laid down, and was soon asleep. He had dreams of the work he was called to do, and woke with a start. Something had touched him, and he thought, as he woke, a figure darted across the floor, but it was too dark to see plainly. He thought, too, something pricked him like the point of a sword, but his armor was too good and proof to let him feel any more than he did.

"It is strange!" said Albyn to himself, as he laid himself down again. "It is strange!" and again he was just sinking to sleep when a slight movement was heard in his tent, and before he could raise himself he was again struck in the bosom by a hand he could not see. But a second time the weapon glanced off from his armor, and Albyn sprang from his resting place unhurt. He made a sudden rush in the dim light at the figure, which he could see making his way from him. He struck at him with his sword, and so surely, that, just as the figure glid from his tent, he wounded him.

"No weapon which is formed against thee shall prosper," said a Voice.

Albyn sought in vain for the object of his pursuit. It escaped his hands; and the dimness of the morning light prevented his seeing clearly many yards before him. It was plain that he was clearly watched and followed for his death, and he bound his breastplate closer to him, and grasped his sword tighter in his hand. His thoughts were bent on Erza, and, full of anxiety about the boy, he returned to his post. No life of ease Albyn led. Sleep only just enough to fit him for his soldier's work, and food of the plainest kind to bear him through his day's toil.

The morning was breaking over the hills, and all the host of the Vast Army were up and stirring, to be ready for the struggle of the ensuing day. Albyn had been anxiously watching for some time the state of the glow in the east, which had far outshone in lustre the light of the rising sun.

The morning broke in full brilliance. There was a stir in the camp—a clash of arms—a flutter of banners—a confused noise of warriors preparing for the fray—a distant sound, like the noise of chariot wheels, or thunder, among the mountains.

I awoke from my dream.

THE FOUNDATIONS.

What can the righteous do
When hope is not alive?
If the foundations be destroyed,
What could of all survive?

Earth knoweth not of hope,
Yieldeth no rest to men;
Starting in doubt, in darkness grope,
Dust turns to dust again.

There is a better land,
Faith looks beyond the grave;
Sorrow and death shall break no band—
Our God redeems to save.

Trusting that blood-stained cross,
The crown with joy we hail;
Our anchor sure, we fear no loss,
Reaching within the veil.

A hope so rich in love,
Life's storm may well survive;
Her walls so safe, we shall at last
To Zion's heights arrive.

The wicked mock the just,
And triumph in their day;
But God will rise, like clouds of dust,
His breath sweep them away.

Christian! honor thy name,
Thy hope built on the rock—
There the foundations are the same
Which have sustained the flock.

Thine armor gird afresh,
With courage trust thy God;
Our Leader who hath gone before,
Soon cometh, saith the word.

For the Crisis.

Stand Up.

Be a man. Grow in mental and moral dignity. See the right, and do it. Hear the voice of God, and obey it. Live above the darts of satan. Live above the mean devices of the worldly. Bow to God, and to him only; yet be gentle, and kind, and meek as a lamb. Bend as the bough bends to the breeze, but stand upright as the stalwart oak before the gale. Strike your roots deep—not in humanity's sands, but in the deep rich soil of divine grace. Be rooted and grounded in love. Let the Holy Spirit reveal to you the depths of God. Twine your spreading roots around the mighty hidden rocks, and spread them out throughout all the fertile soil. Become like trees of righteousness, the planting of Jehovah, that he may be glorified—not mere scions or shrunks, but majestic trees, with unwithering leaves and unfailing fruits. Abide in Christ. Lose the strength of nature in the greater strength of grace. Lose the weakness and frailty of humanity in the mighty power of God and of his truth.

Stand up!—strong in the strength of him who is mightier than the mightiest. Lean only on the everlasting arm. Do duty, and trust the results with God. Obedience is yours, consequence is his. We ought to obey God rather than man. The fear of man bringeth a snare. Right is right, and we must do it. If we do, God holds us up; if not, he lets us fall. Our might is in obedience to him. Our refuge is beneath the shadow of his wings. Our buckler is his truth. Let us take his whole armor. Let us fight the good fight of faith.

God calls for men—live men, strong men, careful men, meek men, humble men—men of faith, and power, and prayer. His voice whispers far and near—"Whom shall we send?" The harvest is great, the world lieth in darkness, the people perish for the lack of knowledge, and God inquires, "Whom shall we send?" How many are there ready to exclaim, "Here am I, Lord send me?" How many are fit for sending? Where are God's men? Party men are plenty. Where are Christ's men? [illegible] stand up for God, stand up. Be strong in God. [illegible]

Are We a People?—No. 6.

What is a Church? The New Testament shall decide. Its voice will be authority with those who read this article. The congregation of believers in any given location, was the church in that city or town, when the Apostles preached the gospel and established churches. It presents not only the fact that such persons, (believers and worshipers,) exist, in a given place, but that they meet together for worship; hence in the beginning, churches depended upon preaching, because believing depended upon hearing preaching. All, therefore, who believed, were expected to assemble together, if possible. In proof, the apostolic injunction is, that christians should "not forsake the assembling of themselves together." Also his language—"When ye are come together in one place." They met mostly on the first day of the week. This is fully recognized—with abundant examples of their being found assembled for prayer, mutual conference, and relation of experience—with preaching, admonition, in word and doctrine—in which manner they worshiped the Lord Christ. From this clearly established principle, the place of assembling has come to be called a church.

The same fact recurring in another city, a congregation of believers, or assembly of such persons as before described, is constituted; and hence the establishment of Churches. For example, the churches at Jerusalem, Cenchrea, Antioch, Corinth, Rome—Churches of Galatia. All the believers in the different cities and throughout the country, were called the Church, as well as "all the churches," because they all believed in Christ—had "one faith, one Lord, one baptism,"—the church of the Living God because all worshipers, (not that each person met each, but all who could, met brethren,) the church of Christ because his congregation of people, gathered to him: "In the midst of the church will I sing praise unto Thee." Most beautifully and strikingly also, in regard to the "Church Triumphant"—"the innumerable company" and Church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven, when they "come unto Mount Zion." The ancient people of God were known by the name of Congregation. The ground of fellowship is first faith. After this, the position here stated is the ground of union, a covenant to walk together in the love and duties of the gospel—to be like Christ, and help each other to be like him—to have peace among ourselves, and "order in all the churches of the saints." From the general view of the congregation of believers, found in the Acts of the Apostles and Epistles, we deduce the following principles as absolute positions:

1. Purposes of instruction.
2. Prayer, with the mutual interest, in experience and the truth concerning Christ, implied in worship. It was a place of faith and the increase of faith—improvement.
3. Of sympathy and fellowship.
4. Of counsel and "watch-care."
5. For purposes of discipline, examination and trial.
6. For rejection or expulsion of offenders.
7. For repentance, acknowledgment and restoration of the unfaithful.

Whatever a church was, or was intended to be, in the ancient times, it should be now. At the same time, we claim that we may determine what a church was intended to be, by observing what it was in its first and purest mode of existence. Well, then, confining our inquiry to historic testimony, aside from the authority of great names, or history outside the pale of inspiration, we inquire—

Did they know the number of believers? Very nearly, we conclude, for it is plain that they were acquainted with each other. Did they take down the names? In some instances they certainly did! And this is [illegible]

that the members of a church should know who compose the church. But did they take all the names? We are not certain that they did. We should conclude, that they did, because they took some. "The number of the names of the disciples (they must have had them) was at one time about a hundred and twenty." They might not have counted close, or might not have had them all down, as the reason for the use of the term "about." It might have been of more consequence to have known who they had than how many they had. If it could be shown that some were not taken, still we question whether prudential measures should not require them all now. Did they write out any creed? No! nor did they need any, after they got the Gospel and Epistles. Before that the "Conference" or Council of Apostles and Elders sent out the "Decrees, for the brethren to keep," as we find by the history in the Acts of the Apostles.

"Oh, that was but a little matter," says one. I care not how little it was. It was a fact. It issued with the Apostles and representatives of the church. The church recognized the authority. Did they impose a discipline? No, only as the New Testament is a discipline. Is the "New Testament a sufficient rule of faith and practice?" If so, I see no possible harm in our saying so. It should not long be a question how we can most effectually say so. It is manifest that there was rule in the church. The people that were ruled must acknowledge the rulers, (that the Elders who ruled well should be accounted worthy of double honor,) and the rulers know the ruled.

What could be the objection to a knowledge of the person by name, and by having his name recorded, when the principle by which his relation is to be continued, is to exhibit itself first in an intimate acquaintance with him. They took action in receiving persons into "the number," and observed certain restrictions. They took action in regard to the ordination of ministers, the election of deacons, and, no doubt, all necessary officers of the church, to secure its temporal and spiritual well-being. They met for business, as well as religious purposes. At this point, notice three distinct objects, viz.:

1. The church, by meeting, secured regard for the Lord's day—the first day of the week, and day of his resurrection.

2. The exhibition and continuity of the mystical services of the Lord's Supper—the proof of love and union to him, the surety of his promise and antiquity of his church.

3. The emblematical rite of baptism. Persons belonging to the church were baptized, and hence supposed to be separated from the world. By these the church was distinguished from the world.

But you will perceive here is responsibility. It cannot be avoided. The action has a basis. The work continues; hence, then, the actors meet the responsibility continuously.

Again, it is asked if there can not be a church if the names are not given? Doubtless there may be for the time, if they are not written; but the question of its perpetuity and prosperity is another matter. But do you not think Jesus Christ knows them? Are they not written in heaven? Yes. Well then, is there any objection to the ministers knowing them?—to all knowing them?—and when this is especially necessary to order? What will be the result if there is no body? If there is a body, then there is a way by which it is organized or constituted. If the peculiar means by which it is to be organized are not specified—only intimated [illegible]

2. They will be known, as such to one another, and to the world, giving their names for this purpose, and to secure authority in their religious position, and for the transaction of business, as a church.

3. They will elect officers, that the government of the body may be administered by the gospel.

4. They will recognize the authority of ministers, as being first given by Christ and acknowledged by the church, (even in ordination,) and vested in the living church, (not in dead Councils,) by him, in giving the Holy Ghost with the word of truth.

They will perpetuate the mystical and emblematical rites, with all ordinances committed to them by the Great Head of the church, as identifying its position, and as a treasure that must not be trusted to unholy or even careless hands. He has written his name on us. Shall we refuse to write our name upon him?

To secure this, there must be a body by the subscribing of names to the principles and regulations of the order, by which the adhesion of all the members to all the principles and usages of the supposed fraternity is involved.

The gospel is the foundation, in principles and usage, of the church of Christ. The church is a brotherhood. Neither the foundation nor the exhibition will admit of a neutral position to those who are members, and who enjoy the benefits of the institution. To become fully connected with a brotherhood, involves a full share of responsibility, according to talent and position, and a full measure of blessing. Responsibility is the only safeguard against the power of subversion, in the hands of many, or few designing or even well-meaning but misinformed persons, upon the whole plan.

If irresponsible persons are allowed to take part in church proceedings, how soon will interests dear to the heart of him who has made himself responsible, and looked for the blessed results, be found prostrate and ruined! It is this want of responsibility to our brethren, so far as faith and meetings are concerned, and to the public, which has wrought such wretched and dire confusion among us. And he is irresponsible who, though he is with us to-day, is not obliged to be with us to-morrow, unless he shall withdraw his name, for his name gives him a right to act, while he conforms to the principles of the society or corporation, while at the same time the name, being upon the records, makes him responsible to the body, thus giving them control of him. There is power in the body which he, by his name and acts, helps to make, and then is compelled to feel.

In all bodies, chartered or covenanted, civil or ecclesiastical, individual privilege is surrendered for corporate advantages. To a great extent this is true of the simplest and purest church ever in existence. The argument of the Apostle, on this point, is overwhelming. The example of the early church is in point.

To be a church, and not be prepared to act as such, is only a splendid contradiction; and yet how can a company act, if any man may leave his position, or declare he has no position, at his own option? Let there be a body before we urge, "Let there be no schism in the body!"

My Opinion on 1 Cor. 15: 24-28.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me to offer my views on the above scripture. And first, I will quote from an old translation from the 22d verse. "For as by Adam all the human race was subjected to mortality, so by Christ Jesus shall all the pious dead be entitled to immortality.

23d. But every one in this restitution, in a regular gradation, is raised. Christ was the first that rose from death to immortality; the next will be the virtuous Christians, at his glorious advent. (If the thousand years can be ignored and thrown out, then the theory of men can be crowded in.

24th. Subsequent to this will be the final dissolution of the globe—which event will take place; but not till after he hath surrendered up his kingdom to God, even the Supreme Father; not till after he hath totally crushed and demolished every hostile dominion, every opposing civil power and secular sovereignty.

25th. For he must retain his kingdom until he hath brought all his adversaries prostrate at his feet. (Some believe all Christ's adversaries are put under his feet before he takes his kingdom, but my Bible teaches that he rules in the midst of his enemies.)

26th. The last foe he shall dethrone and annihilate is death. (Now allow the thousand years where God has placed it, then when is death destroyed?)

27th. For God hath subjected all things to his control; but when the Deity declares that he hath subjected all things under him, it is self evident that he himself must be excepted, who primarily invested him with this sovereign authority.

28th. But when all things shall have become the subjects of his universal dominion, then shall the Son himself be subjected to HIM who originally vested him with this universal authority—that the DEITY may be all in all."

I understand the Apostle Paul teaches the same as the prophets have taught. He comes to destroy all those who corrupt the earth. Mat. 13: 41. It is while the ten kingdoms are existing and in power, when the kingdom of God is set up. Dan. 2: 44; or when Jesus Christ receives his kingdom. Dan 7: 13, 14; Rev. 19: 11-19. Now I ask, if these scriptures teach, with any fair, common sense understanding, that the beast is destroyed and all of Christ's enemies are put under his feet while he remains at the right hand of the Father? Does not the beast gather his army together, to make war against Christ and his army? Rev. 19: 19. Again, to me it is a gross error that the delivering up of the kingdom is before the end of this age. Is not his, (Christ's) reign to continue one thousand years before the last enemy is destroyed? Rev. 20: 5-10. So it reads, and so I believe. Notwithstanding, it may sound strange to some. See also Psa. 72; 102: 12-17; Isa. 2: 2-5; 11: 4-16; 60: 61: 3-11; Jer. 23: 6-26; Ezek. 36: 21-38; Micah 4: 1-8, and many more, too numerous to bring forth now. If all Christ's foes are destroyed before he takes his kingdom, and the kingdom is the whole earth, how and when will the Jews (certain ones) see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom, and they cast out?

The gospel, or present dispensation, was introduced by our Lord himself, [illegible] petuated through the medium of his [illegible]tles, and thus carried along by his [illegible] ministers down to this point, and will be continued unto the end. And it is through means both human and divine, that the life of God is imparted to believers. God has devised a plan, and the modus operandi is clearly portrayed in his holy word. These means are most explicitly and summarily described by the apostle Paul, in the tenth chapter of Romans. In this highly interesting and instructive [illegible] we find that the apostle has [illegible] the great change which has [illegible] two dispensations, in respect to the [illegible] and acceptable righteousness before God, and severely reproves his [illegible] having "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." Being ignorant [illegible] of the willful blindness of their [illegible] hence endeavoring to establish their own righteousness, based upon the law [illegible] observes, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, that the man which doeth those things shall live by them. But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? (that is to bring Christ down from above:) or who shall descend into the deep? (that is to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the Scripture saith, Whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things! But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord, who hath believed our report?" So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

THE FOUNDATIONS.

What can the righteous do
When hope is not alive?
If the foundations be destroyed,
What could of all survive?

Earth knoweth not of hope,
Yieldeth no rest to men;
Starting in doubt, in darkness grope,
Dust turns to dust again.

There is a better land,
Faith looks beyond the grave;
Sorrow and death shall break no band—
Our God redeems to save.

Trusting that blood-stained cross,
The crown with joy we hail;
Our anchor sure, we fear no loss,
Reaching within the veil.

A hope so rich in love,
Life's storm may well survive;
Her walls so safe, we shall at last
To Zion's heights arrive.

The wicked mock the just,
And triumph in their day;
But God will rise, like clouds of dust,
His breath sweep them away.

Christian! honor thy name,
Thy hope built on the rock—
There the foundations are the same
Which have sustained the flock.

Thine armor gird afresh,
With courage trust thy God;
Our Leader who hath gone before,
Soon cometh, saith the word.

For the Crisis.

Stand Up.

Be a man. Grow in mental and moral dignity. See the right, and do it. Hear the voice of God, and obey it. Live above the darts of satan. Live above the mean devices of the worldly. Bow to God, and to him only; yet be gentle, and kind, and meek as a lamb. Bend as the bough bends to the breeze, but stand upright as the stalwart oak before the gale. Strike your roots deep—not in humanity's sands, but in the deep rich soil of divine grace. Be rooted and grounded in love. Let the Holy Spirit reveal to you the depths of God. Twine your spreading roots around the mighty hidden rocks, and spread them out throughout all the fertile soil. Become like trees of righteousness, the planting of Jehovah, that he may be glorified—not mere scions or shrunks, but majestic trees, with unwithering leaves and unfailing fruits. Abide in Christ. Lose the strength of nature in the greater strength of grace. Lose the weakness and frailty of humanity in the mighty power of God and of his truth.

Stand up!—strong in the strength of him who is mightier than the mightiest. Lean only on the everlasting arm. Do duty, and trust the results with God. Obedience is yours, consequence is his. We ought to obey God rather than man. The fear of man bringeth a snare. Right is right, and we must do it. If we do, God holds us up; if not, he lets us fall. Our might is in obedience to him. Our refuge is beneath the shadow of his wings. Our buckler is his truth. Let us take his whole armor. Let us fight the good fight of faith.

God calls for men—live men, strong men, careful men, meek men, humble men—men of faith, and power, and prayer. His voice whispers far and near—"Whom shall we send?" The harvest is great, the world lieth in darkness, the people perish for the lack of knowledge, and God inquires, "Whom shall we send?" How many are there ready to exclaim, "Here am I. Lord send me!" How many are fit for sending? Where are God's men? Party men are plenty. Where are Christ's servants? Ye who are for God, stand up. Be strong in God.

For the Crisis.

Are We a People?—No. 6.

What is a Church? The New Testament shall decide. Its voice will be authority with those who read this article. The congregation of believers in any given location, was the church in that city or town, when the Apostles preached the gospel and established churches. It presents not only the fact that such persons, (believers and worshipers,) exist, in a given place, but that they meet together for worship; hence in the beginning, churches depended upon preaching, because believing depended upon hearing preaching. All, therefore, who believed, were expected to assemble together, if possible. In proof, the apostolic injunction is, that christians should "not forsake the assembling of themselves together." Also his language—"When ye are come together in one place." They met mostly on the first day of the week. This is fully recognized—with abundant examples of their being found assembled for prayer, mutual conference, and relation of experience—with preaching, admonition, in word and doctrine—in which manner they worshiped the Lord Christ. From this clearly established principle, the place of assembling has come to be called a church.

The same fact recurring in another city, a congregation of believers, or assembly of such persons as before described, is constituted; and hence the establishment of Churches. For example, the churches at Jerusalem, Cenchrea, Antioch, Corinth, Rome—Churches of Galatia. All the believers in the different cities and throughout the country, were called the Church, as well as "all the churches," because they all believed in Christ—had "one faith, one Lord, one baptism,"—the church of the Living God because all worshipers, (not that each person met each, but all who could, met brethren,) the church of Christ because his congregation of people, gathered to him. "In the midst of the church will I sing praise unto Thee." Most beautifully and strikingly also, in regard to the "Church Triumphant"—"the innumerable company" and Church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven, when they "come unto Mount Zion." The ancient people of God were known by the name of Congregation. The ground of fellowship is first faith. After this, the position here stated is the ground of union, a covenant to walk together in the love and duties of the gospel—to be like Christ, and help each other to be like him—to have peace among ourselves, and "order in all the churches of the saints." From the general view of the congregation of believers, found in the Acts of the Apostles and Epistles, we deduce the following principles as absolute positions:

1. Purposes of instruction.
2. Prayer, with the mutual interest, in experience and the truth concerning Christ, implied in worship. It was a place of faith and the increase of faith—improvement.
3. Of sympathy and fellowship.
4. Of counsel and "watch-care."
5. For purposes of discipline, examination and trial.
6. For rejection or expulsion of offenders.
7. For repentance, acknowledgment and restoration of the unfaithful.

Whatever a church was, or was intended to be, in the ancient times, it should be now. At the same time, we claim that we may determine what a church was intended to be, by observing what it was in its first and purest mode of existence. Well, then, confining our inquiry to historic testimony, aside from the authority of great names, or history outside the pale of inspiration, we inquire—

Did they know the number of believers? Very nearly, we conclude, for it is plain that they were acquainted with each other. Did they take down the names? In some instances they certainly did! And this is an example unto any corresponding itself from the [illegible] of the [illegible] now as well as then. Observe, it is not only justified by the example of Apostolic times, but indicates that the members of a church should know who compose the church. But did they take all the names? We are not certain that they did. We should conclude that they did, because they took some. "The number of the names of the disciples (they must have had them) was at one time about a hundred and twenty." They might not have counted close, or might not have had them all down, as the reason for the use of the term "about." It might have been of more consequence to have known who they had than how many they had. If it could be shown that some were not taken, still we question whether prudential measures should not require them all now. Did they write out any creed? No! nor did they need any, after they got the Gospel and Epistles. Before that, the "Conference" or Council of Apostles and Elders sent out the "Decrees, for the brethren to keep," as we find by the history in the Acts of the Apostles.

"Oh, that was but a little matter," says one. I care not how little it was. It was a fact. It issued with the Apostles and representatives of the church. The church recognized the authority. Did they impose a discipline? No, only as the New Testament is a discipline. Is the "New Testament a sufficient rule of faith and practice?" If so, I see no possible harm in our saying so. It should not long be a question how we can most effectually say so. It is manifest that there was rule in the church. The people that were ruled must acknowledge the rulers, (that the Elders who ruled well should be accounted worthy of double honor,) and the rulers know the ruled.

What could be the objection to a knowledge of the person by name, and by having his name recorded, when the principle by which his relation is to be continued, is to exhibit itself first in an intimate acquaintance with him. They took action in receiving persons into "the number," and observed certain restrictions. They took action in regard to the ordination of ministers, the election of deacons, and, no doubt, all necessary officers of the church, to secure its temporal and spiritual well-being. They met for business, as well as religious purposes. At this point, notice three distinct objects, viz.:

3. The emblematical rite of baptism. Persons belonging to the church were baptized, and hence supposed to be separated from the world. By these the church was distinguished from the world.

But you will perceive here is responsibility. It cannot be avoided. The action has a basis. The work continues; hence, then, the actors meet the responsibility continuously.

Again, it is asked if there can not be a church if the names are not given? Doubtless there may be for the time, if they are not written; but the question of its perpetuity and prosperity is another matter. But do you not think Jesus Christ knows them? Are they not written in heaven? Yes. Well then, is there any objection to the ministers knowing them?—to all knowing them?—and when this is especially necessary to order? What will be the result if there is, no body? If there is a body, then there is a way by which it is organized or constituted. If the peculiar means by which it is to be organized are not specified—only intimated—and might be varied somewhat in different cases, we might be at liberty to consolidate by a simple process. Nay, I contend, it would be duty. Nothing can be more simple than the process we have suggested. It certainly was done in the ancient times, whether [illegible] or not, and so the [illegible] [illegible] necessities of the case demand it.

We will therefore [illegible] that a church, to be properly [illegible] [illegible]—

1. Composed of those believers in the [illegible]

2. They will be known as such to one another, and to the world, giving their names for this purpose, and to secure authority in their religious position, and for the transaction of business, as a church.

3. They will elect officers, that the government of the body may be administered by the gospel.

4. They will recognise the authority of ministers, as being first given by Christ and acknowledged by the church, (ever in ordination,) and vested in the living church, (not in dead Councils,) by him, in giving the Holy Ghost with the word of truth.

They will perpetuate the mystical and emblematical rites, with all ordinances committed to them by the Great Head of the church, as identifying its position, and as a treasure that must not be trusted to unholy or even careless hands. He has written his name on us. Shall we refuse to write our name upon him?

To secure this, there must be a body by the subscribing of names to the principles and regulations of the order, by which the adhesion of all the members to all the principles and usages of the supposed fraternity is involved.

A DISCOURSE BY WILLIAM [illegible]

"I am the bread of life."—John 6: 48.

The third and last division will claim our attention for a few moments.

3. The way and method through which this divine life is communicated unto the believer. God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to work by means, unless they be works of stupendous character, such as forming the starry worlds and solar systems of the mighty universe. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by his prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things." The law dispensation, we understand, was carried on and perpetuated through the medium of holy angels. It is styled, "the word spoken by angels."

The gospel, or present dispensation, was introduced by our Lord himself, and perpetuated through the medium of his apostles, and thus carried along by his faithful ministers down to this point, and will be continued unto the end. And it is through means both human and divine, that "the life of God is imparted to believers. God has devised a plan, and the modus operandi is clearly portrayed in his holy word. These means are most explicitly and summarily described by the apostle Paul, in the tenth chapter of Romans. In this highly interesting and instructive chapter, we find that the apostle has remarked upon the great change which has obtained in the two dispensations, in respect to the nature and acceptable righteousness before God, and severely reproves his countrymen for having "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." Being ignorant because of the willful blindness of their hearts, hence endeavoring to establish their own righteousness, based upon the law. He observes, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, that the man which doeth those things shall live by them. But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, who shall ascend into heaven? (that is to bring Christ down from above;) or who shall descend into the deep? (that is to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved, (or have life.) For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the Scripture saith, whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? As it is written, how beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things. But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord who hath believed our report? So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

Here we have the nature of the new covenant of righteousness as distinguished from the old, and the manner of its possession clearly noted in verses 4 to 8 inclusive; the conditions of the divine life in verses 9, 10; and in verses 14 to 17 inclusive, we have the process through which the inestimable blessings of the gospel are imparted to man, and how the "life of God" is communicated by the faithful ministration of the word, by men whom he hath raised up in every age, and endowed with the Holy Ghost [illegible] [illegible]

THE FOUNDATIONS.

What can the righteous do
When hope is not alive?
If the foundations be destroyed,
What could of all survive?

Earth knoweth not of hope,
Yieldeth no rest to men;
Starting in doubt, in darkness grope,
Dust turns to dust again.

There is a better land,
Faith looks beyond the grave;
Sorrow and death shall break no band—
Our God redeems to save.

Trusting that blood-stained cross,
The crown with joy we hail;
Our anchor sure, we fear no loss,
Reaching within the veil.

A hope so rich in love,
Life's storm may well survive;
Her walls so safe, we shall at last
To Zion's heights arrive.

The wicked mock the just,
And triumph in their day;
But God will rise, like clouds of dust,
His breath sweep them away.

Christian! honor thy name,
Thy hope built on the rock—
There the foundations are the same
Which have sustained the flock.

Thine armor gird afresh,
With courage trust thy God;
Our Leader who hath gone before,
Soon cometh, saith the word.

Stand Up.

Be a man. Grow in mental and moral dignity. See the right, and do it. Hear the voice of God, and obey it. Live above the darts of satan. Live above the mean devices of the worldly. Bow to God, and to him only; yet be gentle, and kind, and meek as a lamb. Bend as the bough bends to the breeze, but stand upright as the stalwart oak before the gale. Strike your roots deep—not in humanity's sands, but in the deep rich soil of divine grace. Be rooted and grounded in love. Let the Holy Spirit reveal to you the depths of God. Twine your spreading roots around the mighty hidden rocks, and spread them out throughout all the fertile soil. Become like trees of righteousness, the planting of Jehovah, that he may be glorified—not mere scions or shrunks, but majestic trees, with unwithering leaves and unfailing fruits. Abide in Christ. Lose the strength of nature in the greater strength of grace. Lose the weakness and frailty of humanity in the mighty power of God and of his truth.

Stand up!—strong in the strength of him who is mightier than the mightiest. Lean only on the everlasting arm. Do duty, and trust the results with God. Obedience is yours, consequence is his. We ought to obey God rather than man. The fear of man bringeth a snare. Right is right, and we must do it. If we do, God holds us up; if not, he lets us fall. Our might is in obedience to him. Our refuge is beneath the shadow of his wings. Our buckler is his truth. Let us take his whole armor. Let us fight the good fight of faith.

God calls for men—live men, strong men, careful men, meek men, humble men—men of faith, and power, and prayer. His voice whispers far and near—"Whom shall we send?" The harvest is great, the world lieth in darkness, the people perish for the lack of knowledge, and God inquires, "Whom shall we send?" How many are there ready to exclaim, "Here am I. Lord send me!" How many are fit for sending? Where are God's men? Party men are plenty. Where are Christ's servants? Ye who are for God, stand up. Be strong in God.

Are We a People?—No. 6.

What is a Church? The New Testament shall decide. Its voice will be authority with those who read this article. The congregation of believers in any given location, was the church in that city or town, when the Apostles preached the gospel and established churches. It presents not only the fact that such persons, (believers and worshipers,) exist, in a given place, but that they meet together for worship; hence in the beginning, churches depended upon preaching, because believing depended upon hearing preaching. All, therefore, who believed, were expected to assemble together, if possible. In proof, the apostolic injunction is, that christians should "not forsake the assembling of themselves together." Also his language—"When ye are come together in one place." They met mostly on the first day of the week. This is fully recognized—with abundant examples of their being found assembled for prayer, mutual conference, and relation of experience—with preaching, admonition, in word and doctrine—in which manner they worshiped the Lord Christ. From this clearly established principle, the place of assembling has come to be called a church.

The same fact recurring in another city, a congregation of believers, or assembly of such persons as before described, is constituted; and hence the establishment of Churches. For example, the churches at Jerusalem, Cenchrea, Antioch, Corinth, Rome—Churches of Galatia. All the believers in the different cities and throughout the country, were called the Church, as well as "all the churches," because they all believed in Christ—had "one faith, one Lord, one baptism,"—the church of the Living God because all worshipers, (not that each person met each, but all who could, met brethren,) the church of Christ because his congregation of people, gathered to him. "In the midst of the church will I sing praise unto Thee." Most beautifully and strikingly also, in regard to the "Church Triumphant"—"the innumerable company" and Church of the first born, whose names are written in heaven, when they "come unto Mount Zion." The ancient people of God were known by the name of Congregation. The ground of fellowship is first faith. After this, the position here stated is the ground of union, a covenant to walk together in the love and duties of the gospel—to be like Christ, and help each other to be like him—to have peace among themselves, and "order in all the churches of the saints." From the general view of the congregation of believers, found in the Acts of the Apostles and Epistles, we deduce the following principles as absolute positions:

1. Purposes of instruction.
2. Prayer, with the mutual interest, in experience and the truth concerning Christ, implied in worship. It was a place of faith and the increase of faith—improvement.
3. Of sympathy and fellowship.
4. Of counsel and "watch-care."
5. For purposes of discipline, examination and trial.
6. For rejection or expulsion of offenders.
7. For repentance, acknowledgment and restoration of the unfaithful.

Whatever a church was, or was intended to be, in the ancient times, it should be now. At the same time, we claim that we may determine what a church was intended to be, by observing what it was in its first and purest mode of existence. Well, then, confining our inquiry to historic testimony, aside from the authority of great names, or history outside the pale of inspiration, we inquire—

Did they know the number of believers? Very nearly, we conclude, for it is plain that they were acquainted with each other. Did they take down the names? In some instances they certainly did! [illegible]

that the members of a church should know who compose the church. But did they take all the names? We are not certain that they did. We should conclude that they did, because they took some. "The number of the names of the disciples (they must have had them) was at one time about a hundred and twenty." They might not have counted close, or might not have had them all down, as the reason for the use of the term "about." It might have been of more consequence to have known who they had than how many they had. If it could be shown that some were not taken, still we question whether prudential measures should not require them all now. Did they write out any creed? No! nor did they need any, after they got the Gospel and Epistles. Before that, the "Conference" or Council of Apostles and Elders sent out the "Decrees, for the brethren to keep," as we find by the history in the Acts of the Apostles.

"Oh, that was but a little matter," says one. I care not how little it was. It was a fact. It issued with the Apostles and representatives of the church. The church recognized the authority. Did they impose a discipline? No, only as the New Testament is a discipline. Is the "New Testament a sufficient rule of faith and practice?" If so, I see no possible harm in our saying so. It should not long be a question how we can most effectually say so. It is manifest that there was rule in the church. The people that were ruled must acknowledge the rulers, (that the Elders who ruled well should be accounted worthy of double honor,) and the rulers know the ruled.

What could be the objection to a knowledge of the person by name, and by having his name recorded, when the principle by which his relation is to be continued, is to exhibit itself first in an intimate acquaintance with him. They took action in receiving persons into "the number," and observed certain restrictions. They took action in regard to the ordination of ministers, the election of deacons, and, no doubt, all necessary officers of the church, to secure its temporal and spiritual well-being. They met for business, as well as religious purposes. At this point, notice three distinct objects, viz.:

1. The church, by meeting, secured regard for the Lord's day—the first day of the week, and day of his resurrection.

2. The exhibition and continuity of the mystical services of the Lord's Supper—the proof of love and union to him, the surety of his promise and antiquity of his church.

3. The emblematical rite of baptism. Persons belonging to the church were baptized, and hence supposed to be separated from the world. By these the church was distinguished from the world.

But you will perceive here is responsibility. It cannot be avoided. The action has a basis. The work continues; hence, then, the actors meet the responsibility continuously.

Again, it is asked if there can not be a church if the names are not given? Doubtless there may be for the time, if they are not written; but the question of its perpetuity and prosperity is another matter. But do you not think Jesus Christ knows them? Are they not written in heaven? Yes. Well then, is there any objection to the ministers knowing them?—to all knowing them?—and when this is especially necessary to order? What will be the result if there is no body? If there is a body, then there is a way by which it is organized or constituted. If the peculiar means by which it is to be organized are not specified—only intimated—and might be varied somewhat in different cases, we might be at liberty to consolidate by a simple process. Nay, I contend, it would be duty. Nothing can be more simple than the process we have suggested. It certainly was done in the ancient times, whether [illegible] the necessities of the case demand it.

We will [illegible]

2. They will be known as such to one another, and to the world, giving their names for this purpose, and to secure authority in their religious position, and for the transaction of business, as a church.

3. They will elect officers, that the government of the body may be administered by the gospel.

4. They will recognize the authority of ministers, as being first given by Christ and acknowledged by the church, (ever in ordination,) and vested in the living church, (not in dead Councils,) by him, in giving the Holy Ghost with the word of truth.

They will perpetuate the mystical and emblematical rites, with all ordinances committed to them by the Great Head of the church, as identifying its position, and as a treasure that must not be trusted to unholy or even careless hands. He has written his name on us. Shall we refuse to write our name upon him?

To secure this, there must be a body by the subscribing of names to the principles and regulations of the order, by which the adhesion of all the members to all the principles and usages of the supposed fraternity is involved.

The gospel is the foundation, in principles and usage, of the church of Christ. The church is a brotherhood. Neither the foundation nor the exhibition will admit of a neutral position to those who are members, and who enjoy the benefits of the institution. To become fully connected with a brotherhood, involves a full share of responsibility, according to talent and position, and a full measure of blessing. Responsibility is the only safeguard against the power of subversion, in the hands of many, or few designing or even well-meaning but misinformed persons, upon the whole plan.

If irresponsible persons are allowed to take part in church proceedings, how soon will interests dear to the heart of him who has made himself responsible, and looked for the blessed results, be found prostrate and ruined! It is this want of responsibility to our brethren, so far as faith and meetings are concerned, and to the public, which has wrought such wretched and dire confusion among us. And he is irresponsible who, though he is with us to-day, is not obliged to be with us to-morrow, unless he shall withdraw his name, for his name gives him a right to act, while he conforms to the principles of the society or corporation, while at the same time the name, being upon the records, makes him responsible to the body, thus giving them control of him. There is power in the body which he, by his name and acts, helps to make, and then is compelled to feel.

In all bodies, chartered or covenanted, civil or ecclesiastical, individual privilege is surrendered for corporate advantages. To a great extent this is true of the simplest and purest church ever in existence. The argument of the Apostle, on this point, is overwhelming. The example of the early church is in point.

To be a church, and not be prepared to act as such, is only a splendid contradiction; and yet how can a company act, if any man may leave his position, or declare he has no position, at his own option? Let there be a body before we urge, "Let there be no schism in the body!"

DEATH AND LIFE.—As he cannot rise again the resurrection of the body, that doth not first die the death of the body, no more can he be born the birth of the soul, that doth not first die the death of sin. It is necessary that he which will be born twice should die once while he lives, and he that will once rise the resurrection of life should die twice. That I may live ever, I will die daily.—Hopkins.

WAGES OF SIN.—The wages that sin bargains for with the sinner are, life, pleasure, and profit; but the wages it pays him [illegible] He that would understand the falsehood and deceit of sin must compare its promises and its payments together.—Dr. South.

My Opinion on 1 Cor. 14: 24-28.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to offer my views on the above scripture. And first, I will quote from an old translation from the 22d verse. "For as by Adam all the human race was subjected to mortality, so by Christ Jesus shall all the pious dead be entitled to immortality.

23d. But every one in this restitution, in a regular gradation, is raised. Christ was the first that rose from death to immortality; the next will be the virtuous Christians, at his glorious advent. (If the thousand years can be ignored and thrown out, then the theory of men can be crowded in.

24th. Subsequent to this will be the final dissolution of the globe—which event will take place; but not till after he hath surrendered up his kingdom to God, even the Supreme Father; not till after he hath totally crushed and demolished every hostile dominion, every opposing civil power and secular sovereignty.

25th. For he must retain his kingdom until he hath brought all his adversaries prostrate at his feet. (Some believe all Christ's adversaries are put under his feet before he takes his kingdom, but my Bible teaches that he rules in the midst of his enemies.)

26th. The last foe he shall dethrone and annihilate is death. (Now allow the thousand years where God has placed it, then when is death destroyed?)

27th. For God hath subjected all things to his control; but when the Deity declares that he hath subjected all things under him, it is self evident that he himself must be excepted, who primarily invested him with this sovereign authority.

28th. But when all things shall have become the subjects of his universal dominion, then shall the Son himself be subjected to HIM who originally vested him with this universal authority—that the DEITY may be all in all."

I understand the Apostle Paul teaches the same as the prophets have taught. He comes to destroy all those who corrupt the earth. Mat. 13: 41. It is while the ten kingdoms are existing and in power, when the kingdom of God is set up. Dan. 2: 44; or when Jesus Christ receives his kingdom. Dan 7: 13, 14; Rev. 19: 11-19. Now I ask, if these scriptures teach, with any fair, common sense understanding, that the beast is destroyed and all of Christ's enemies are put under his feet while he remains at the right hand of the Father? Does not the beast gather his army together, to make war against Christ and his army? Rev. 19: 19. Again, to me it is a gross error that the delivering up of the kingdom is before the end of this age. Is not his, (Christ's) reign to continue one thousand years before the last enemy is destroyed? Rev. 20: 5-10. So it reads, and so I believe. Notwithstanding, it may sound strange to some. See also Psa. 72; 102: 12-17; Isa. 2: 2-5; 11: 4-16; 60: 61: 3-11; Jer. 23: 6-26; Ezek. 36: 21-38; Micah 4: 1-8, and many more, too numerous to bring forth now. If all Christ's foes are destroyed before he takes his kingdom, and the kingdom is the whole earth, how and when will the Jews (certain ones) see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom, and they cast out?

G. DILLABAUGH.

THE CROSS.—The cross is the concord of Scriptures, and, as it were, the boundary and border-land of old and new things. The cross confederates heaven and earth; the cross rejoins men and angels in the unanimity of their ancient concord. The cross is the death of vice, and the fountain and life of all virtue. The cross is the courage of those that are fighting bravely; the recovery of those that are fallen; the crown of those that are victorious. The cross subjects us to a momentary death, and recompenses us with eternal life.—Peter Damiani.

The Bread of Life.—No. [illegible]

A DISCOURSE, BY WILLIAM [illegible]

"I am the bread of life."—John 6: 48.

The third and last division will claim our attention for a few moments.

3. The way and method through which this divine life is communicated unto the believer. God in his infinite wisdom has seen fit to work by means, unless they be works of stupendous character, such as forming the starry worlds and solar systems of the mighty universe. "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by his prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things." The law dispensation, we understand, was carried on and perpetuated through the medium of holy angels. It is styled, "the word spoken by angels."

The gospel, or present dispensation, was introduced by our Lord himself, and perpetuated through the medium of his apostles, and thus carried along by his faithful ministers down to this point, and will be continued unto the end. And it is through means both human and divine, that the life of God is imparted to believers. God has devised a plan, and the modus operandi is clearly portrayed in his holy word. These means are most explicitly and summarily described by the apostle Paul, in the tenth chapter of Romans. In this highly interesting and instructive chapter, we find that the apostle has touched upon the great change which has obtained in the two dispensations, in respect to the nature and acceptable righteousness before God, and severely reproves his [illegible] having "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." Being ignorant because of the willful blindness of their hearts, hence endeavoring to establish their own righteousness, based upon the law. He observes, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. For Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the law, that the man which doeth those things shall live by them. But the righteousness which is of faith speaketh on this wise, Say not in thine heart, who shall ascend into heaven? (that is to bring Christ down from above;) or who shall descend into the deep? (that is to bring up Christ again from the dead.) But what saith it? The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart; that is, the word of faith which we preach; that if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved, (or have life.) For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. For the Scripture saith, whosoever believeth on him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek: for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? As it is written, how beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things. But they have not all obeyed the gospel. For Esaias saith, Lord who hath believed our report? So then, faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

Here we have the nature of the new covenant of righteousness as distinguished from the old, and the manner of its possession clearly noted in verses 4 to 8 inclusive; the conditions of the divine life in verses 9, 10; and in verses 14 to 17 inclusive, we have the process through which the inestimable blessings of the gospel are imparted to man [illegible]

except they believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. (John 8: 36.) And from the general tenor of scripture, baptism is evidently included in the sacred category of conditions; and if we understand aright, it is through obeying this divine injunction that we get into, or as the apostle expresses it, "put on the Lord Jesus Christ." It seems barely possible for men who have the light touching the matter, (John 3 : 19; 15 : 22,) to reject the doctrine of baptism, and yet be saved.

But we leave this point. Jesus has declared that he is not only the bread of life, but he is the way, and has invited us to come and learn of him. Let us diligently seek and learn more fully from him and his apostles. And now, in concluding our remarks upon this sublime subject, we learn from the inspired record,— 1st That the divine life is conferred upon believers only; i. e., such as strictly comply with the divine plan or conditions, as we find them clearly presented in the New Testament scriptures.

It is by the enlightening, regenerating, and sanctifying influence and operation of God's Holy Spirit, through the instrumentality of his blessed word.

Lastly, if man strictly adheres to the conditions laid down, and follows out the principles embodied in the gospel, he becomes a partaker of the "divine nature." He is "sealed unto the day of redemption" with the "Holy Spirit of promise," and now enjoys an "earnest" of that life which is as unbounded in its duration as the vast and impenetrable universe of God, (Dan 12: 3,) which he will be permitted to enjoy to the unutterable happiness of his endless existence, in the heart-enrapturing inspiration of angelic bliss, through the countless cycles of a blessed eternity.

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun."

Come, then, ye who are yet strangers to this divine life, ye who have not yet been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come;" come, ye, who are far off from God by disobedience and wicked works, and "taste and see that the Lord is good," and know from happy experience that, "Blessed (indeed) is the man that trusteth in him." "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend your money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto me, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." Come, then, hasten to Christ the living bread, that cometh down from heaven, and eat and live. Come, before access to him is forever cut off.

"Ho every one that thirsts draw nigh;
'Tis God invites the fallen race;
Mercy and free salvation buy,
Buy wine and milk and gospel grace."

"The happy gates of gospel grace, Stand open night and day."

But soon they will be closed; soon the harvest will be past and the summer ended. Soon thy probation will be over, and the judgment begun. The last sands of time are fast running out. The great day is coming. The pealing thunders of the trumpet will soon awake the world from its false security and slumber. Awful! terrific! yet happy day, to all who "love his appearing." O! hasten, then, so that when Jesus, "who is our life," shall descend from heaven, you may "appear with him in glory." "The spirit and the bride say, come. And let him that heareth say, come. And let him that is athirst, come; and whosoever will, let him take the waters of life freely."

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen."

From Sr. Jane D. Robberts.

Beloved Brethren and Sisters:—Having a strong desire to see and talk with you, I know of no other way but to speak through our paper. I have thought much of you in this time of peril, when the enemy is apparently fleeing to his last resources to overcome the children of God. I have thought of the various ways in which he operates upon the minds of those he is exceeding angry with. Sometimes he appears accusing us wrongfully, or rather telling us we are so vile the Lord will not accept us; but how easily he is detected by one of experience. When we are accused by the Spirit of God, it tells us what we are guilty of, that we may turn from our guilty way. Again, some are overcome in their conversation, speaking hastily, impatiently, and also carelessly. O how very many of us could do more good in the great work were we perfectly free from this!

O could my prayer indeed be heard,
Might I the past live o'er;
I'd guard against a careless word,
E'en though I spoke no more!

Then again, when we are striving to obey God, in being non-conformed to the world, the enemy suggests, I would conform more, for your influence will be better. O fatal delusion to many! It is true the world may notice you more; but the question should be, what is my christian influence? Do I show to the world that I have that pure religion that enables me to keep myself as unspotted? Do I show that there is power enough in it to face alone (if need be) the frowns of a multitude, supported by the word of God? Do I prove more fully that I am a pilgrim and stranger here, freed from the vanities of the people? or do I show that it is a cold, formal, powerless thing?

My brother and sister, be earnest in serving God. It is all important that we are fully consecrated, wholly given to the Lord. But how poor an offering! How great the reward! Let the toil-worn and weary ones be strong, trusting in the Lord. The toilsome night will soon end. Injuries will soon cease to be inflicted. Friends cease to wound the feeling of friends.

But what can I say to a poor sinner—judgment bound? When all faces gather blackness what will be your plea? Have you an excuse? Will it stand before the bar and clear you? Let the good pray for one trying to be good.

Yours affectionately,
Jane D. Roberts.

"Right Hand."

OPINION, VERSUS TRUTH.

The opinion has been expressed some years past, that the first verse of Ps. 110 is to be read peculiarly, as if it stood alone! Or, as if it flatly contradicted all other Scripture, and even the 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th verses of the same Psalm. Please read it. "Jehovah (the Lord) said to Adonai (my Lord) sit thou on my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool. The Lord (Jehovah) shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion; RULE THOU (Adonai) in the midst of thine enemies.... The Lord (Adonai) at thy right hand, shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. He (Adonai) shall judge (rule, verse 2d, and 1 Cor. 15: 24–27,) among the heathen, (the nations, as in Dan. 7: 14; Rom. 15: 12, &c.) He shall fill the places with the dead bodies." What then is any one's opinion worth on verse 1st that is formed without even reading it, or recognizing the associated sense of the whole Psalm? How can an opinion be at all intelligent on Ps. 110, that ignores Ps. 2d; Ps. 8; Ps. 45; Ps. 72 and the whole tenor of Messianic Prophecy in both Testaments? Nothing can be farther from truth and grace.

What then is the import of "right hand,' Ps. 110: 1? Let "the word of the Lord" reply. Jesus "made himself of no reputation, ... became obedient unto death, ... wherefore God also hath HIGHLY EXALTED HIM, and given him a name which is above every name."

How hath God exalted him so highly? The answer is plain. "Being by the right hand of God exalted, ... him hath God exalted with his right hand, ... being made so much better than the angels as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they." Acts 2: 33; 5: 31; Phil. 2: 9; Heb. 1: 5. Is not this exaltation official rather than local? [illegible] entirely the official work appropriate to that exaltation. "The Father judgeth no man; but hath committed all judgment unto the Son; that all should know the Son even as they know the Father." John 5: 22–23. "He (God the Father) hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness. (How?) BY THAT MAN whom He hath ordained," (Acts 17: 31,) "to be Judge of quick and dead. To Him give all the prophets witness." Acts 10: 42–43. The opinion based on Ps. 110: 1, and other *mis*applied texts which so denies (silently or evasively) the whole tenor of holy Scripture on that subject, is not only *im*mature, but altogether out of the way of truth.

WHEN shall Jesus our Lord judge and rule and REIGN? The answer is from "the Holy One."—"AT HIS APPEARING and Kingdom." 2 Tim. 4: 1; Isa. 32: 1; Jer. 33; Dan. 7. Then (and not till then) "He puts down all rule, and all authority and power." Isa. 59: 20 to 60. "The Lamb (not God as God) shall overcome them (the kings) for He is Lord of lords and King of kings." Rev. 17: 14; Rev. 19: 11–21.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JULY 21, 1858.

Spiritualism.

This great delusion is still making rapid strides, and producing infidels by the thousand, hundred thousand and million. Its votaries are in all lands and among all nations, and wherever it takes root, there the Bible, Christ and God are robbed of their authority, and the christian religion becomes a nullity.

We are surprised at the indifference of many christians in relation to this subject. Our prayer is, they may not sleep till their friends are all caught in this snare of the devil, and blinded forever by his artful wiles. Spiritualism may now look "like a lamb," but it speaks "as a dragon." And we apprehend that the church of Christ will soon be satisfied that this is her great antagonist. The following are some of the sayings of professed human spirits; but truly, "the spirits of devils."

The spirit of Addison Philips says:—

"Ancient history, profane history, will give you more ideas of Christ's life than you have anywhere else.... Form your ideas from history, not from the Bible, and then I'll defy any sane man to believe him any thing more than a medium.... He was said to have quarreled with his brethren, and was possessed of an unruly temperament. He disobeyed his parents, and seemed to be subject to no other power."

The Scriptures teach us directly the opposite. We read of Jesus in Luke 2: 51, "And he went down with them, (his parents) and came to Nazareth, and was subject unto them." We hardly thought the demons would attack the character of Christ, but we are now prepared for sayings still worse.

Another spirit, calling himself William Thompson, says, in speaking of his communication in relation to a certain doctor:—

"If the old cuss can see through his leather glasses, he will see it... I want you to understand I paddle my own canoe....—Look here, there's an almighty good woman there... I had a devil of an old cuss to take care of me."

The spirit of Elias Smith, an early preacher in the christian denomination, is made to say:—

"If the religion of Jesus Christ was given by God to satisfy man, why is it I am not satisfied?.. All mankind must in time come to purity... All inspiration has a double meaning."

If Satan can persuade people to believe that there is a double meaning to what the Lord moved holy men to write, he is sure to give one himself, and that is the spiritual; which is equivalent to saying, the Lord said one thing, but meant quite another. It makes the Lord a deceiver and the devil steps in to make the correction. Whenever the devil and his followers pretend to believe the Scriptures, they always ignore the literal and introduce a spiritual interpretation. If men would not listen to the teachings of the evil one, but believe the Lord means what he says, and says what he means, they would at once renounce the doctrine of purgatory, prayers to saints, eternal misery, Swedenborgianism, Spiritualism, and learn with delight from the plain and familiar teachings of Jesus of Nazareth. About every error that has crept into the church, has been received on the ground that the Scriptures has a "double meaning." [illegible]

The following purports to come from the spirit of John Gates:—

"I'm dead, and whoever disputes it don't know much; and I am alive, too, and whoever disputes that don't know much... Is this earth, or am I talking to somebody in the moon? How can you go by steam unless you have a steamboat? I heard of them, but nobody knew they could go. I believed it, though. Do you know old Joe Warren? He was a farmer, and could fight like the d——l. I can't understand where I have been since I died. Do you know old Breed? He didn't do any thing; had money enough. He'll know me. I worked for him many a time—he owned the big hill... Well, it is a mighty funny way of doing. How the d——l happens it that I am here in a woman's form? Why, you are a wizard. Now, boy, I ain't drunk if I did used to do it, and don't you try to make fun of me this way. My old grandmother one time got bewitched and she never could get the butter to come. What did she do one day but heat a stone red hot and threw it into the churn, but she fell into the fire herself. My God, you have bewitched me; how old do you call this body?"

Mary Gardner, another spirit, says, "I am very unhappy—very unhappy."

A spirit claiming to be Patrick Murphy, says:—

"My hands would shake, and I couldn't work. I thought it was because I had a spat with the Priest, and I thought the devil had me. He said I owed him money, and I said I didn't, and I wa'n't to be bate by him. After that I took to shaking, and died in consequence after a while. When I died, my friends buried me without giving me a wake, and I don't like it at all... Oh, I'm in purgatory. I know I am, as well as that you are sitting there and scratching what I say."

We think that he, who reads the varied and contradictory communications received from different spirits, must be satisfied as well as Mr. Joel Tiffany, that "they are lying spirits." Mr. Tiffany is a public lecturer on Spiritualism, and publishes Tiffany's Monthly. He has had ample means to test the truthfulness of these lying spirits, as the Bible represents them to be, and we are pleased with his candor in the matter, when he frankly confesses, what every experienced Spiritualist must know, that if the communications come from our friends, their word cannot be depended upon half so well as when they associated with us in the world, before their death. But notwithstanding these spirits are all deceivers, the mass of the world seem to be embracing the delusion. The people have turned from the truth of the Bible to the fables of these last days, and are willing dupes of the devil. Most people will believe error on one half the evidence they would demand to sustain the truth. How true the remark of our Savior, when he said, "Men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil."

A SPIRITUAL "BOURSE."—According to the New York Post, Mr. Hume, the celebrated medium, who is about to wed a rich Muscovite lady, intends to establish a spiritual "exchange" at Paris:

"After the wedding, Hume proposes to return to Paris and found a grand establishment of supernatural communication—a sort of spiritual bourse. An electric or fluid school will be connected with the concern, where wealthy believers can be initiated into the grand mystery, on condition of a pecuniary sacrifice proportioned to their means. The school will be divided into three classes. The first will be a sort of gymnasium, where the pupils will be instructed in the art of bringing the fluid to their aid in physical and intellectual labor. The theory is that every person possesses a fluid which is the connection between matter and mind, but that many are ignorant of its use and existence. In the second class the pupils will learn to direct the fluid at all times by the will. The third class is called the class of results, which will put the living in communication with the dead.

While Mr. Hume is instructing the males in the art and mystery of fluids, Madame Hume will manage a female department of the same establishment. It is intimated that a company of wealthy Russians and Parisians has been formed to realise this scheme, and that negotiations are now going on for a magnificent hotel and spacious grounds."

Truly, "this is an age of progress," and people may well inquire, "whither are we tending?" For the student of prophecy, all is plain. We are passing through the last days of earth's sin and sorrow. The morning of glory will soon break upon the weary pilgrim, "that mortality might be swallowed up of life." Those who expect to be saved should consecrate all to the Lord. Be "willing and obedient." "Blessed [illegible] the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

THE SABBATH.—It was a saying of Sir Robert Peel: "I never knew a man to escape failures in either mind or body, who worked seven days in a week."

"Forbidding to Marry."

We apprehend that the time is at hand, when the christian will fully understand 1 Tim. 4: 1–3, from which we have taken our heading. Within a few months several important developments have been made, indicative of the deep, strong, undertow now underlying our social, religious and political institutions. We learn that an institution is opened in New York city, called the "Unitary Household," similar to the one at Berlin Heights, Ohio.

The following, from the journals of the day, will give the reader some idea of the community at Berlin Heights, and the "new social order," about which Spiritualists are talking so earnestly.

"FREE LOVE AT BERLIN HEIGHTS.—Some one has sent us a number of the Age of Freedom, published by the Free Love community at Berlin, Ohio. It has an article denying the loose habits of living ascribed to the community, while in another column it denounces marriage as 'an odious monopoly of the opposite sex,' and hopes to see the institution wholly abolished, and men and women brought together according to the "passional attractions" of the moment. This means nothing, and can mean nothing, practically, but indiscriminate and debasing lust."

"The Detroit Free Press gives an account of a young married lady of that city, who through the influence of a female relative, acting under the inspiration of the 'harmonial philosophy,' was induced to abandon her husband and go with her to the free love community at Berlin Heights, Ohio. Her husband did not ascertain for several weeks whither she had fled. When he learned where she had gone he was greatly distressed, but went at once for her, and found her perfectly willing to go home, She had seen quite enough of free love.

'When there, she found the marvelous 'love cure' but another name for all that is degrading and loathsome to a virtuous and high-minded woman. Low-bred familiarities with vulgar, fanatical men; companionship with women who deemed themselves elevated above humanity in becoming the victims of their own and their companions' lusts, and a close familiarity with a brutish, criminal enjoyment, which was the highest sphere aimed at in this delectable community—were what she was obliged to submit to. This was more than womanhood could endure, and, in her secret trouble, she applied to a relative, not daring to disclose her situation to her injured and much loved husband. Through this relative the husband found her, and, notwithstanding her moral and physical contamination, he took her again to his heart, a shame-stricken but wiser wife and mother."

"The Berlin Heights free lovers are also blank atheists. They deny the existence of a personal deity, which is equivalent to the denial of any God at all, and the Age of Freedom, that we have before us, contains the following shocking and blasphemous language:—

'What a horrible phantom, what a soul-crushing superstition is this idea of an over-ruling, omnipresent, all powerful God—ever watching for opportunities to 'show his authority,' and torment with fear or pain the miserable victims of his hateful power. Belief in a God is degrading, whatever the character ascribed to him. No man can be truly MANLY who 'looks up' to a 'master' by whom he 'lives, moves, and his being.' How can I look up as a man, if I have not a right to be and do? If there is a God, I live and act by sufferance—I enjoy whatever privileges he sees fit to grant, but can claim no rights. Rights cannot be conferred. They are immutable, and cannot be taken away. Then where is your God? I can stand up and look him in the face, and affirm that I have a right to 'life, liberty and happiness,' whether it is his pleasure that I shall enjoy them or not. It is perfectly plain, then, that his godhood or my manhood must succumb! If I can beat him at even one point he is no God. But if I can 'make a case' once, I can a thousand times—in the case of every single right, and if I maintain my manhood in spite of him, so may every other human being, and so the God is nowhere—utterly routed."

Truly we are living in days like those of Noah and Lot; when it is certain that "evil men and seducers" are waxing "worse and worse." The storm clouds are gathering, and the doom of a world will soon be forever decided.—ED.

Be Particular.

When you write articles for the Crisis, and quote scripture, using quotation marks, be sure that you have it word for word, as it is in the Bible. If you leave out any words, note their omission by three or four periods; thus, ... It is always best to turn to the passage and write from the Bible instead of memory. BE PARTICULAR.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

As this is to be our general meeting, we hope to see a general gathering. This meeting is nine miles east of Springfield, Mass., on the Western R. R., about ninety-one miles from Boston, and one hundred and nine from Albany.

Each church will find it pleasant to have a tent of their own. Make it large enough to accommodate your neighbor, and ask him to come. We wish to make another effort for the salvation of the unconverted.

Each family in a church can put in a piece, or part of a piece of cloth, and use it for domestic purposes after the close of the meeting, if they do not wish to keep it in the tent.

We would earnestly recommend all to make their tents double, and then they can keep their things dry during a shower. If possible, every individual that comes should bring a quilt and a pillow; or a pillow case, and fill it with straw on the ground. Put in one or two towels, and also a piece of soap. Each tent needs a pail, wash basin, nails, hammer, hatchet, cord, and perhaps a looking glass, &c. Bring your over coats, winter shawls, over shoes, and umbrellas. Wear plain clothing, and let the "adorning . . . be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of GOD, of great price." 1 Pet. 3: 3–4.

In the meantime, permit us to recommend all who purpose to come to campmeeting, to read attentively the two articles recently published in the Crisis, giving advice to those who may come up to this feast of tabernacles.

Heb. 2: 16.

Brethren are requested to notice that the words "him the nature of" in this passage are in italics; there being no corresponding Greek words in the original. I understand the true import of the passage to be, "For verily he took not" hold of "angels," i. e., fallen angels to save them; but he took "hold of the seed of Abraham" to save them. "Wherefore in all things it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren;" &c.

HENRY GREW.

From Br. and Sr. Mansfield.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—For the benefit of those who love the cause of our blessed Lord and Master, we will say a few words to let them know how it is prospering in this section. During the winter and spring about 60 have been added to the church in this place; others are interested in the glorious hope of seeing Jesus at the restitution of all things promised by the prophets. At Dayton we have held some 6 or 8 meetings as they have come in their turn once a month. Three weeks ago, at this place, we set the church in order according to Apostolic order, numbering eleven baptized ones. Others no doubt will take hold with them as soon as an opportunity presents. They feel determined to sustain preaching once a month. We see no reason why the cause will not prosper in the hands of those who are willing to do all they can for it.

We have just now returned from a tour at Pine Creek and South Bend, Ind. At Pine Creek we have preached once before. Six were baptized, and quite an interest was manifest. At this time we set in order the church, numbering 22. One was baptized. Quite an interest. For the benefit of those who are learning the truth we have appointed a grove meeting, to commence the 12th of August. At that time we expect others will be baptized and show themselves to be wholly on the Lord's side.

At South Bend we labored several days to the joy and comfort of the scattered few. Here is a church, but out of order. We expect at our next appointment that they will be ready for gospel order; then we think they will surely prosper, as a door is already open to do good.

Besides these, many other places we could name are open, and the people want to hear the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. How important that every church of five persons or more should be in gospel order, with their Elder, or Deacon, or both, if the cause demand it; and attend strictly to prayers and breaking of bread in remembrance of our Lord Jesus Christ till he come. Who is there among us that can see the board spread with the emblems of our Lord's broken body and spilt blood without having his mind carried back to Calvary, where our Lord suffered for us, [illegible] power and great glory? What could our Lord have left on record for us to attend to (dying words) that would have proved more effectual in solemnizing our minds, purifying and sanctifying us for the great and last trial than these words,—"As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come?"

O, ye saints of the Most High, do not neglect these things. To obey is better than sacrifice; and the weak, by a strict attention to these things, may be made strong. Then let us, as ministers and elders, do our duty, in setting forth these things in the light that shines from God's revelation, to save the flock and ourselves too in the kingdom of Jesus Christ upon earth. Amen.

Martin Luther

ON THE NEW EARTH, THE LORD'S ADVENT AND THE RESURRECTION.

From Luther's Table Talk, translated by Hazlitt, London edition, I copy the following:—

"On Easter Sunday, 1544, Luther made an excellent sermon on the resurrection of the dead out of the Epistle appointed for that day, handling this sentence, 'Thou fool, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die.' When Abraham intended to sacrifice his son he believed that God out of the ashes would raise him again, and make him a father of children. The faith of Adam and Eve preserved them because they believed in the promised seed. For to him that believeth everything is possible. The conception and birth of every human creature proceeding out of a drop of blood is no less a miracle and wonderful work of God than that Adam was made out of a clod of earth, and Eve out of a fleshy rib. The world is full of such works of wonder, but we are blind and cannot see them. The whole world is not able to create one member, no, not so much as a small leaf. The manner of the resurrection consists in three words, 'Arise, come, stand up, appear, rejoice ye that dwell in the dust of the earth!' I shall arise again and shall speak with you: this finger wherewith I point must come to me again: everything must come again, for it is written that God will create a new heaven and a new earth wherein righteousness shall dwell. It will be no arid waste, but a beautiful new earth where all the just shall dwell together.—There will be no carniverous beasts or venimous creatures, for all such, like ourselves, will be released from the curse of sin and will be to us as friendly as they were to Adam in Paradise.* There will be little dogs with golden hair shining like precious stones. The foliage of the trees and the verdure of the grass will have the brilliancy of the emerald, and we ourselves delivered from our mundane subjection to gross appetites and necessities, shall have the same forms as here, but infinitely more perfect. Our eyes will be radiant as the purest silver, and we shall be exempt from all sickness and tribulation. We shall behold the glorious Creator face to face; and then, what ineffable satisfaction will it be to find our relatives and friends among the just! If we were all one here we should have peace among ourselves, but God orders it otherwise to the end we may yearn and sigh after the paternal home and become weary of this troublesome life." pp. 822–23.

"Ah, loving God, defer not thy coming. I await impatiently the day when spring shall return, when day and night shall be of equal length, and when Aurora shall be clear and bright. One day will come a thick, black cloud, out of which will issue three flashes of lightning, and a clap of thunder will be heard, and in a moment heaven and earth will be covered with confusion. The Lord be praised who has taught us to sigh and yearn after that day. In Popedom they are all afraid thereof, as is testified by their hymn, Dies irae dies illa. I hope that day is not far off: Christ says, 'At that time ye shall scarcely find faith in the earth.' If we make an account we shall find that we have the gospel now only in a corner. Asia and Africa have it not, the gospel is not preached in Europe, in Greece, Italy, Hungary, Spain, France, England, or in Poland. And this little corner, where it is, Saxony, will not hinder the coming of the last day of judgment. The predictions of the Apocalypse are accomplished already as far as the white horse. The world cannot stand long, perhaps a hundred years at the outside. When the Turk begins to decline then the last days will be at hand, for the testimony of the scripture must be verified. The loving Lord will come as the scripture says." pp. 825.

"I hope the last day will not be long delayed. The darkness grows thicker around us, and godly servants of the Most High become rarer and more rare. Infidelity and licentiousness are rampant thro'-out the world, and we live like pigs, like wild beasts devoid of all reason. But a voice will soon be heard 'Behold the Bridegroom cometh!' God will not be able to bear the wicked world much longer, but will come with the dreadful day and chastise the scorners of his word." p. 8.

Thus did this great man love the appearance of his Lord.

Wishing to give to Algeria and to our colonies a fresh proof of our solicitude for their interests, and to favor as much as possible the extension of their prosperity, we do hereby decree as follows:

Art. 1. There is hereby created a Ministry for Algeria and the Colonies.

Art. 2. That Ministry shall be formed for the direction of the affairs of Algeria and of those of the colonies which shall be separated from the Ministry of War and from the Ministry of Marine.

Art. 3. Our well-beloved cousin, Prince Napoleon, is charged with this Ministry.

Art. 4. Our Ministers of State, War and Marine are charged, each as far as he may be therein concerned, with the execution of the present decree, which shall come into force from the 1st of July next.

The French colonies are divided into 10 establishments: 1, Martinique; 2, Guadeloupe and its dependencies; 3, the Ile Reunion (Bourbon); 4, Mayotta and dependencies; 5, French Guiana; 6, St. Pierre and Miquelon, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence; 7, Senegal; 8, the Isle of Goree and its dependencies; 9, the French establishments in India, the chief place of which is Pondicherry; 10, the French establishments in Oceania. The expenses of the colonies (not including Algeria) are set down in the budget of 1859 at 21,751,724f., and 200,000f. for the bureaux in Paris. The force employed in the service of the colonies is 4860 infantry, 1077 artillery, and 36 vessels manned by 1000 sailors.

The annual military "spectacle" in the Champ de Mars, on the Emperor's fete day, August 15th, will this year be a representation entitled "The taking of Canton by the French."

The telegraphic communication between France and Algeria is now made by four wires. Hitherto only one of four wires submerged in 1857 has been used.

A retired officer of the army of the Crimea is to be named French Consul in Liberia.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says: The affairs of Montenegro and the ticklish state of diplomatic relations between France and Turkey and Austria are considered very serious; that France had sent an ultimatum to Turkey, and if a satisfactory answer should not be returned at once, more ships would be sent to the Adriatic.

Sanguinary conflicts were of almost daily occurrence between the French and Roman soldiery of Rome.

RUSSIA.

It is said that 125,000 soldiers will assemble in the camp of Powouski, near Warsaw, at the end of August, for inspection by the Czar.

Cholera has made its appearance at St. Petersburg.

A fire had almost entirely destroyed the shipping at Helsingfors.

There is a serious dispute between Austria and Prussia in regard to the garrison at Kastadt. The cause is said to be that instead of a moderate contingent by Austria, to replace Prussian soldiers, she sent a larger force, thereby, say the Berlin papers, attempting to diminish the influence of Prussia. The newspaper controversy which this has excited rages fiercely on both sides.

TURKEY.

It is not likely that the Turks will make an attack on Montenegro, but highly probable that they will completely invest it on three sides. Should they do so, and should the Austrians think fit to imitate their example on the Cattaro side, the Montenegrins will be starved into submission.

Omar Pasha is to be recalled from Bagdad, to take the command of all the Turkish forces in Bosnia, [illegible] Herzegowina, and Albania. He will have very extended powers, and be supported by further reinforcements.

INDIA.

The Calcutta correspondent of the London Times, writing May 18, says:

"The insurrection has assumed a new phase, which, if less dangerous to the empire, is most embarrassing to newspaper correspondents. There is no longer a war in the En- [illegible] which the mind can rest as the one from which results, and consequently intelligence, are to be expected. Instead of one great campaign, there are six little campaigns all going on at once, each attended with small successes and petty reverses, and each tending in some infinitesimal degree to the main object—the pacification of the country."

ITALY.

The contract for the loan of 40,000 francs to Turin was taken by the Rothschilds of Paris and the Commercial Bank of Turin.

The Times City Article says: Just at the close of business, Friday, a report circulated that the laying of the Atlantic cable was nearly completed, and shares advanced from £500 to a nominal quotation of £600 to £800. An important private meeting of the shareholders of the Illinois Central Railroad was held on Friday. A committee of ten was appointed, one of whom will probably be dispatched in a week to New York, to co-operate with the American Directors. Among other changes, it is recommended that a resident English Director shall be appointed.

Domestic News.

FROM THE ARMY IN THE WEST.

St. Louis, July 16.—Letters from Fort Kearney of June 30, say that Gen. Harney's headquarters had been encamped there six days, in expectation of the arrival of the new instructions from the War Department.

A teamster had been tried and acquitted on the charge of inciting his companion to rob Capt. Hancock of $50,000, under his charge for meeting incidental expenses.

Cols. May and Morrison had passed Fort Kearney. The latter gave Gen. Harney his first salute as Brigadier General. A postscript to the letter says, that "an express has arrived, but brings no advices from Washington. We shall resume the march to morrow."

The Independence mail, with dates of the 15th ult., from Santa Fe, has arrived. The news is unimportant.

A difficulty had occurred, growing out of the persistence of the Indians in driving cattle and horses upon the hay ground known as Ewell Camp, near Fort Defiance. Major Brooks had been obliged to send a company of soldiers to drive the herds off and protect the grounds from encroachments. Several cattle and ponies were killed by the soldiers, and a skirmish occurred between the troops and Indians, but none of either party were killed or wounded.

We have dispatches from Leavenworth to the 13th inst, per United States express to Booneville, saying that an express arrived there to-day from Gen. Harney, who was, on the 6th inst., encamped seventy-five miles beyond Fort Kearney. Col. Monroe's column was beyond the South Fork of the Platte, and Col. May was a short distance in the rear. The head quarters were well, and all the column were in splendid condition.
